The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which he sends to the desk and asks to have read, and asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original resolution. Is there objection to reading the substitute instead of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 795.

House resolution No. 795.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, through the Bureau of Corporations, be, and is hereby, requested to investigate the causes of the fluctuations in the price of cotton and the difference in the market price of the various classes of cotton, and said investigation shall be conducted with the particular object of ascertaining whether or not said fluctuations in the prices have resulted in whole or in part from the character of contracts and deliveries thereon made on the cotton exchanges dealing in futures or is the result of any combinations or conspiracy which interferes or hinders commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present considera-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending a statement.

Mr. MANN. What is the title of the resolution?
Mr. BURLESON. It is a resolution directing the Department of Commerce and Labor, through the Bureau of Corporations, to investigate the causes of the fluctuations in the price of cotton, and it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. Mr. LOVERING. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will state to the House what this resolution is. It is simply a resolution having for its purpose an investigation through the Bureau of Corporations of the operations on the cotton exchanges of the country with a view of ascertaining whether the operations on these exchanges exert any influence on the fluctuations in the market price of cotton, and with a special purpose of ascertaining whether these fluctuations are occasioned by the character of contracts and deliveries made by the members of these cotton exchanges. For many years many producers of cotton have contended that the practices of the cotton exchanges which deal in futures, and especially the New York Cotton Exchange, have exerted a depress-ing influence on the market price of cotton. The fact that frequently the price of spot cotton in New York is from $7 to $10 per bale higher than the same grade of cotton is bringing on the cotton exchanges where futures are dealt in has tended to confirm this belief, and the purpose of this resolution is to ascertain through the means of a thorough investigation whether there is any substantial basis for this belief. Undoubtedly violent fluctuations have occurred in the price of cotton on these exchanges, fluctuations so violent that they practically upset prices which ought to always be fixed solely by the legitimate law of supply and demand.

Mr. TAWNEY. We would like to have an investigation also with regard to fluctuations of the prices of wheat, corn, and

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will introduce a resolution to accomplish that end, I will support it. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think such a resolution ought to be introduced. I will state that this resolution as originally written by me contained two paragraphs. The committee reports the resolution with both paragraphs stricken out, and a resolution in one paragraph is reported which is in effect the first paragraph of the resolution as it was originally drawn by me, and on careful examination I believe the resolution reported covers everything embraced in the resolution as I first wrote it. This report was made unanimously from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I hope it may be adopted without objection. For a long time I was in doubt as to whether transactions upon the New York Cotton Exchange and the New Orleans Cotton Exchange exerted a harmful influence upon the market price of cotton. I finally reached the conclusion that they did. A recent statement made by Mr. Atwood Violet, a member of the New York Cotton Exchange, and statements made by members of another exchange convince me of this. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lovering], a large spinner of cotton interested in mills both in the North and South, was on the subcommittee which reported this resolu-tion. The subcommittee favored this inquiry. The action of the subcommittee was reported to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and unanimous action was taken by that committee recommending the passage of this resolution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit? What is the scope of this investigation, and to what extent can it be continued? Can it be continued indefinitely?

Mr. BURLESON. Do you ask the scope of the investigation or the length of time it will take to make it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I mean the investigation. Mr. BURLESON. It will take but a short time to conduct it and but little money. I hope the investigation will be concluded before Congress adjourns, and I think it will take but a small amount of money to pay all expense incident to the investiga-The purpose and the scope of the investigation is to investigate the character of contracts upon the New York Cotton Exchange and New Orleans Cotton Exchange with a view of determining what influence those contracts and the deliveries made under them or offered to be made exert upon the market price of cotton; whether or not they exert a hurtful influence; whether they bring about an unnatural depression in the price of cotton sold as futures on the exchange, and whether these practices affect the legitimate price, which should only be controlled by the law of supply and demand. I can see no legitimate objection that can possibly be made to this resolution. I ask for a vote on the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this resolution provide for an investigation of the association in the South that meets weekly or at other times and attempts to fix the price of cotton and determines the amount of cotton that shall be produced each

Mr. BURLESON. It provides for an investigation of both the New Orleans and the New York cotton exchanges. These are the only exchanges in this country which deal in futures to any extent, I will state to the gentleman, and there is no dis-crimination against either one. They are both embraced within the scope of this resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood there was some association of cotton growers or planters which determines the area to be planted and which meets very frequently and determines the price and whether they shall-

Mr. MANN. And whether the sun shall shine or not and a few other things

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that included in this?

Mr. BURLESON. No; the resolution directs an investigation only of cotton exchanges dealing in futures.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do you believe this investigation should include the investigation of that association that attempts to control the output or price?

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will indicate what association he has in mind I might be able to give him some informa-This resolution attempts to deal only with those cotton exchanges that deal in futures. As a matter of fact, I can state to the gentleman that there are only three cotton exchanges in the world which deal in futures to any extent—one at Liverpool, one in New York, and one in New Orleans.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe the exchange that deals in futures is more detrimental to the country or people than associations of planters which are organized for the express purpose of keeping up the price and restricting the production.

think one is as equally detrimental as the other.

Mr. BURLESON. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from New York must know that the production of cotton always keeps pace with the necessities of the commercial world. In fact, there has frequently been an overproduction, to the great hurt of the

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman knows the cotton planters of the South come together and, as I have been informed, attempt to ostracise the men who do not agree to restrict the area to be planted in cotton. My recollection is that some part of the crop has been burned at times in order to keep it off the market. I may be misinformed as to the reported burning of the crop.

Mr. BURLESON. In reply to that statement-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one moment-Mr. MANN. That cotton was sunburned.

Mr. BURLESON. In reply to the gentleman from New York, want to state that at no time in the South has there ever been as many as two bales of cotton burned in order to reduce the supply. If he will stop to think for just a moment, he will understand there is little basis for the statement he has made. Of course, you are aware that there are 5,000,000 of people engaged in the production of cotton in the South, and to talk about restricting the production of cotton by an agreement entered into between all of them is rank nonsense. gentleman will readily recognize the great difficulty there would be to bring 5,000,000 different people into a combination for that purpose or any other purpose. One can readily see how futile it would be to attempt it. I wish these cotton producers could effect an organization for their own protection. As I have said, many of them believe, and I will state that I am among the number, that low-grade cotton is accumulated in New York and is held there in the hands of members of the exchange for the purpose of depressing the market price of this great staple.

I hold in my hand a certificate showing the amount of cotton held in New York by the members of the exchange on January 10 of this year. It is for 115,697 bales and is of thirty different grades, and of all this lot of cotton there were only 2,955 bales which were classed, according to their own showing, as middling and above middling. Now, when one considers that all contracts are based on middling and that under these contracts a delivery can be made of any of these thirty grades by paying the difference in grades, you can understand how the price can be depressed. It is depressed. The danger of having this lowgrade cotton delivered to a purchaser is such that everyone knows that no spinner, no consumer of cotton, ever goes to this so-called "exchange" to make a purchase. I will insert this certificate in the RECORD:

JOHN TANNOR,

Chairman Warehouse and Delivery Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I only wish the cotton producers of the South could combine so they could protect themselves against such practices. I fear, though, their numbers are so great it can not be done. In fact, there never has been and there never can be an effective organization of the producers of cotton, and every man that knows anything about the scope of country covered by the cotton area knows that this statement is literally true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have a distinct recollection of public meetings held in the South by cotton planters representing different areas, and an agreement was reached as to the number of acres that should be planted, so as to make it impossible to have a large, or, as it might be termed, an "excessive" supply. The result would be to prevent the price dropping. I know that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] is better informed regarding those meetings than I am.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not gainsay the proposition that the effort has repeatedly been made, but I regret to say it always or nearly always results in an increased acreage. There has been, as far as that is concerned, meetings of farmers for the advancement of their own interest, and we have attempted to prevent overproduction, just as there are associations of cotton spinners who meet for a like purpose. The course is, in a manner, a perfectly natural one, and I have no objection to it so far as I am concerned. But one can readily see the spinners can get together easier than 5,000,000 cotton farmers and their organization made more effective; but that is not the question. The question here is whether this great organization, the New York Cotton Exchange, extrts a hurtful influence upon the price of the great staple product in which 5,000,000 of people are interested. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, it is contended by many that the influence exerted by cotton exchanges dealing in futures is harmful; that it has a tendency to bring about violent fluctuations in the prices of this staple, and that, as a matter of fact, the legitimate price which it ought to bring, the price fixed by the law of supply and demand, is interfered with by the character of contracts made upon these exchanges and the alleged deliveries made thereunder.

That is the sum and substance of this whole inquiry, and for my life, viewing this either from the standpoint of the spinner or producer I can not see how any man can object to it. Of course, if anybody wants to oppose it, if one wants to stand here and defend the gambling transactions that take place in this exchange, for that is what they are, regardless of whether they exert a harmful influence on the cotton producer or the consumers of cotton, I suppose he can do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me just a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly. I always yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not opposed to the resolution. My information is that the Cotton Exchange in New York welcomes this investigation. From the information that I have regarding other associations and persons interested in maintaining the price of cotton at high levels I am sure that the gentleman will not attempt to conceal the action taken by the men who are interested largely in the production of cotton, and who have themselves been guilty, as I am informed, of as great offenses as anybody engaged in the speculation in the product. The planters or their representatives have met, and they have restricted the area that should be planted, and at times have recommended at least that part of the crop be destroyed in order to force up the price.

They are equally culpable with anybody else who by dealing in futures has accomplished the same result. The trouble with the cotton planters seems to be that they are enraged because somebody else has been able to dominate the market and fix the price.

Mr. BURLESON. In reply to the gentleman from New York, I assure him that there is no trouble whatever with the cotton producers; they only ask what is just and right; they desire to do no one wrong; they never ask any favors of their Govern-

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are they complaining about now?
Mr. BURLESON. They are complaining of acts of gross injustice that they believe are being perpetrated against their interests on the New York Cotton Exchange by its members through the character of contracts and deliveries they make there. And this resolution simply provides for an investigation to be conducted through the Bureau of Corporations to determine the one issue whether violent fluctuations and depressions in price have been brought about by the peculiar contract which is made on that exchange, under the terms of which low-grade cotton can be delivered in lieu of middling cotton, which is the basis upon which all contracts are ostensibly made.

Now, further, in response to the gentleman, I want to state that for a long time I had doubt whether these contracts for sale of futures exerted a hurtful influence on the price of cotton, but a member of the cotton exchange in New York, Mr. Atwood Violet, if the press dispatches are to be believed, recently, on the 27th day of December last, telegraphed to New Orleans to certain cotton merchants there, saying that since September 1 last there had been actually sold on the New York Cotton Exchange to domestic and foreign spinners only 10,049 bales of cotton, and that the New York market is regulated to suit a few speculators who constantly depress the price of cotton. Cotton brokers there and elsewhere have charged that the price of this great product has been depressed to the extent of millions of dollars.

I believe the New York Cotton Exchange has by the character of contract its members make, dominated the price of this staple; that they have manipulated the prices so that the cotton producers of the South have been swindled out of millions of dollars to which they were justly entitled, which they had earned with the sweat of their faces. The prices of the different grades of cotton are fixed at the beginning of the season—arbitrarily fixed by a committee of seventeen—and from that moment the market price of the various grades of cotton is given no consideration whatever. December contracts, which ought really to have been spot cotton several days before the 28th day of that month, were 150 points below middling spot prices in that market on that day. As the contract is based on middling cotton, it is readily seen how the member of the New York Cotton Exchange is enabled to manipulate the market.

If we accept as true the statement made by Mr. Violet, a member of the New York Exchange, that on December 27 last there had been actually sold only 10,049 bales of cotton for consumption by domestic and foreign spinners on said exchange since the opening of the season on September 1, then consider the further fact that before that date there had probably been sold 80,000,000 bales of cotton on future contracts, purely fictitious or gambling transactions, with no intention whatever that any portion of same should ever be actually delivered, then you can begin to understand the extent of their ability to manipulate the price of cotton. This wild speculation in cotton is hurtful; this frenzied gambling in this staple does affect its market price; it not only destroys its stability, but, in my opinion, actually depresses the price, to the farmer's great injury.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, out of the mouths of the members of this exchange we have the declaration that these practices are hurtful to the producers of cotton, and again I insist I can not understand how any fair man can object to this inquiry being made.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Under the resolution which the gentleman wishes to have adopted, would not the investigation go to the men of the South that are charged with helping in these combinations by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald], as well as the cotton combination in New York?

Mr. BURLESON. It will go to the investigation of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, if that is what the gentleman is referring to, but it extends to nothing else.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It covers them all.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I think the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, who controls the time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burle-

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston] such time as he may desire.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution pending is not, as charged by some, a fight on cotton exchanges either in New York or elsewhere, but upon their rules and methods by which or through which they interfere and obstruct interstate and foreign commerce. In other words, Mr. Speaker, when they come to honest contracts and cease to use the exchanges as a means to control prices and obstruct free, open, and honest interstate and foreign commerce, allowing supply and demand to operate freely, then our demand is complied with.

It is denied that violent and unnatural fluctuations are produced purely for the benefit of speculators, hedged about by rules made for the benefit of speciments, neaged about by rules made for the purpose of forcing prices either up or down, as the interest of those engaged may demand for their gain. I need only to give one illustration to sweep away this denial. On the 28th of November last, notice day for December contracts, January options sold at 9 cents on New York Exchange, while spot cotton that day was 10.65, 165 points, or $1.65 per hundred more than options or contracts. This difference per hundred more than options or contracts. of more than $8 per bale was against the producer, and made so without any reference to supply or demand, and at the same so without any reference to supply or demand, and at the same time nearly 100 points, or $5 per bale, below options or contracts at New Orleans. On Thursday last, the last day of January, January contracts at New York Exchange sold at 9.03, while spot cotton was 11 cents, 197 points above future contracts. This difference, 9.85, can only be accounted for by the fact that under the rules of the New York Cotton Exchange one buying January contracts through that exchange could have unspinable cotton dumped upon him, and for that reason no one will be caught with contracts on their hands at the end of the month, or notice day. So, with such rules and with such practices New York Exchange has ceased to be an exchange through which one can buy contracts for future delivery.

I wish to repeat that the pending resolution does not contemplate the destruction of cotton exchanges for legitimate purposes, but to correct abuses that have been of long standing and is as much deplored by the better element of the exchanges as by anyone on the outside. This investigation is in the interest of every cotton producer and cotton spinner and relates to the marketing of the most valuable crop produced in this country. A "square deal" is all that is sought or intended by this investigation. This much will be expected; this much those intervestigation. ested demand.

We allege that the producers of cotton have lost millions of dollars annually by this obstruction and unfair dealing controlling the purchase and sale of this great crop. Neither the producer nor spinner of cotton can estimate cost nor profits on a given crop with such conditions as now exist in the cotton exchanges. Under the rules before mentioned the controlling exchange in this country can put the price of raw cotton up $5 per bale or $10 per bale at any time and sweep away every cent of profits to those who have sold cotton fabrics ahead, thereby forcing the spinner to buy at a price to fill orders on a rate that will be ruinous.

The controlling exchanges in this country and Liverpool can put the price of raw cotton down from $5 to $10 per bale, thus sweeping away every dollar of profits to the producer. The want of stability and violent fluctuations produced by other than natural causes has been the rule for many years, and the cause is a crime against the people, against the law of the land, and we seek the legitimate and the only way that seems to us to be equal to the occasion, to dissipate these evil practices.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I beg to call the attention of the House to an effort made ten years ago by the Senate to ferret

On April 19, 1892, the Senate passed a resolution of which the following is a copy:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain in every practical way, and report from time to time to the Senate, the present condition of agriculture in the United States and the present prices of agricultural products, and if there be any of which the prices are depressed, then the causes of such depression and the remedies therefor.

Under this resolution a committee from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was submitted the resolution for a report thereon, was appointed, and in discharging the duty imposed by the resolution the committee made a report on that part of the subject which relates to cotton, to which I beg the attention of the House to several paragraphs therein contained:

THE CAUSES OF THE LOW PRICES.

Another cause has contributed to the low price. This is the enormous extent to which dealings in "futures" has attained in late years.

A great deal of very valuable testimony has been taken on this point. Whilst there is a difference between commercial men as to the effect of these dealings, yet we think the arguments advanced and the facts stated by those who oppose these dealings carry the greater weight, and are entitled to our approbation.

It will be noted that all who have spoken in favor of these dealings have finally reached the conclusion that they do not constitute real transactions or dealings in cotton itself; that in these sales, whilst they claim that both the seller and the buyer have a right to insist on exceptional cases made. It is also conceded on all hands only the consumer, and the person who undertakes to supply the consumer with the raw material, never, in any instance, buys the cotton to be consumed in "futures" dealings.

The fact that these transactions are based on a certain grade of cotton as the basis for fixing the price only, and that the seller may deliver any of about twenty-five or thirty grades and half grades, and real cotton, actually to be delivered, ever buys in these transactions. The fact, also, that in New York alone, which receives annually of actual cotton less than half a million of bales for all purposes, sales of futures take place to the amount of more than 60,000,000 bales annually conclusively shows that the party selling does not contemplate that he will be called on to make delivery.

In addition, it is shown, and it is claimed as a morit, that inferior large proportion of the actual receipts, for the express purpose of being used in making these deliveries and deterring the buyer from demanding delivery. This is confirmation, if any were needed, of the mythical and unreal character of these transactions. A considerable number of deliveries is claimed to be actually made.

At this point we call attention to a report by Mr. A. B. Shepperson on these dealings, printed with the evidence.

At this point we call attention to a report by Mr. A. B. Shepperson on these dealings, printed with the evidence in a warehouse. Each certificate is for 100 bales and is a legal tender for delivery under one of these contracts. It is negotiable and p tion, wholly a matter of internal police of the State in which they take place.

With this concession it becomes our duty, in urging remedial action by Congress, to show that their evil character is not limited to the mere immoral and industrially injurious effects of gaming, but extends to interference with interstate and foreign commerce in the great staple about which they take place.

THE POWER OF CONGRESS SHOULD BE EXERCISED.

The power of Congress should be exercise.

The power of Congress being established, the next question is as to the propriety of the exercise.

It would seem to require no argument to show the propriety of the exercise of the power, if only the result would be to restore to the people at large the free and untrammeled right of buying and selling, and thus destroy an illegal monopoly confined to the members of two corporations and to the membership of which only a few can be admitted, and these only by the selection of the corporations themselves.

But in addition to this there are certain injurious consequences arising from the dealings which affect both consumer and producer. It is not denied by the advocates of the system that these dealings sometimes raise and sometimes depress for limited periods the price of cotton, though they insist that on the whole the price must be regulated by the supply and demand. The concession even as thus qualified shows the wrong committed by the dealings. American citizens are interested on both sides of the question of prices.

It is the interest of all consumers and producers that the price should not be disturbed, even temporarily, since in this disturbance transactions at abnormal prices take place. Whatever, therefore, depresses prices artificially or raises them in the same manner injuriously interferes with and obstructs commerce to the extent of this artificial change in the laws of trade. The people of America are entitled to free and untrammeled commerce between the States and to free commerce with foreign nations, except such burdens and restrictions as may be placed on it by the power of Congress. This freedom means that there is and can be no power in any corporation, or even in any State, to institute or authorize such regulations in the transactions of this commerce as to interfere artificially with prices. That Congress may so act as to influence these prices artificially does not vitiate the argument, but strengthens it, for such action by Congress is the action of the people and of the States united, under powers conferred by the Federal Government, and necessarily assumes that it will be for the benefit of the whole, and not of sections and separate States, and of a part only of the people.

In the first place let it be noted that only in and through and under the regulations of the two cotton exchanges in New York and New Orleans can this business be transacted. The cotton exchange in New York is a corporation under the laws of that State. It is composed of less than 500 members, and the number can not be increased beyond that number. The initiation fee is $10,000, and the new members are elected by the old. No man can deal directly in futures unless he is a member. The corporation has absolute power over the dealings. All disputes and controversies are settled by a court established by the corporation itself, in what is called "arbitration proceedings." Neither party is allowed to call in a Federal or State court. It fixes the grades of all cotton, designates the warehouses in which it shall be stored, fixes the fees and charges for storage, weighing, and all other work done in relation to cotton. It fixes the quotations of prices which are to be published to the world, and these quotations are thus fixed under its rules for months for which there were no actual sales.

It and its members have such wealth that it is claimed, in a published letter of one of the principal members made in response to arguments made on the floor of this body, that the exchange can absolutely dominate and fix prices, as against all others, by flooding the market with offers of an unlimited supply of futures when at other places prices are, in its opinion, too high, and thus break the market; and, on the other hand, when it deems prices too low at other places, may immediately buy all that can be offered.

The New Orleans Cotton Exchange, though located in the largest spot-cotton market this side of the Atlantic, is a mere annex to and a subordinate of the New York Cotton Exchange, and so need not be described further than by saying if it had the will to do good it has not the power.

described further than by saying if it had the will to do good it has not the power.

Such are the agencies and the localities of these dealings, and they are the sole agencies and places for transacting this business.

We conclude, therefore, this part of our report by stating our conviction to be that whilst these dealings in futures can not for any long period control absolutely the price of cotton independent of the supply and demand, yet they clearly sometimes abnormally produce low prices as well as high prices, as is admitted by their advocates, for a temporary period. But generally they depress, to a considerable extent, prices; and that Congress not only has the power to abolish them, but is in duty bound to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the cotton producers for thirty years have been struggling for a square deal in marketing of cotton and cotton fabrics, and have been handicapped in their efforts by the obstruction, interference, and manipulation on the part of the cotton exchanges.

We have begged for relief and our appeals were treated with slient contempt. We threatened and were laughed at recently when we appealed to one of the great Departments for relief. We were threatened with suit for libel and imprisonment. Now. Mr. Speaker, we are in the house of our fathers and appeal to you gentlemen to adopt the resolution under consideration. will prove to be a starter at least and we believe will be effective in causing the cottom exchanges to give us a square deal. I see from the morning Post that the president of the New Cotton Exchange welcomes the investigation. Certainly, then, the House should give a unanimous vote for the pending resolu-

Mr. BURLESON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana. Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, without discussing the merits of the proposition to investigate the cotton exchanges of the country, as a representative of a city embracing the New Or-leans Cotton Exchange I offer no objection. I beg leave to read a message just received from the president of that institution, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 4, 1907.

Hon. Adolph Meyer,

Member of Congress from Louisiana, Washington, D. C.:

Thanks for telegram. New Orleans Cotton Exchange has nothing to fear from any investigation; in fact, rather welcomes one.

WM. Mason Smith, President.

Mr. Speaker, from my knowledge of the membership of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange and the methods prevailing there, I am not surprised at their readiness to meet any investigation.

No higher standard of commercial honor and integrity exists in any mart of trade. The interests of the producer and consumer and of all necessary intermediaries are carefully guarded by the rules of the exchange.

It can not but prove to the advantage of all concerned to have developed, as an investigation assuredly will, that the New Orleans institution has benefited the farmer and expedited commerce in the most favorable manner.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is a most remarkable solution. The complaint heretofore has been that combinaresolution. tions have been to increase the price of necessaries. Legislation has been aimed at combinations endeavoring improperly to raise prices. This complaint seems to be based upon the fact that certain exchanges, cotton exchanges, have so conducted their affairs that they have decreased the price of cotton to the consumer. If the cotton exchanges have been so conducted as to cheapen the price of cotton to consumers, they have been doing an important work for which they have never been given credit. I am not opposed to this resolution providing for an investigation of these exchanges. Since the investigation is to be had, however, I believe it should be complete, covering not only the cotton exchanges, but the Southern Cotton Growers' Association, the chief purpose of which seems to be to restrict the acreage to be pianted in cotton, and the National Ginners' Association, which is engaged in collecting information regarding the cotton crop and publishing estimates of its probable size, and which estimates almost invariably are below the estimates of the Census Office. I do not say that these associations are engaged in improper efforts to force higher the price of cotton. I only suggest the wisdom of including them in any investigation that is ordered.

In my opinion, men who organize to restrict the production of cotton or to restrict the number of acres to be planted in cotton or prevail on the producers of cotton to destroy part of the cropand a number of resolutions have been passed within the last two or three years recommending that a certain percentage of the crop be burned-are equally culpable with others engaged in the practices complained of by those urging this resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman specify where that was, where any requests were made by cotton associations that any part of the crop should be burned?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if it were not to be burned— Mr. BARTLETT. Or to be destroyed. Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Well, it was to be withheld from sale and kept from the consumer for a couple of years. Mr. BARTLETT. Your statement can not be sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not had a chance to look up the reports, but the resolutions were designed to keep out of the market part of the cotton crop. I believe that men engaged in such operations should be the subject of the same investigation and to the same control as men engaged in operating on the exchanges. I believe that the exchanges welcome this investigation. They have no objection to it. I think the resolution should be broadened, however, so as to get at the producers who are attempting to force up the price of a commodity that is so necessary to the entire people. I want those who desire to increase prices to be the subject of investigation. I would treat alike all engaged in an improper effort to enhance prices. tween the producer and the consumer, I am with the consumer. favor the men who desire to lower the prices.

The South has had recently a wonderful period of prosper-I rejoice at its prosperity and improving condition. It has been getting more for its cotton during the last three or four years than in many years hitherto. A taste of this desirable prosperity has made some people unreasonable, and, not being satisfied with their fair share of prosperity from increasing prices, they desire the strong arm of the Government to still further force up the price of the commodity, so important a product in the South, and the increasing price of which tends to enrich those engaged in growing cotton. So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to the Government enriching one section of the country by excessive tariffs or enriching another in any such peculiar and inappropriate way.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment broadening the scope of the resolution? Let him ask unanimous consent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to do so in the hurry of this proceeding. I wish the gentleman from Maine, with his great legal attainments and his readiness in such matters, would prepare such an amendment. I know it would result in some good.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Let me ask the gentleman question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Texas has one minute remaining.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield that to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whliams.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Firzgerald]. He evidently does not understand the resolution before the House. This is not invoking the strong arm of the Government in order to raise the price of anything. It is invoking the strong arm of the Government in order to get certain information.

I did not, however, rise for the purpose of dwelling upon that part of his address so much as upon another part. He accuses the cotton planters of the South of having a trust, because they had agreed to hold their product off the market when there was a very large crop and a surplus and the menace of low prices. Mr. Speaker, I need not call your attention, even if it is necessary to call the attention of the gentleman from New York, to the fact that this is rather an old and a scriptural process. Away back in ancient Egypt there were fat years, then there were lean years, and a man very much trusted by the Lord, one Joseph by name, advised Pharaoh to hold back the surplus of the fat years in order that the people might be saved in the lean years; in other words, to equalize the over-production of one year with the underproduction of another, and the less than reasonable price of one year with the more than reasonable price of another. It is to the interest of both the producer and the consumer of cotton to have stable prices as much as possible. It is to the interest of neither to have a very high price one year and a very low price another. It may seem at first blush that when a man gets 20 cents one year and only 5 the other, the two making 25, that he is richer than if he gets 10 cents one year and 10 the next year, making only 20 cents, but that is not true, because his 20-cent receipts in the high-price year do not go into reproductive enterprises, but are very largely wasted. Besides that, the aggregate amount obtained on the 20-cent crop is reduced by the smallness of the crop itself. My friend from New York, had he been living in those days, would have accused Pharaoh and Joseph of being a trust. [Applause.]

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for a simply inquiry by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as to whether the cotton exchanges dealing in futures has the effect to raise or depress the market price of cotton, and if the investigation is properly conducted I have no doubt whatever that it will bring to light all that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] desires to know. Any association whose purpose is to restrict the acreage of cotton planted or to underestimate the output in order to affect the price of cotton should. and no doubt will, be given the opportunity to explain its methods and operations.

The resolution as reported is drawn very broadly and is not intended to make any specific charges. I understand that the cotton exchanges welcome the investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote. The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several gentlemen, I ask that we be allowed to extend our remarks. Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LOVERING. I ask that all gentlemen who have spoken may have permission to extend their remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken may have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for the reprint of the bill (S. 976) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and in the war with Mexico.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 24757) to provide an annual appropriation for industrial education in the agricultural high schools and in city high schools and for branch agricultural experiment stations, and regulating the expenditure thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and the following order be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That for the remainder of the session the bill (H. R. 25133) to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights shall have the privilege pertaining to bills reported from committees under leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will demand a second for the purpose of getting an explanation.

Mr. CURRIER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRIER. This is an order providing that during the remainder of the session the bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Patents, known as "the copyright bill," may have the same privilege as bills reported from a committee having the right to report at any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. But I want to inquire of the gentleman if the bill contains a provision with relation to mechanical contrivances, musical instruments, etc.

Mr. CURRIER. They are not in the bill: they are cut out of it.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is designed to have this bill conflict with the criminal code bill?

Mr. CURRIER. Not at all. It is very doubtful, of course, this order should pass, whether we could get consideration.

Mr. MANN. The criminal code bill has the right of way, and Members want to know whether this order was designed to conflict with that.

Mr. CURRIER. The committee would not think of interfering with the progress of a bill which had been made privileged before this.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the order was passed.

PATENTS GRANTED TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 224, directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Congress what existing patents have been granted to officers or employees of the Government of the United States upon inventions, discoveries, or processes of manufacture or production upon articles used by the Government of the United States, and how and to what extent such patents enhance the cost or otherwise interfere with the use by the Government of articles or processes so patented.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the order was agreed to.

HUNGARIAN REFORMED FEDERATION OF AMERICA

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 24046) to incorporate the Hungarian Reformed Federation of America.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Steve Molnar, Steve Papp, Joseph Toth, all of the State of Ohio; Rev. Steve Borsos, Joseph Tomcsanyi, Rev. Alexander Kalassay, all of the State of Pennsylvania; Thomas Madarassi, of the State of Indiana; George Bandre, of the State of Connecticut, officers and members of the Hungarian Reformed Federation of America, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate of the District of Columbia under the name of "The Hungarian Reformed Federation of America." And by that name they and their successors may have and use a common seal, and may alter and change the same at pleasure, and may make by-laws and elect officers and agents, and may do business and take, receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the society.

elect officers and agents, and may do business and take, receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the society.

Sec. 2. That this corporation, composed of the individuals aforesaid and their associates, under the name and style aforesaid, is formed for the purposes, as follows: The intellectual, fraternal, and social welfare of the members; the study of American history and its institutions, and the inculcation of patriotic sentiment among its members; to charitably and fraternally, in the spirit of brotherly love, care for, aid, assist, and relieve its members in the various vicissitudes that may befall them during life, and to give them a Christian burial in death; to provide and pay benefits to suffering and needy members and to the heirs of deceased members, all according to the rules, regulations, by-laws, and constitution of the society. And in pursuance of the objects of the corporation, it may have a constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations to carry out the same, and shall have power to change and amend its constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations or amendments thereof do not conflict with the laws of the United States or of any State.

Sec. 3. That said corporation shall have the right to hold its meetings at any place within the United States as may be best suited or most advantageous to the carrying out of the purposes for which this corporation is formed.

Sec. 4. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to have an explanation of the bill, I would ask for a second.

Mr. BRICK. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if I understand this bill aright, it is to grant a Federal charter to this society.

A District of Columbia charter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do the officers reside here and is the seat of business here?

Mr. BRICK. Perhaps I had better read what the bill says on this point:

Officers and members of the Hungarian Reformed Federation of America and their successors be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate of the District of Columbia under the name of the "Hungarian Reformed Federation of America."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRICK. Yes. Mr. HEPBURN. What is the necessity for this act of incorporation being passed here? Why can not these gentlemen, if they are to operate here in the District, secure all they desire under the general incorporation laws now in force in the District?

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, the necessity, if there be any, of any of such organizations under these circumstances is that they desire branches in the various States, and that they may incorporate nationally and then have branch operations and there over the country. It is not to do ordinary business, however. It is a patriotic and fraternal organization, looking after the social, fraternal, and intellectual needs and wants of the membership, and they desire to do this by means of having branches from the central organization here instead of in-corporating in every State of the Union.

Mr. HEPBURN. The object of it is of a race or national character, is it not, and the membership will be limited to the people of a single nation?

Mr. BRICK. Yes. Let me read to the gentleman the purposes of the society.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I heard the bill read. Does the gentleman think that is a wise thing for us to do in this country—to create these different national societies?

Mr. BRICK. With the intent and purposes of this organization, I not only think it is a wise thing to do, but I think it is a very desirable thing to do. These people come to this country to make it their home. They are strangers here among us. They wish to organize for patriotic purposes, for the exalted purposes of homogeneous and loyal citizenship, for purposes of furthering the honor, progress, and development of America. They band together in these societies in the social relations of brotherly love; they associate themselves together in the splendid effort to press forward the intellectual, fraternal, and social advancement of its membership, to give aid and comfort to the needy, relief in death, and succor to the widow and orphan. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, with all the earnestness of a profound sympathy with the hopes and aspirations of these worthy people, that it is a very desirable as well as an hospitable thing to do.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not any doubt, if the gentleman will permit me, that it is a very wise thing to teach patriotic lessons and, in fact, all of those lessons that are provided for in this bill, but I do think that it is harmful to the general welfare to per-petuate race or national characteristics and influence in this country. I think when a man comes here he should come here to be an American, and I think there is no reason for thus trying in any way to segregate by incorporations the Hungarians or the Germans or the Irish or anybody else. We are glad to have all come here, but when they come here to come here to be Americans and not perpetuate their national peculiarities.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I perfectly agree with the gentleman from Iowa, but the real sentiment and object of this organization is the purpose of inculcating patriotic Americanism among these people; in fact, to carry out exactly the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What committee reports this bill?

Mr. BRICK.

The Judiciary. How does the Committee on the Judiciary hap-Mr. MANN. pen to take jurisdiction of this bill to create a corporation in the District of Columbia? Usually these bills come from the District Committee.

Mr. BRICK. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I understand they have those powers. They did the same thing with reference to the German society at this session, a few weeks ago.

Mr. MANN. Here is an opportunity, if a man can not get a bill through one committee, to go to another committee. I do not charge that in this case, of course.

Mr. BRICK. That is not so in this case. I don't know that it is true in any case.

Mr. MANN. But there have been many cases here where bills have been introduced by Members, sometimes by the same Member, referred to different committees. The Member gets a favorable report from any committee that he can. It seems to me, with all due deference to the reference powers, that these bills either ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Some of them come from the District Committee and some identical bills come from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARRETT. How much property can this organization

Mr. BRICK. It does not say anything about property.

Mr. GARRETT. Doesn't it say that they can hold some prop-

Mr. BRICK. Oh, yes; I beg the gentleman's pardon.
Mr. MANN. We have been putting in bills a provision, suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], limiting the amount that can be held by such corporations to $1,000,000.

Mr. BRICK. Just a minute; I was mistaken. It provides to receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the society.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask what the gentleman's opinion is as to the declared purposes in the bill, as to the amount of property they could hold under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BRICK. It is not an ordinary business corporation; it is not a corporation whose business it will be to hold or deal in real estate. The only property that any necessity might require them to hold would be a hall or a building for the purpose of their meetings.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, this further question: Has the bill the usual provision with regard to Congress having the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act?

Mr. BRICK. Yes, sir. Section 4, "That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act."

Mr. GARRETT. I presume it is true that a majority of these incorporators, or a sufficient number of them, do not live in the District of Columbia in order to incorporate under the general laws is the reason they sought this special act. Is that true?

Mr. BRICK. The reason that this act is asked for is that it would be more convenient for them to have an act of incorporation of the District of Columbia with branches in the various States than it would be to incorporate in each State in which they desire to organize and operate.

Well, but the point I am asking about is, we Mr. GARRETT. have a general District Code here, and under the terms of this Code these eleemosynary, charitable, and patriotic organizations may organize.

Yes, sir; you are right about that. Mr. BRICK.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand that a sufficient number of these incorporators do not live here in the District—

Mr. BRICK. Some of them do not live here; I do not know how many.

Mr. GARRETT. Do all the incorporators live in the United States and are all of them citizens of the United States?

Mr. BRICK. Yes, sir; they are all citizens; some of them I know personally and some of them I do not; but they are all distinguished and eminent citizens of high standing in this country.

Mr. GARRETT. And if they lived here in the District they could organize under the general laws of the District and then organize their branch offices as they desired; so it is really the prestige they get from this incorporation that is the main thing.

Mr. BRICK. That is true; and referring to the racial character of the organization alluded to by the gentleman from Iowa, I want to say this:

They have come to us to better their condition, and I want to make them feel at home.

They are here to swell the stream of our best citizenship, numbering now over a quarter of a million souls.

They have come to make this country their permanent dwelling place, to live and abide with us in the truest and most loyal of American sentiment and patriotism.

They inhabit every State and Territory of the United States, and everywhere have they entered into the very essence of our national spirit, hope, and enterprise; and among other things, this organization is founded upon the lively behest of that desire. Why, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Members of the House, Have you read and pondered over the thrilling story of Hungary's heroic struggle, during a thousand years, for just such liberty as we possess? An accurate history of Hungarian wars and their heroes would teach even the sons and daughters of the Mayflower and the Concord the awful magnificence of a martyrdom endured by a great people for freedom.

These children of an heroic ancestry come to us with all the institutions of our civilization implanted in their hearts through twenty generations of turmoil in the pursuit of a liberty they find here.

Every Hungarian in this country can look back over the red pages of their fathers' struggles and trace with boundless pride and satisfaction a strange and startling resemblance between the Hungarian revolution and our own.

Under Kossuth, and Bem, and Klapka, and Dembinski, what did they fight for that would make them alien or strange to us?

They performed unheard of and astounding deeds with one great idea, the freedom of independence.

They alone of all Europe held aloft the blazing torch of liberty with dauntless heart and unshaken hand.

They fought with God-like valor for the freedom of the press, a constitution, a ministry, and a representative body to govern their own destinies. They fought for equality before law in all civil and religious affairs-equality of taxation, trial by jury, and local self-government.

These were the principles of the declaration of independence

Kossuth and his followers lived and died for.

Don't you believe that the children of the great Kossuth, the Washington of Hungary; of Klapka, the Wayne of the Magyar, have within their breasts and in the bounding flow of their veins the elements of our most appreciative and liberty-loving, loyal citizenship?

Gentlemen, they are here because they have learned to know, as one of us, our institutions and the American idea taught to them on mother's knee in the lives of the Washingtons, the Franklins, and the Hancocks of Hungary.

They come here, as Kossuth did, driven out by a tyranny worse than was suffered by us when revolution was conceived and the Republic born.

I compare their great names with our own, because struggle is the mother of greatness and makes us all akin.

I say it because they have been rocked roughly by the same rude and barbarous nurse, because they have been trained to hearts of oak and nerves of steel in the same strenuous war for independence, and for this reason I champion their cause.

They have my unbounded sympathy and admiration, because I believe in the cause they have so valiantly fought for, because they come to me with the same hopes and aspirations that I have myself, because I rejoice in the splendid history of their race and the genius of their sons who have enriched the world with the rarest treasures of thought.

I sympathize with and admire them because I know Josef Ectvos, the friend, intimate, and supporter of Kossuth-poet, writer, and statesman—who more than any other Hungarian influenced the course of European literature of his time because I know Madach and have read his "Tragedy of Man," the soul of which was the clarion message of his life sent out to all eternity, "struggle thou and trust"—Because I know and love Maurice Jokai, the Hungarian Shakespeare, who has filled the world with hundreds of the matchless masterpieces of his mind—and, Mr. Speaker, they have my sympathy and admiration because I know Petofi, "a fallen star in the Magyar Sea," who of all the singers of the first half of the nineteenth century brought to poetic creation an inextinguishable glow of passionate patriotism.

He lived a life of meteoric glory that has not faded, nor will it die.

He vanished like a dream in manhood's morn.

The spot where he has fallen no man knows, and the pathos of his song, the wish of his life, that when all was over flowers might be scattered where he slept, must remain forever unfulfilled.

But the bloom of his day shall through all the ages fill the earth with the perfume of his immemorial glory.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, they spring from a race of unrequited heroism; a people full of the genius that touches liberty with love and the state with serenity.

They will people the future with a proud progeny.

The sons of Petofi must, and will, glorify us through the generations-of Petofi who smote all the singing chords of that harp of a thousand strings, the Hungarian heart, with deathless strains of immortal valor.

"Upon our graves shall dawn a brighter sun,
Our children rise to bless their natal earth;
Here shall they kneel, and when our course is run
Bless the fair land that gave them a free birth.
By the great God of Hungary we swear
The yoke of slaves we will no longer bear."

Mr. Speaker, with that spirit in their blood they will surely bless the fair land that gives them a free birth.

I ask for a vote on the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes" appeared to have it. appeared to have it.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 6. So two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

REFUND OF STAMP TAXES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill with amendment found on page 2, line 23.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25187) to amend "An act to provide for refunding taxes paid upon legacies and bequests for uses of a religious, charitable, or educational character, for the encouragement of art, and so forth, under the act of June 13, 1898," and for other purposes, approved June 27, 1902.

forth, under the act of June 13, 1898," and for other purposes, approved June 27, 1902.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act to provide for refunding taxes paid upon legacies and bequests for uses of a religious, charitable, or educational character, for the encouragement of art, etc., under the act of June 13, 1898, and for other purposes, approved June 27, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That in all cases where an executor, administrator, or trustee shall have paid, or shall hereafter pay, any tax upon any legacy or distributive share of personal property under the provisions of the act approved June 13, 1898, entitled 'An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes,' and amendments thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon proper application being made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed, so much of said tax as may have been collected on contingent beneficial interests which shall not have become vested prior to July 1, 1902. And no tax shall hereafter be assessed or imposed under said act approved June 13, 1898, upon or in respect of any contingent beneficial interest which shall not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment prior to said July 1, 1902: Provided, however, That all taxes which are directed to be refunded by this act, or which have been collected contrary to the terms thereof, shall be refunded out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, any statute of limitations or lack of protest to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund the sums paid for documentary stamps used on export ships' manifests, such stamps representing taxes which were illegally assessed and collected, and a sum not exceeding $125,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated for said purpose, said refund to be made whether said stamp duties were paid under protest or not, and without being subject to any statute of limitations.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order to get an explanation I demand a second, and ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a sec ond and asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill reported unanimously from the Committee on Ways and Means. At the time of the Spanish war, as the House will recollect, a war-revenue bill was passed, and amongst other things that bill imposed a tax upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property. Under the operation of that law the Treasury Department held the tax collectible upon legacies not yet in possession or enjoyment, but contingent in their nature. Subsequent to that time the Supreme Court of the United States held that the ruling of the Treasury Department was erroneous; that such taxes were not properly leviable under the act of Congress. Congress in 1902 passed an act repealing the war-revenue taxes, and subsequent to that time—two or three months after—passed another act ordering a refund of all those taxes that had been held to be not within the purview of the original act. Those taxes would then, under the legislation then had, have been paid as of course; and so the Treasury Department held; but the Comptroller of the Treasury held that an act passed some thirty years ago, in 1872, imposed a statute of limitation of two years, and that consequently the taxes paid more than two years before could not be refunded. Now, it is perfectly apparent that the Comptroller of the Treasury was in error in holding this act applicable, and a number of reasons are set out in the report for my so declaring; but aside from that, the district court of the United States for a Federal district in Massachusetts has passed directly upon the question and held this old statute of limitations not to be applicable.

Now, the proposal of this bill is to carry out the intention of Congress when it passed the refunding act, notwithstanding the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury; to get past the Comptroller, in other words.

Now, then, the second section relates to tax upon ships' mani-In the war-revenue act a tax was imposed upon bills of lading and, in the same paragraph, upon manifests. Now, the Supreme Court of the United States held in the case of Fairbanks v. The United States that the tax on foreign bills of lading was unconstitutional, for the reason that the tax was not upon the instrument itself, but upon the exports, and, consequently, Congress, in this refunding act to which I have already called attention, ordered the refund of the tax upon bills of lading, and they are being paid from time to time. But the same act that imposed the tax upon the bills of lading imposed a like tax upon the manifest, and the Supreme Court held that the manifests upon cargoes for export were in pre-cisely the same situation as the bills of lading for export; in other words, that in both cases the act was unconstitutional. And some of these have been refunded and others have been refused refundment because they were not paid under protest. The object of this bill, in the second section, is to carry into effect the real intent of the refunding act that related only to bills of lading, but ought also to have related to manifests.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. The bill simply provides for the payment of these moneys that were collected contrary to what should have been the law under the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. DALZELL. Exactly.
Mr. MANN. They are to be collected simply upon proper application under the rules and regulations?
Mr. DALZELL. By the Treasury; yes, sir.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As to the refund of taxes upon charitable bequests, is a refund to be made of all payments or on only those made in protest?

Mr. DALZELL. All payments. That brings into view another peculiarity of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The refunding act covers three different subjects: First, taxes on religious and charitable bequests; section 2, taxes paid upon bills of lading, and section 3, to taxes paid upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property. The Comptroller of the Treasury held that this statute of limitations that he dug up did not apply to section 1 or section 2, but did apply to section 3.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there were some instances where in the same estate protest was made against this fact and not on the other. The one could get it back—

Mr. DALZELL. And the other not. Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALDO. Does this bill apply to some two or three hundred claims for the refund of collateral inheritance tax?

Mr. DALZELL. Collateral inheritance tax? I believe they would be in some cases collateral inheritance taxes. They are taxes on legacies and distributive shares of personal property. Under the original law the tax was measured by the relationship of the party to the decedent.

Mr. WALDO. Does that affect other cases of collection of revenues that have been made voluntarily and without protest, or only these two cases that the gentleman mentions?

Mr. DALZELL. Only these two cases, legacies and distributive shares of personalty and manifests on cargoes for foreign

Mr. WALDO. Is there any reason why money that is paid as revenue in these two cases, where it has been paid voluntarily and without protest, should be paid back any more than an ordinary case of customs duty? There are many of those now pending

Mr. DALZELL. The best reason in the world why they should be paid back is that Congress has said so.

Mr. WALDO. But they have forfeited any right they had by not taking the course that was prescribed by Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. Congress had no idea when the refunding act was passed that this old statute, thirty years old, relating to an entirely different subject, would be made to do service in connection with this bill. This legislation is nothing more or less than legislation carrying out the original intention of Congress when it passed the refunding act.

Mr. WALDO. Was there not a limitation of time as to when these claims must be presented?

Mr. DALZELL. There was not.
Mr. WALDO. None at all? Then the two years' limitation was the one that was in the original act, some thirty years before?

Mr. DALZELL. That is it, exactly.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

PERKINS. The courts have decided, under the inheritance-tax law, that where a man died prior to the repeal of the act, but one year had not expired until after the repeal of the act, the taxes which were paid in a number of cases were illegally paid. In these cases also the question has arisen whether persons who had not paid under protest and had allowed the two years to pass by could be allowed to ask for a refund. Again, certain actions upon that were brought within the two years, and a large number of other claims were those of people who allowed the two years to expire without bringing action. Now, will these all be affected by the provisions of this

Mr. DALZELL. This bill makes all taxes that are refundable under this particular law refundable without limitation as to time.

Mr. PERKINS. Would it cover the cases to which I have referred?

Mr. DALZELL. I presume it would, because the act which ordered the refund was passed more than two years after the repeal of the war-revenue act, and therefore if the Comptroller of the Treasury were right in holding as he did, then there were certain claims that were refunded and there were others that were equally meritorious that could not be refunded. it is evident that Congress had no such intention in mind.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to oppose the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. But I would like to say this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania would seem to throw some odium on the Comptroller

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, not at all.
Mr. MANN. I had occasion to go over this matter some time ago, and I am satisfied that the Comptroller decided the only way he could decide under the law. When the committee brought in the bill for the refund, those gentlemen not having been here thirty years ago, it was very easy to overlook the law of thirty years ago; but the Comptroller, whose duty it is to know the law, did find the law of thirty years ago, and held that it applied.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think that the committee did overlook anything. The committee stated in the plainest terms it was possible to use "that in all cases." It did not say in "all cases where the claim had been filed within two years," or "where it was subject to the existing statute of limitation," but "in all cases" where the taxes were paid under this particular act. Now, to have construed it in the way the Comptroller did would have been to cut out all those claims where payments had been made more than two years prior to the passage of the refunding In other words, Congress in this last act would have created two classes of claims, making some payable to people who come in on time and refusing payment to others because they did not.

Mr. MANN. That is always the case in a statute of limitation.

Mr. DALZELL. There was no intention on the part of Congress to legislate in that way, because it would have been doing a yain thing.

Mr. MANN. The Comptroller can only decide the intention of Congress by the legislation he finds on the statute books. Now, the House passed a lot of claim bills the other day. the claims allowed by those bills will not be paid, because last session we passed an act providing that no claim should be paid unless a specific appropriation was made in the bill. We passed a number of claim bills the other day providing that the claims should be paid, but there was no provision for appropriation in some of them; and although these bills may become laws, the people will not get their money until they come before Congress again. Now, you say the assumption is that the Comptroller would decide that Congress would not do an idle act. But that is not an assumption that any executive officer has the right to conclude, because that would be a most violent assumption.

Mr. DALZEILL. I do not mean to criticise harshly the decision of the Comptroller. I have no doubt—in fact, I am quite satisfied—that he felt he was right at the time, though I think it is very apparent, in going over the legislation, that he was not right, because among other reasons the statute of limitation act which he applied put the power in the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pass upon the cases, whereas in the act that the committee passed the whole thing was placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, making him the administrative officer and not the Commissioner of Internal

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the aggregate amount of the claims?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know what the aggregate is. The Secretary has not been able to state exactly what the aggregate

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not approximately?

Mr. DALZELL. Six or seven hundred thousand dollars.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman's committee reported another bill some time ago which was passed, containing a limitation in reference to the payment for revenue stamps. Now, would the gentleman want to discriminate between one class and another, treating arbitrarily as to a matter of time one man who comes up and exchanges stamps for money this day and the next day. What is the distinction between that case and this? Why is not the gentleman willing now to allow a provision to be made so that a man who bought revenue stamps and did not use them should receive the money back

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think Congress wants to pass a bill of that kind. It is too sweeping in its character.

Mr. MANN. Sell revenue stamps to people and then make them keep the stamps and not use them and not take them back? The gentleman's committee passed a bill refunding the money, but with a limitation of time.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman's committee may possibly have been inconsistent. It is not infallible; but that scarcely answers the objection.

With that admission on the part of that com-Mr. MANN. mittee, I am perfectly satisfied. I thought it was infallible. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I am sorry we do not come up to the gentleman's high expectation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 25032) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1902.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.
Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks the United States Government would have the right to take from any party of hunters that might be found in that country, or prospectors, their goods and chattels, guns, and everything they have, simply because they were found to be in possession of some game? Suppose they were prospectors, and it became necessary that they should have some game for food? Does the gentleman think it would be right for the Government to confiscate their outfits?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wish to say for the information of the gentleman that prospectors and miners are especially exempted from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are exempted? Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. And Indians also? Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

Yes; and Indians also. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then have you considered the constitutional question, looking at it from the standpoint from which a lawyer would take it up and investigate it? In addition to fining a man and imprisoning him, as you have provided for in this bill, do you think it is constitutional to confiscate his property and take it from him?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think it would be, if he was found violating the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you know any case that has gone that far?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think if a man was kill-ing game unlawfully in Alaska the Government would have the right to seize the game, and not only to fine him, but to seize the instruments that he used for the purposes of destruction. I think that is a well-settled rule of law. I think that is the law in many States.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a question of order, Mr. Speaker. We want to know what this bill is about, and we can not hear any of the debate.

Mr. SULZER. I will answer the gentleman from New York and explain this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. First, I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As to whether or not it would be constitutional to confiscate the arms of persons who might be found in the possession of game that they should not have killed in that country.

Mr. SULZER. I do not think that would be unconstitutional. think the Government has the same right regarding Alaska as it has in reference to Yellowstone Park; that it has not alone the right to confiscate arms, but also to fine and imprison a man who carries arms into the country and kills game.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you think that would be comparable with the case of Alaska, where there is an immense territory, as compared with this small park, for the government of which special rules have been adopted by the

Mr. SULZER. I certainly do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In my State it is contrary to law, and a person subjects himself to fine and imprisonment if he carries a pistol. A few years ago the legislature enacted a provision that in addition to the fine and imprisonment the man should forfeit the pistol found upon his person. That provision was held to be unconstitutional by the highest court in my State, and I believe the same rule of law has been held in other States. It seems to me that the two cases would be on all fours, and I do not believe the Government has any right to confiscate a man's property because he is found in the possession of certain game that he should not have.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman first inform the House in what way this amends the existing law, so that we may have that information before the House's

Mr. POWERS. Before the gentleman enters upon that, I would like to ask him a question about the confiscation clause. Is not there a provision for a hearing somewhere before some tribunal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly; you can not confiscate a man's property without a trial. The officer can seize it the same as a marshal can seize any property and hold it, but the case must be tried before the court at some time.

Mr. POWERS. Certainly. If not, it would be clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, replying to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that the main change of the existing law is this: It changes the seasons slightly, making a different season for the northern part of Alaska from that in the southwestern part. But the main change is that it changes the present system under the Secretary of Agriculture to a license system. Under the present law anyone can go into Alaska without paying any license or paying anything for that privilege, but he is not permitted to bring out any trophies under restrictions by the Secretary of Agriculture. The result has been that while no trophies have been brought out, it does not stop the killing. They go there and hunt without a license, without any guide, without any restrictions whatever, and this bill is an attempt to change the law in that respect, and will change it. It makes a man who wants to go into Alaska pay for a license. If he is a resident of the United States, he pays $50; if he is a resident of another country, he pays $100; if he is a resident of Alaska, he does not have to pay anything.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from Washington now, but I would like to ask some questions after he is through.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I have stated the main changes of the law.

Mr. PERKINS. There are several questions I would like to ask the gentleman

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PERKINS. In the first place, as I understand the bill, you allow the shooting of large game at any time in the year by certain persons?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Prospectors and natives. Mr. PERKINS. Any native, miner, or explorer can shoot game at any time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. When in need of food.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, they are always in need of food. Does not the gentleman think that that provision will shortly destroy all the game there to the very great injury of the people living there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not.

Mr. PERKINS. Why not?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I know something of Alaska, and I am a sincere friend of the wild game of Alaska, and in fact in all America, and I will gladly tell the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, I will give the gentleman an illus-

Mr. SULZER. It is not necessary to give me an illustration. I will tell the gentleman that the miners and prospectors and explorers in Alaska protect the wild game more than the Government, because it is their chief source of food, and they are very much opposed to the hunters coming in from the outside and shooting the game. This policy will continue, rule or no rule

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can not yield to both gentlemen at once.

Mr. SULZER. Just a word more. These prospectors and explorers and miners have got to live, and one of the chief sources of their food supply is the large game of Alaska. You can not prevent them from shooting enough to eat.

Mr. PERKINS. When the gentleman gets through taking my time I would like to state an illustration. The outsider goes up there, employs a guide, and on an average they leave $500 or $1,000 that goes to that Territory for every head that they kill, and they would not kill off the game there in ten thousand years. The game is killed off by people who go out and shoot what they want at any time; because a man can always say that he is hungry. I will give the gentleman from New York an illustration that I know to be true of the way the game is slaughtered under the present law. There was an Indian who was allowed to shoot game at any time went out and shot a big moose about 2 miles from where his camp was. Coming back he saw another and shot the second only about a mile distant from his camp, and last of all he saw a moose, the meat of which could be brought in as it was only about a quarter of a mile from his camp, and he shot the third one. Now, an outsider that goes up there and is taking a party of half a dozen would not in the time he was there kill the number of moose that was slaughtered in this one instance under the provision that allows any Indian or any native to kill a wild animal at any time, when all that he has got to say is that he needed it for food.

If the gentleman wants to preserve the game, well and good; if he does not want to preserve the game, well and good. If he does want to preserve the game, there should be a close season This talk about outsiders shooting which applies to everybody.

off the big game is mere exaggeration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] to answer the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to ask some more questions, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York desire some time?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not want time so much as I want information.

Mr. MANN. He may get information while he gets the time. I yield the gentleman from New York five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I will use the five minutes in asking ques-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa to answer the questions.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to draft the existing law for Alaska, and the feature that the gentleman in- | shall kill but two moose.

quires about was put into the existing law after thorough investigation and inquiry from people living there, who were familiar with the entire situation in the Territory. It seemed to be the universal opinion that any attempt to prevent the natives from killing whatever they needed for food or the miners from killing whatever they needed for food would be absolutely inoperative, and it was useless to attempt to legislate against a hungry miner a thousand miles from somebody else. He is going to kill what is necessary for him to eat, and therefore that provision was inserted making an exception in their favor, simply because it was believed to be utterly impossible to make a law which would have any different effect.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. LACEY. Certainly.
Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think it would be wise, because he thinks it would be difficult to enforce a reasonable provision of law, to make no provision of law, but to allow the process to go on?

Mr. LACEY. No; but I think it is wise where it is impossible to enforce a particular feature of law to insert it in the law, and this was regarded as utterly impossible of operation as against either the miners in the interior or as against the Indians

Mr. PERKINS. And for that reason the gentleman by this bill gives the express permission to any man to kill off just as much game as he wants to.

Mr. BRICK. Just one moment. He can not sell it or ship it.

All he may do is to eat it.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, he kills a moose and eats a pound of it and leaves the animal that is worth to the people of Alaska on an average a thousand dollars, which they can get out of it through guides, through licenses, through people who go there. They allow a man to shoot a thousand-dollar animal to get a single meal. I do not believe that is good policy for the people of Alaska.

Mr. LACEY. The waste by miners is infinitesimal. When a miner kills a moose, that moose in most localities is worth a dollar a pound as soon as he kills it, and he is not going to eat a pound of it and then throw the balance of it away, so that the gentleman's suggestion does not apply to the situation.

Mr. PERKINS. What does the gentleman say about the waste of the Indians?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, you can not keep an Indian from wasting anything that happens to be plentiful.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman knows the Indians slaughter game with more recklessness than any other class of people.

Mr. LACEY. No; I think the Englishman is worse, the most bloody-minded of civilized men. We had an instance which was called to our attention, where it was shown that one Englishman on one island killed 250 walruses for "sport" Mr. LACEY. No; I think the Englishman is worse.

and allowed them to lie there and rot.

Mr. PERKINS. For one Englishman that is a game hog I am sorry to say you will find a hundred Indians. I am against the game hogs of all sorts.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I will give him another instance, where a headman, a German nobleman, so called, went into Alaska and killed seventeen moose, leaving them all there except one head. What is the use of putting restrictions that we know will not be regarded? It is perfectly useless to put in the law a provision preventing a man from killing game when he is in Alaska, hungry and away from civilization. If we did have such a law, he would have a right to do it anyway, and would to protect himself.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman another question, whether his bill is consistently drawn. Suppose a man goes up there with a license. How much game can he shoot under the provisions of this law?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Quoting from memory, he can shoot two moose, two walruses, three sheep-

Mr. PERKINS. I think not. It seems to me that the gentleman's bill would allow the game hog who went from outside the State to shoot as much as he pleases, and why not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am simply telling what the bill provides. It provides he may shoot two moose in Alaska and the fixed number of other animals.

Mr. PERKINS. It says, "Each license shall be accompanied by two coupons authorizing the shipment of two moose," etc., killed under this license. Nothing is said about shooting.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There is another provision in the bill:

Mr. PERKINS. I do not see it; and I would be glad to have it pointed out.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Section 3 provides that he

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that is provided for. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Where does latitude 62 come in? It allows no shooting south of latitude 62.

Mr. MANN. It allows it, but they charge a higher price.

Mr. PERKINS. No; I do not see it allows it. Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will read it.

Mr. MANN. It allows a man to kill south of latitude 62 at a hundred and fifty dollars per.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is a different size and different kind of moose found south of latitude 62°

Mr. PERKINS. There is nothing here that shows it is a different kind of moose.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, if the law makes him pay more, it is presumed to be a different kind. Mr. PERKINS. If he goes north of latitude 62°-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentle-man that the largest moose in the world are on the Kenai Peninsula, south of latitude 62°.

Mr. PERKINS. What sort are they north of the Kenai Pen-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, they are the same kind except they are smaller and have much smaller horns.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the result of this bill would be a person on the Kenai Peninsula could only shoot or ship one moose?
Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Only shoot two moose and ship two moose.

Mr. PERKINS. I mean on the Kenai Peninsula.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But it provides either north or south he may kill two, but not both north and south of latitude 62° under the same license. If you are hunting north, the license provides for that, and if you are hunting south, the license provides for that.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me call the attention of the gentleman-I am asking for an explanation—to page 5, where it says "any person wishing to ship moose killed south of latitude 62° must first obtain a special shipping license," which is $150. If he killed on the Kenai Peninsula, what would he be able to kill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He would have to have a license, for which he paid a hundred dollars, unless he be a citizen of the United States, in which case he shall pay $50 to hunt and to bring out all kinds of game except a moose head, and if he wants to bring out a moose head he has to pay $150 more

Mr. BRICK. And he is required to have a guide?

Mr. MANN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from

Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the purposes of this bill, and the criticism I desire to make will apply to the existing law as well as to the bill. from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] said he prepared the existing law on the subject. With great deference to my friend, I beg to say it reads to me very much like it was prepared by the chief of one of the bureaus in one of the Departments in this city. It sounds very much like it was prepared by the gentleman referred to by my friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will not make that reflection upon the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I trust the gentleman will possess himself until I make my criticism. I think it is a vital one and very materially affects the validity of the whole legislation. have but little respect for some provisions of the existing law and just as little for similar provisions contained in this bill. The law as it now exists, in addition to prohibiting the killing of game under certain conditions and establishing close seasons, provides "that the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the preservation of game animals or birds, to make and publish rules and regulations prohibiting the sale of game in any locality, modifying the close season hereinbefore established, providing different close seasons for different parts of Alaska, placing further restrictions and limitations on the killing of such animals and birds in any given locality, or prohibiting entirely for a period not exceeding two years in such locality."

Is there a Member of this House that believes that Congress has the power to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority to make law, to repeal statutes, to change or abolish laws that carry with them criminal penalties? The courts, according to my recollection, have held that all legislative power is vested in Congres

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman pardon me?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. The courts have held, when Congress undertakes to vest in the head of an executive office the power to make regulations that shall have the force and effect of law, the regulations are invalid and can not be enforced.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman pardon me there just for moment? I know the gentleman is a very great lawyer, and I have a great respect for his legal ability, but I desire to say that wherever Congress has conferred power upon any of the Departments to make regulations concerning matters under the jurisdiction of that Department, the rules and the regulations of the Department make our law, and to illustrate it I simply SAY

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I insist upon my time.

Mr. SULZER. And to prove it I only say that the Department of the Interior regulates by its rules and regulations

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, if the gentleman please, I only have five minutes' time and I have some important criticisms to make on this bill, and the gentleman has had experience enough in this House to know

Mr. SULZER. I wanted him to answer a question in regard to that matter.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No one can make an intelligent criticism of a bill of this importance in five minutes and then have a speech of three or four minutes injected into the middle of it. I desire to be courteous to the gentleman, and I hope he will appreciate the situation I am in. Now, section 7 of the bill

That any person violating any of the provisions of this act or any of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture or the governor of Alaska, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit to the United States all game or birds in his possession and all guns, traps, nets, or boats used in killing or capturing said game or birds, and shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $200 or imprisonment not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

I absolutely deny the power of Congress to vest the Secretary of Agriculture or any other executive officer with authority to make rules and regulations the violation of which will impose upon a citizen the penalty of forfeiture of his property, the payment of a fine, and incarceration in the county jail.

Now, when you come to look the situation over, take the section I quoted from in the first place, after the bill has established certain closed seasons and imposed certain restrictions, it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to undo all of the work by rules and regulations, and the chances are that under exist-ing law not a single restriction imposed by Congress is regarded as operative in the Territory of Alaska to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has ex-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five min-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I say the chances are that the whole subject of protection and preservation of game in Alaska to-day is not under regulations fixed by Congress, but under rules and regulations adopted and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. Any citizen of the land may violate any rule or regulation imposed by the Secretary of Agriculture with perfect impunity. The courts have so decided. Frequently the courts have held that Congress has not power to vest in an executive officer authority to make rules and regulations, the violation of which will carry a penalty of fine, imprisonment, or political disability, as this bill carries. I think this whole business ought to go back to the committee, and have the committee take up the subject and reform the whole statute and let Congress fix the closed season, and impose the limitations and the only limitations that are to stand and carry the force and effect of law, and prescribe what penalties may be imposed for viola-tions of the law. Penalties ought not to be imposed for violations of rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. Why, gentlemen, the bill that we are spending time upon, in my judgment, is not worth a farthing if it should be enacted. It can not be enforced.

As I stated at the outset, I am in accord with the purpose of the law. I would like to see a law that will protect game in Alaska and everywhere else, but I have no patience with the constant effort to confer upon Department officers the power to make regulations governing the affairs of the people and attempting to give those regulations the power and dignity and importance of law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All the provisions the gentleman now complain of are already the law. This law will greatly restrict the power of the Secretary, and it is certainly better than the present law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I said at the outset my criticism applies to the law as much as to the bill. The present bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to abolish and repeal every single restriction; it gives him power to abolish every closed season. Under this bill he is authorized by rules and regulations to abolish every restriction upon the killing and transportation of game in Alaska. He is authorized to set up any set of rules and regulations he chooses, and the bill provides that anybody violating these regulations shall be subject to fine or imprisonment in the county fail. Does any lawyer in this House believe that those penalties can be imposed for the violation of mere Department regulations?

Now, what is the use of spending time on a bill like that? believe it will amount to anything if it is enacted. hold that the provisions which confer power on the Secretary of Agriculture to abolish closed seasons and the penal clauses which are attached are utterly void. The restrictions and closed seasons that the law undertakes to establish in this bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to abolish and establish new ones in their stead. The whole law on the subject may be in a code of regulations the Secretary of Agriculture has seen fit to impose. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRICK. I understand that the gentleman does not mean to say that the act itself would be invalid because of the Mr. BRICK. Secretary's regulations, which would have the force and effect of law and provides penalties for their violation?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It might be that the courts would consider them interdependent. It might hold them to be inseparable, and in that event the whole statute would go down.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the pending bill, if enacted into law, will make a better law than the existing law. On the other hand, if the pending bill be not enacted into law the committee will again take jurisdiction of the subject, and without any great labor on their part they can easily bring in a bill which will be more fair to the citizens of this country and much greater protection to the game of Alaska.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I see that this bill provides "that any person wishing to ship moose killed south of latitude 62 degrees must first obtain a special shipping license, for which he shall pay a fee of $150, permitting the shipment of one moose or any part thereof." It would appear that evidently it would cost $150 to get a license to ship out a moose head. I suppose the word "license" is used in the sense of "permit;" or is it intended to get revenue from the issuance of these licenses?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman from Washington will answer that question in his time in support of the bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. If it is intended merely as a permit, would it not be better to apply some other regulation, so that somebody who did not have the $300 in his pocket should have the same privilege, as a matter of pleasure, to be able to ship out a moose head, as the man who does have the $300?

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that this provision for license shall not affect the natives, miners, or explorers, so that as far as they are concerned none of the provisions of the bill apply to them, and there is no restriction upon them in the killing of game. The bill in no wise restricts the killing of game by the citizens of Alaska—by the residents of Alaska-but it proposes to require the nonresident to pay a license fee, and if you go to Alaska to-day and wish to purchase and ship out a sheep head you could not bring it down, under any conditions whatever, without paying a license fee of $50, and a resident of Alaska can ship it out of Alaska on paying a

Now, I fail to see the reason why an American citizen desiring to obtain the privilege of shipping a head of game from Alaska should have the distinction made against him by requiring him to pay $50 for the privilege, and permitting the resident of Alaska to escape with a payment of only $5. There is no restriction upon the killing of game by citizens of Alaska, I repeat, the gentleman from Washington to the contrary notwithstanding. It is true a citizen of Alaska must be licensed in order to ship game out of Alaska. We all know, there is not a gentleman within the sound of my voice but what knows, that if the game in Alaska is to be protected it will have to be protected against the people who live in Alaska; and if there is a reason, as I believe there is, for requiring the nonresident to take out a license before he kills game, then there is more reason for requiring the resident who is not a native, miner, or explorer, not covered in this billto require them to take out licenses. It seems to me that for that reason this House should recommit this bill. The purpose of my remarks has been rather to ask the attention of the committee to the fact that if the American people and the American Government desire to protect the game in Alaska, both from the nonresident and from the resident, it will not be long under this bill until the game there is killed by the people who live there unless there is some restriction placed upon them.

The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WASKEY] may think they have no "sports" in Alaska. If that be the case, my informahave no "sports" in Alaska. If that be the case, my informa-tion is entirely incorrect. I have before this heard the story how nonresidents kill the game all over the country. I have seen the prairie chickens and the quall and other game largely disappear from the part of the country from which I come, and I know that the disappearance of that game is not principally due to killing by nonresidents, but is due to the killing by residents; and to-day in nearly every State they have restrictions which apply both to the nonresident and to the resident, and that ought to be the case in Alaska.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. Have I any time remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WASKEY] four minutes, if he will give the gentleman from Ohio time enough to ask a question.

Mr. WASKEY. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] I would like to say that I believe this bill is so framed that it will protect the game in Alaska not only from the onslaughts on nonresidents, but from the residents also. This arbitrary line dividing Alaska into two sections, with different provisions for the country north of 62 degrees and the country south of 62 degrees, will protect the game. The gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension if he thinks the game north of this arbitrary line is in any danger of immediate extermination. It is not. A great portion of Alaska is of such a nature that it never will be inhabited by people who live there permanently. The great body of Alaska is bisected by two immense mountain ranges-one the Endicott Range and one the Alaskan Range. These two ranges are the natural breeding places of all these kinds of big game.

There never will be a permanent population there, and consequently game will not be exterminated. The region will never be settled up, farmed, and inclosed with fences, and there will always be plenty of room for breeding places for the game. The game of northern Alaska can not be killed off. We are just as much in favor of protecting the game there as are We believe this license any of the sportsmen on the outside. system will provide us with funds and with the machinery to enforce our game laws. There are some little things in this bill that I do not agree with, but the main thing is that we want to protect the game in Alaska, and particularly in that part of Alaska known as the Kenai Peninsula, and I believe this bill will furnish effectual means for so doing.

To the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Brick], who wishes in some way to protect the game from the depredations of Alaskan natives, I wish to say that Alaska is a country of 600,000 square miles. And in the great central portion of Alaska I do not suppose there are 1,500 natives in the whole country. They are scattered around so far apart that if every one of them were to kill a half dozen moose and caribou in a year, it would not have any effect whatever. The game in the interior is in no danger from either natives, prospectors, miners, or explorers, but on the Kenai Peninsula it is in grave danger of being slaughtered by the miners, by the prospectors, and by sports-men who come there from the United States and from European countries. The gentleman will see, if he peruses the bill carefully, that we make them all pay for killing game of the Kenai Peninsula and for shipping trophies out.

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. WASKEY.

Certainly.

Where is there any provision in the bill Mr. PERKINS. which makes a miner or explorer who shoots game on the Kenai Peninsula pay for it if he simply kills and eats it and does not ship it out?

Mr. WASKEY. On the Kenai Peninsula there are no miners or prospectors who are dependent to any great extent on game for their meat. The Kenai Peninsula is easily accessible to the outside world. Beef is shipped in there. There is a reliable to the now under construction-

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but if a miner goes there, or an explorer, why do you allow him to kill game there without a license?

Mr. WASKEY. I will tell you why. There is no need of protection from the miner there. I put in two years on the Kenai Peninsula in 1898 and 1899. For half a dozen years before going there I never missed a fall, and seldom a spring, that I did not have a hunt. In those two years on the Kenai Peninsula, although I was in the greatest game country in the world, I did not have the time to hunt; I was prospecting and mining, and when I wanted meat I went to the butcher shop, the same as anybody else does, and bought the meat that was for sale. I did not have time to do anything else.

Mr. PERKINS. But other men on the peninsula will not be governed by the same rules as is the gentleman from Alaska. Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman find anything in the bill that requires a residence to take out a license?

Mr. WASKEY. Because we are not going to do anything un-less we hunt for trophies, and they will want to ship them out-For instance, in view of the great amount of good the gentleman from Illinois has done for Alaska, I might want to make him a present of one of these magnificent moose heads.

Mr. MANN. If I wanted to bring it down here I would have to pay a large sum of money; if it was north of the Peninsula of Kenai I should have to pay $150.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Capron). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish just a moment to reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois that this bill places no restrictions on the residents of Alaska. The bill places exactly the same restrictions on the residents of Alaska that it places on nonresidents, except as to the license for hunting. It provides for the seasons of the year that he shall hunt, and the number of animals that he shall kill, and if he wants to ship out any trophies he must pay for it, not $5, as the gentleman says, because it is $5 only for a deer or a goat. If he ships out other trophies he pays more. If he ships a moose head it is $150 if it is south of the Kenai Peninsula. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the bill is correct in that respect.

I do not believe that the people who live in Alaska so long as it is no more densely populated than it is to-day-I do not believe that these people should be compelled to pay a license for the purpose of hunting. The object of this bill that I had in mind was not to prohibit the men who live in Alaska from kill-ing a reasonable amount of game, but the object in drawing this bill was to compel the head hunters to pay a license, to create a fund to be used to enforce the game laws of Alaska. Congress has never made any provision whereby the game laws of Alaska could be enforced, whereby any regulations could be made, and this law does provide for a license for head hunters, the amount they shall be compelled to pay, to be used to protect the game of that Territory.

Now, in reply to what the gentleman from Indiana has said about regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture, I objected to that portion of the bill myself; but those who are more familiar with the Territory than I, who have greater knowledge than anyone else, insist that it should be there, and inasmuch as it takes away a good deal of power from the Secretary of Agriculture, as the law now exists, I consented to it. To refer the bill back to the committee would mean that we should have no law for another year. Under these circumstances, admitting, as gentlemen do, that this bill is better than the existing law, I ask that it be passed now, and then next year, if necessary, it can be amended. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that on page 9, beginning on line 4, these words be stricken out of the bill: "Or any of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture or the governor of Alaska." That will eliminate the objectionable feature spoken of by various Members, and I believe it would be a good thing for the bill if that was eliminated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say to my friend that the judge of a United States district court in Oregon, and also a judge of the district court in Florida, has held that a criminal act can not be created by a regulation. The Attorney-General of the United States, in an official opinion, has held precisely the other way; and I believe that it can be made a criminal offense, notwithstanding the decision of these two judges the other way. Of course the question could not reach the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal, but under a law we have recently passed allowing an appeal where the defendant is discharged, that question can now reach the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate is exhausted.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, we will consent to the adoption of that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to object.

Mr. LACEY. No, Mr. Speaker. I reserved the right to object, but if the gentleman is satisfied with the amendment, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 24541) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill referred to.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is acted upon I would like to ask whether it is intended to have any general debate on this bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. Of course no agreement has been reached as to any general debate, and I take it for granted that if any gentleman desires to enter debate an opportunity will be given. Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is satisfactory.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 24541, the urgent deficiency bill

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the urgent deficiency bill came back from the Senate with various provisions covering the Jamestown Exposition project. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, who have instructed me to report back the amendment to the Senate amendment which has just been read. In order that the House may be advised of these provisions I will recapitulate them very briefly. In the first place, the fundamental propositions of the Senate are two, the first being an extension of date for the holding of this celebration. In the law passed in 1905 this celebration was to take place between

May 13, 1907, and a date not later than November 1 of that year. The Senate amendment seeks to extend both of those dates, first, by opening the celebration on April 26 and continuing the celebration to November 30. The project of this extension of date would not be a material one were it not that the Senate provision also holds that—shall apply to the participation of the United States and foreign countries in said exposition.

That is, the extended date-

Because, as I believe I will be able to prove later on, it may become necessary for the United States to take over the administration and conduct of this exposition it would appear by so extending the date we may extend the liability of the United States to conduct this exposition. The second and main proposition of the Senate amendment is that the Government should loan the exposition company at Jamestown $1,000,000, such loan to be disbursed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury; that the $1,000,000 so loaned shall become an indebtedness or practically a first lien against the gross receipts of the exposition company and that there shall be a guaranty made before the loan is made that the gross receipts are free from incumbrance. The amendment specifies the dates of repayment; that 40 per cent of the gross receipts shall be repaid on May 31, and that thereafter on the 15th and the last day of each month 40 per cent of the gross receipts, including admission and moneys taken in from concessions or any other sources connected with the exposition, but with a further provision that on and after July 15 the amount of 40 per cent shall be guaranteed to be such a sum, under the Senate provision, equal to $100,000, in order that the whole million dollars would be guaranteed to be repaid back by the date of the close of the exposition. The amendment further provides that if default should at any time take place in the repayment of the loan made on the conditions as stated therein, that the Secretary of the Treasury is then authorized to collect, receive, and control all such gross receipts until the full sum of $1,000,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury, and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall in such case first pay out of the money so collected, if default be made, such operating expenses as in his judgment and discretion are necessary and appropriate. Now, the full purport of this is simply to make a loan of a million dollars to the exposition company, and in case the exposition held should not prove a success the Secretary of the Treasury, through his agents, should manage and conduct it up to the proposed closing date of November 30.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for ten min-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may continue for ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether debate has been relegated to the five-minute rule by any order of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody asking for general debate, proceedings were opened by the gentleman from New York offering an amendment, which the Chair entertained, and, of course, thereafter debate under the five-minute rule is all that was in order.

Mr. KEIFER. But there was no limitation to the debate.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we have general debate. There are a great many Members in this House who want to be heard on this question, and I ask unanimous consent we have general debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that he ask unanimous consent, if he is going to ask any at all, for a certain time on each side.

Mr. MAYNARD. My idea was that we have an hour of general debate, with half an hour on each side. I ask unanimous consent for an hour of general debate.

Mr. MANN. Specify by whom it is to be controlled.

Mr. MAYNARD. One-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer], on the other side, and one-half by myself, on this side.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would join in that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate be had for one hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer]. Is there any objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, pending the right to object, I would like to have some assurance that I, as the chairman of the committee before whom this bill originally came, should have a reasonable time within which to express my views

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman, I will ask that it be an hour and a half—three-quarters of an hour on each side.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I can not quite understand the parliamentary situation here. Senate amendment was reported back from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, which was the amendment I offered. Is not that amendment, then, originally before the House, so that a general debate can ensue thereon?

The CHAIRMAN. When the Senate amendment was presented to the committee, general debate was in order. eral debate ensued. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Lat-TAUER] offered his amendment. The consideration of that amendment was a waiver of the general debate, and made debate under the five-minute rule in order. If, now, unanimous consent is given, there can be general debate, and that will be followed by five-minute debate in the regular order, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, can I not call the Chair's attention to the fact that the amendment that I offered was a part of the report of the Committee on Appropriations?

The CHAIRMAN. That did not so appear to the Chair, but the Senate amendment by a motion from the floor on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] to amend that amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request for unanimous consent for an hour and a half of general debate, to be divided equally between the gentleman from New York [Mr.

LITTAUER] and myself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] will make a mistake if he puts it at an hour and a half for general debate and then enter upon five-minute debate, because under that arrangement, if consent is given, the gentleman from Massachusetts or anybody else would be entitled to offer an amendment. So probably you would run so late that you would not have the bill disposed of.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I would like to know if the Chair has recognized me?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Chairman, I. object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] to ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for one hour and a half, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] and the other half by the gentleman from Virginia

[Mr. MAYNARD]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, unless I can be assured that I shall have time to express my views as chairman of the committee and as the first signer of the minority report, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. KEIFER. That would not cut off the five-minute debate on amendments.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the floor just at present. He is answering a parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD]?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York, by leave Mr. Chairman, I object.

of the committee, has ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the onehour limitation.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the amendment of the Senate the details of which I have just stated, made a thorough examination of the project and came to the conclusion that it was the duty of the House to hedge about this loan, if it was to be made, with proper security and safeguards. The conservative members of the board of governors of this exposition advised us that a loan of $800,000, instead of a loan of $1,000,000, would be sufficient to carry out the plan and scope of the exposition up to its opening day as they now have determined to carry it out. Therefore the amendment offered specifies $800,000 and, of course, changes the dates for the payment of parts of the loan and specifies different proportionate sums for the repayment of the loan. I now come to the proposed safeguards to the loan.

provided Congress agrees to make it.

In the original amendment the loan is to be made under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury. We declare in this amendment that not only shall be supervise, but that he shall approve the items on which the money loaned shall be expended.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When you say "original amendment," do you mean the Senate proposition?

Mr. LITTAUER. The Senate proposition. The Senate proposition then declares that the Secretary of the Treasury shall supervise the expenditure of this money. We go one step further and declare that he shall approve, and that the money shall be greated and the control of the specific approve. be spent only for the specific purposes necessary to the opening of the exposition. We now come to the consideration of the The lien that is to be given, according to the Senate provision, is simply a lien on the gross receipts of the exposition In order to safeguard the repayment, in order to get some little security, we have extended the demand so as to include in the lien the real estate, the buildings, and the appurtenances to the buildings of the exposition company, intending thereby to get every possible security that the company pos-

mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.
Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman understands that as the proposition came originally from the Senate it provided simply for a lien upon the prospective gate receipts. Am I correct?
Mr. LITTAUER. The provision was for a lien upon the gross gate receipts and upon the receipts from the contracts for concessions, which we were assured were free from mortgage or incumbrance.

Mr. BARTLETT. It would be very hard to put a mortgage upon something that is not in existence.

Mr. LITTAUER. Advances of money under similar conditions are frequently made, the lien being on future receipts.

Mr. BARTLETT. Suppose, for instance, the lien of the Government is put upon the real estate; will the gentleman be pleased to inform the House whether or not that will be a first lien or whether there are other liens on the real estate?

Mr. LITTAUER. Our amendment declares that it shall be the first lien.

Mr. BARTLETT. How could it be a first lien if there is already in existence a first lien?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not believe there is. We were informed there was not.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I wanted to find out.
Mr. LITTAUER. It would appear that the prospect of failure of the exposition was quite a likely one in the minds of the gentlemen who proposed the loan, so they determined that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in case of default of the exposition company, take over the exposition and conduct it, and that he shall take out of the gross receipts whatever amount in his discretion be necessary and appropriate for the conduct of the exposition. In the amendment I offered we go further and say that the Secretary of the Treasury will not be privileged to pay out anything more than what has come in directly from the gross receipts, and that under no circumstances shall he enter into any obligation of any kind that would make it necessary for the Government at some future day to liquidate such obligations, as became necessary in the case of the exposition held at New Orleans.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the amendment require the Secretary to carry on the exposition, whether or no?

Mr. LITTAUER. It does require that the Secretary shall carry on the exposition if default takes place.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does it require him to carry it on after default has taken place?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will read the provision to you. In case

Then and in that case the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, by his agents and representatives, by him selected and appointed, to collect, receive, and control all the said gross receipts until the full sum of said $800,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided, and shall have access to and control of all books of accounts and contracts of said company. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall in such case first pay out of the money so collected such operating expenses as in his judgment and discretion are necessary and appropriate, and at no time in excess of said gross receipts, and he shall not, under any circumstances, incur any debt or other obligation for which the Government of the United States would in any way be liable. In accepting the amount hereby appropriated the said Jamestown Exposition Company shall be taken and held to agree to all the terms and conditions upon which the same is made and upon which the same is to be repaid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But after all, it assumes that the Secretary is to go on with the enterprise.

Mr. LITTAUER. It does. There is no obligation to do so, but it nevertheless assumes that he will in case of the exposition company's default.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The distinct contemplation is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall carry it on whether he wishes to or not.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, he is authorized to earry it on.
Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose of that is to enable the Government to take advantage of all the security it can possibly have for the repayment of the loan, instead of going into court to have a receiver appointed and let it be run by a receiver. Congress, in making the loan to St. Louis, authorized the short cut to be taken by simply giving the authority for the Government to go in and take possession in the name of the Secretary of the Treasury, and this is the same thing here.

Mr. LITTAUER. If a loan is going to be made we have got to take some chances under it, and there is no question but that this contemplates the possible failure of the exposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And that the Government has got to run it.

Mr. LITTAUER. And that the Government has got to run it, and the extension of the date simply means that it has got to run it up to November 30; that the celebration must be continued, in connection with the marine celebration, up to that

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No matter what moral obligations may be incurred.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to take into consideration what has been done up to this time, first, for this celebration, and second, for the exposition. We started out in 1905 to commemorate the landing at Jamestown, the birth of the English-speaking American nation, and determined that that celebration should be an international naval, marine, and military celebration. We appropriated $250,000 and specified each item of appropriation as pertaining exactly to this naval, marine, and military exposition. We appropriated at that time $50,000 for the expenditures of the commission; $125,000 for the entertainment of guests, military and naval—one-fifth to the Army and four-fifths to the Navy.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; certainly.
Mr. TAWNEY. We gave that amount to the Tercentennial Federal Commission, not to the exposition.

Mr. LITTAUER. We gave $50,000 to the Tercentennial Commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and Secretary of the Navy, for the purposes of carrying out the international naval and marine celebration. One hunded and twenty-five thousand dollars was given for the entertainment of guests, four-fifths to the Navy and one-fifth to the Army, a sum since determined to be not more than enough to wine and dine the officers who will attend the celebration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. MADDEN. That he be allowed to continue until he completes his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may continue until he concludes his statement. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object unless there is a limitation.
Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes.
Mr. LITTAUER. I think I can conclude in five or eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman continuing for ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. My sole purpose is to give a fair understanding of this proposition in order that the House may vote intelligently on it. The $250,000 given in 1905 was specified in amounts pertaining absolutely to this naval and marine celebrations. tion. Then came the following session of Congress in 1906. Their hands were in the crib. They determined that there should be an exposition at Jamestown in connection with this celebration, and in the usual method persuaded Congress in the last sundry civil bill to make appropriation for this exposition. We started out by giving the exposition company, separate entirely from the tercentennial commission, a quarter of a million dollars for their own purposes. Then we gave $350,000 to build Government buildings. We gave them $250,000 to conduct the exhibit in the Government buildings. We gave them $15,000 for a landing pier at Jamestown island, some miles away from the We gave them $100,000 in aid of the Negro Development Exposition Company of the United States to enable it to make an exhibit of the progress of the negro race in this country. I understand that the first demand under this appropriation was for two years' back salary for the gentlemen who were to manage it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They had been getting ready to manage

[Laughter.]

Mr. LITTAUER. They claimed to have been doing much work before the appropriation was made and asked to be recompensed by a good share of the amount appropriated.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They probably had been engaged in getting the appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTAUER. I think gentlemen will find that was the fact. Then we gave them $10,000 to police this place where the monument is to be erected on Jamestown Island. Finally we gave them $400,000, and I call particular attention to this because connected with this last appropriation of $400,000 comes the second amendment of the Senate. That $400,000 was to the end that a ready communication between the ships and the shore might be had so as to convey the soldiers and the visitors from the grounds to the fleet and back again. Two piers were or-dered to be erected, and the Secretary of War was directed to contract for the erection of the piers and the dredging of the basin. Piers have been contracted for, but there is a shoal outside of the piers, and while the basin between the piers is to be such that vessels drawing 10 feet may approach them, there is a spit on the outside which has only about 5 feet of water over it, so that another appropriation is required to dredge a channel to approach the piers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. All of which was well known when the piers were contracted for.

Mr. LITTAUER. Provision was not made for this, if known, and it shows how careless they are in such matters.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman to say that it was probably known, because estimates were made and presented to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions as to the cost of dredging that, and it was $39,000?

Mr. LITTAUER. The present estimate is that it will cost $50,000 to have that dredging done outside the basin.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Perhaps some part of that is salary. Mr. LITTAUER. I take it for granted that that is not so.

Mr. JAMES. Can the gentleman from New York inform the House as to the total amount of money that has been appropriated so far for this exposition?

Mr. LITTAUER. So far $250,000, to be expended for the naval and marine celebration, and in addition to that $1,325,000 for the exposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Making a total appropriation of $1,575,000. Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; making a total appropriation of $1,575,000. Now, these gentlemen concerned in the exposition came to us last year and stated if we would agree to the budget that they then had prepared for the proposed participation by the Government and if that budget was granted, it would separate the United States entirely from further responsibility and that all the wants of the exposition would be provided for

Their present appeal is based on the statement that it is going to take $1,675,000 to open the gates of this exposition; that they have got in sight between $600,000 and $700,000, so that $1,000,-000 is necessary to be loaned or necessary to be raised by some means or other. Then they come with a very distinct statement that we led them into this thing [laughter]; that they are to act as our agents; that it is as much our celebration as theirs, and that the honor and dignity of the country require that we should make this loan in order that the exposition may be carried out in such shape as they propose and that we are to pay

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this exposition a stock company?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will describe in a moment the make-up of the exposition company. I was about to come to that, because I believe the Lord helps those who help themselves and that Congress ought not to help those who do not help themselves. These gentlemen formed a stock company with two kinds of stock. There was the common stock, $500,000 subscribed, and the conditions of the subscription were that 28 per cent common stock only would be called for on specified dates, and that 28 per cent would be used to purchase the land, and no further call would be made on the common-stock holder unless there came a default on what they called the "preferred stock." The pre-ferred stock of $500,000 is a sort of deferred bond; that is, the subscribers to it are to have 6 per cent cumulative interest. after the exposition is wound up there is not enough to pay 100 cents on the dollar back to those who held this preferred 6 per cent security, then the common-stock holders are to be assessed for the balance they owe on their subscription, if called upon by the directors, and one may imagine how much such an assessment will produce. This common stock is one of the securities offered to guarantee repayment for the loan of a million dollars

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much cash has been collected from the stockholders, preferred and common?

Mr. LITTAUER. The preferred stockholders are in large part land companies connected with this neighborhood, railroad, electric, and steam transportation companies. In addition, they have a fairly good general subscription.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much cash?

Mr. LITTAUER. Up to the 1st of January 86 per cent had been called, and 70 per cent of the 86 per cent had been paid in. The balance of the preferred was called January 1, but with what result no official seems to know.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of the preferred?

Mr. LITTAUER. Of the preferred, the 6 per cent interestbearing stock.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. About $350,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. Mr. LITTAUER. Of the common stock I am informed that 28 per cent had been called on the 1st of January, and about 70 per cent of the 28 per cent had been paid in, and that they were bringing suits to compel delinquents to pay the balance.

Mr. PAYNE. How much collected?

Mr. LITTAUER. Somewhere between $100,000 and $125,000. Mr. PAYNE. A little less than $100,000. Mr. LITTAUER. That is about it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] says that this understanding with the common-stock holders was that only 28 per cent should be paid, does he mean that that agreement appears in that prospectus which he had in his hand—that any such statement as that was made?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will read all that the prospectus states. Twenty-eight per cent was specified to be paid on certain dates, and then the balance was subject to being called for by the board of directors. Now, who are this board of directors?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to ask the gentleman whether the fact was not, as I understand it, that this was said in private to the stockholders, and that there was no statement made either in the prospectus or to the committee that they only proposed to call 28 per cent?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, that it was a confidential understanding?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is my understanding. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That it was a confidential understanding.

Mr. LITTAUER. It was so understood, and the exposition directors have persuaded themselves into the belief, and claim that having the 72 per cent still in the hands of the subscribers to the common stock was good security for the repayment of any prior liens, if money to pay them had to be raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was the $450,000 all paid in in stock? Mr. LITTAUER. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars from stockholders, preferred and common. Such as has been paid in has been paid in in cash, I am advised.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much has been paid by anybody else outside of the United States Government?

Mr. LITTAUER. The State of Virginia has given the exposition $200,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. And the city of Norfolk has built waterworks, I think, for $110,000, and built a boulevard that leads out to the exposition at a cost of $75,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is in Norfolk and for Norfolk?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is in the suburbs of Norfolk.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a permanent improvement of Norfolk?

Mr. LITTAUER.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is that all?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is all as far as I know. Of course, twenty-three States have signified their intention of putting up buildings there, and many have been begun.

Mr. Chairman, this is not going to be a great educational exposition. It is going to be an attractive spot, in connection with the marine, naval, and military celebration, which, after all, is the chief attraction of all that is going to draw the crowd together at this place. These gentlemen figure they are going to have 5,000,000 people come there; they are sure they are going to have 3,000,000. How they are ever going to get them there on the basis of the character of celebration and what they have got to show them I do not know, for, after all, the exhibits to the exposition will be largely exhibits of the United States or exhibits of those who pay for the privilege of exhibiting, and I have no doubt a large midway or a pike, or some such lot of concessions to draw the crowd.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he believes that the stockholders of this exposition company could go to New York and contract a loan of a million dollars on the security offered in this bill to the Government?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, that would be perfectly ridiculous to consider; nobody would listen to such a proposition for a moment. They have not any security worth speaking of. They have prospective security in the gross receipts-what they will amount to no one knows-and therefore the Government of the United States is asked to come in and practically pay for this whole show. I do not feel that the local people have done anything at all commensurate with what was done at St. Louis. At St. Louis the stockholders had paid in $5,000,000, the city of St. Louis had paid in $5,000,000, and the State of Missouri had given a million dollars before they came to Congress for a loan of $460,000.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. How did the fact that the State of Missouri and city of St. Louis had contributed these large sums of money add to the security of the Government?

Mr. LITTAUER. Because it placed in the exposition grounds a great international exposition, an exposition that would draw millions of people to it.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The Government security consisted in entrance fees from the gates.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and the prospects in one case were twenty-five times as great to my mind to what they are in the

Mr. JAMES. Then you think it is a matter of great doubt whether or not the Government will be reimbursed?

Mr. LITTAUER. I think everybody who has considered the matter thinks so. The Senate amendment is based on that contingency, for they provided in the amendment that the Gov-ernment of the United States shall continue the exposition, in case of default in repayments on the loan, up to the day of closing, and set the day of closing thirty days later, so as to guarantee the Government's participation to November 30.

Several Members rose.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, gentlemen, let me finish. I want to read a statement made here last December, two months ago, by Mr. Wool, one of the leading counsel, who declared this-this was on December 19, 1906:

It is possible that if this loan was not made we might be able to get along on a little less, and that we might in some way raise such an additional amount as will enable us to open the exposition; but I say to you now that it would not be done, and could not be done in such a manner as you would want to see it done, knowing that the whole world had been invited to come here and help us and participate with us in a great celebration.

This gentleman tells you that the honor and dignity of the United States is in your keeping, and unless you make ample provision to carry out the projects as he and his friends have designed to carry them out, then disgrace and humiliation is bound to come to the country. Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendments that have been suggested by the Committee on Appropriations will be accepted by this House; but I want to be plainly understood that, whether they be accepted or not accepted, it is my purpose to move to nonconcur to the entire proposition.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman, on the statement of the gentleman, will it not be much more economical to the Government to donate $800,000 with the provision that they are never to come in for anything more?

Mr. LITTAUER. I believe it might be, if the prohibition you add to it would amount to anything.

Mr. HULL. That is, they would come again.
Mr. LITTAUER. They would have the right to come, and from experience we know they will come.

Mr. TOWNE. I wish to ask the gentleman briefly to recapitulate the point of difference between the Senate amendment and that submitted by his committee.

Mr. LITTAUER. The Senate amendment would loan $1,000,000; we propose to loan $800,000. The Senate amendment would extend the date of holding the exposition; we propose not to change the date in the law as it now stands for the celebration. The Senate provision makes the loan, if made, a lien on the gross receipts

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Only?

Mr. LITTAUER. On the gross receipts only. We extend it to be a lien on the gross receipts plus the real estate, the land, the buildings and other appurtenances, and a first lien. ate provision is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall supervise the disbursements of the money; we provide that he shall not only supervise but approve the objects for which the moneys loaned are to be spent. And, lastly, that in case of default in repayment of the loan, the Senate provision is that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay the running expenses out of the gross receipts; we emphasize that by saying that he shall incur no obligations of any kind whatever that may be in the future holden against the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "act," in line 12, page 1, of the amendment, down to and including the word "seven," in line 2, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Two hundred thousand dollars during the month of February, provided that at the time of payment at least 50 per cent of the subscriptions to the common stock of this company shall have been paid into its treasury; $200,000 during the month of March, provided at the time of payment at least 65 per cent of said subscriptions shall have been so paid, and $100,000 during the month of April, 1907, provided that at the time of payment at least 75 per cent of said subscriptions shall have been so paid."

Mr. CARDNER of Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the adoption of this amendment, in conjunction with that of the gentleman from New York, would be that the commonstock holders of this company must pay up their subscriptions just as fast as the Government pays over its loan. On the passage of the bill the exposition company would get $300,000; but further payments would be conditional on further payments by the common-stock holders.

Now, I agree with every word of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUEB], although I am not certain that anyone can give a valid lien on assets which are not yet in existence-a lien, for instance, on gate receipts

I am very glad that the amendment provides for a lien on the real estate as well. The reason that the real estate has not been mortgaged already is that the common-stock holders who, by the way, alone have the votes, have held it unencumbered to protect themselves from the claims of the preferred-stock holders in case the assets of the company are insufficient. That is why no mortgage has yet been placed on the real estate.

Mr. Chairman, the representatives of the Jamestown company appeared before our committee last year and told us that were going to raise a million dollars locally. Instead. they have raised about $400,000. It is true that a million dollars has been subscribed locally, but the common stockholders do not intend to pay. The railroads, the street railways, the land companies, and the electric light companies, all holders of preferred stock, have paid up, because they are secured.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] is correct, they have paid up 70 per cent only.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from New York is correct and the gentleman from Maine is mistaken. The preferred stockholders have almost entirely paid up, but only 28 per cent of the common stock has been called. It now appears, gentlemen, that no one ever meant that more than 28 per cent should be called, yet we in the committee were misled into supposing that they were going to raise a million dollars locally for this undertaking.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that the gentle-man from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] has stated within fifteen minutes that only 70 per cent of this preferred stock has been paid up-$350,000 out of $500,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will excuse me I will explain it, if it is worth while. The last call came on the 1st of January. It will probably be paid up without any trouble. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, there has been raised a little over $400,000 instead of $1,000,000. Now, I say, make those gentlemen pay up. Who are these common stockholders? The common stockholders have the entire vote down there by the agreement of the preferred stockholders. I have a complete list of the common stockholders on my desk, but I will read from the hearings, as follows:

The Chairman. Can you tell us who the stockholders are in common stock?

Mr. Meyers (governor of ways and means of the exposition). The large owners are largely prominent in the management of the company. The Chairman. That is, individuals like yourself?

Mr. Meyers. Yes. The largest ones are in the room here, warying from $2,500 to $8,000.

In other words, the very gentlemen who have been drawing on that pay roll of $5,000 a month. Of course they are not going to vote to make themselves pay up that 72 per cent that is still out if they can get Uncle Sam to come up with the

Now, are we going to get the proposed loan back? We are not, in my opinion, unless we protect ourselves in every way. The Secretary of the Treasury says they must have three millions of paid admissions before they can pay us back. general counsel, Mr. Bachelor, I think, last year predicted only three or four million paid admissions. In other words, unless their own enthusiastic predictions are fulfilled, they can not pay the United States in full. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LATTAUER], if adopted, will give us a lien on their real estate, which may be worth three or four hundred thousand dollars. My amendment, if adopted, will put $250,000 more into their treasury.

I do not know how long the new money will last, but some of it may remain unspent. At all events, we can not get any of this money at all if we are obliged to sue for it after the expo-

If we adopt the Senate amendment, we take the whole risk of the show's failure. If things fizzle out Uncle Sam will lose the money instead of these stockholders. If the show succeeds, the stockholders get the benefit, not Uncle Sam.

Mr. GILBERT May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly. Mr. GILBERT. I understood the gentleman from New York to say a while ago that the common stockholders subscribed with the understanding that they were only obligated to pay 28 per cent.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The prospectus says "and the balance, 72 per cent, shall be paid on the call of the directors." In other words, on their own vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the last word of the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman continuing his remarks? A motion to strike out the last word is not in order.

Mr. PAYNE. Why does not the gentleman ask for more time? How much time do you want?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not care.

PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman being allowed ten minutes further time? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky asked as to whether there was a contract that this 72 per cent should not be called. On the contrary, there was no There was a private understanding between the such contract. common stockholders and themselves. That is to say, among those managers with the voting power. They did not say a word That is to say, among to your committee about any such understanding, and not one word is said in their prospectus.

Their prospectus says, "The balance, 72 per cent, shall be paid on the call of the directors," or words to that effect. I wrote to the governor of ways and means, Mr. Meyers, asking "What will happen if the directors do not call that 72 are safe." What will happen if the directors do not call that 72 per cent? He wrote me back that the court could force its payment to satisfy the debts of the company. I knew that before, as well as everybody else; but that is the only answer I ever got. Now, the common stockholders tell us that they did not understand they were going to be called upon for that money. Apparently a subscription to the common stock was supposed to mean nothing at all. In other words, the common stockholders intended to pay themselves salaries, and Uncle Sam is to furnish the cash. Now, I do not so much blame these promoters. These methods are not very different from those pursued by other expositions. That is the reason that I, as chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, am on my feet to-day to bring this House's attention to the fact that it is time to call a halt on these expositions.

Expositions are contemplated in San Francisco, Atlanta, Topeka, New York. Some of the schemes have not yet hatched out, but are in process of incubation. To-day I have been asked by the Washington delegation to call a meeting of the committee to consider an exposition in Seattle. So earnest were they that I could scarcely refuse them. Next year they will not take "No" for an answer; but I believe that at last we have come to the turning point. I hope that Jamestown will end Government aid to expositions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have never made any application for any appropriation for Atlanta.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That has not been made.

I only saw it in the Atlanta Journal. Mr. LIVINGSTON. They have withdrawn the idea of even holding one Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am very glad they have withdrawn it. At all events, Mr. Chairman, it is well for us to remember what we are doing. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to have the gentleman state, for the information of the committee, what is meant when the gentleman says the pay roll is $5,000 a month in salaries? What is the aggregate amount of salaries that are now being paid, and how long have they been paid out-before they have had any exposition at all?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not say exactly to the gentleman, but on February 19, 1906, they were running a pay roll of $4,000 a month, and it was growing.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is $48,000 a year, and that is what it was a year ago.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It has been gradually growing. I know very well that the House will not do what wish it would do-knock out this loan altogether. Therefore I am simply asking you to make it as secure as you possibly can. I am on my feet to-day not thinking so much of the present as of the future. I am fighting not only the Jamestown loan, but the entire principle of Government aid to expositions.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, there are some things I want to say to this House about the matter pending before it now that probably I have said privately a good many times; but I should like to have the attention of the House while I try to say to it as a body some of the things that I want them to know about the matter that is now occupying the attention of the House.

I am sure it is unnecessary for me to call the attention of this House to the fact that every gentleman who has occupied time here in the advocacy of the pending amendments, which, in his opinion, would perfect this bill will when the bill is so perfected, if the House shall decide to pass these amendments, vote against loaning the Jamestown Exposition Company 1 cent. One million dollars or $800,000, it all looks alike to them. They are against the whole proposition. And in this body, as in the other legislative bodies in which I have served in my own State, when members were opposed to a measure it was usually their custom, when they were afraid the good judgment of the body would pass the proposition over their opposition, to seek to cripple it, first by amendments, and then, if the amendments were adopted, to try to defeat the whole measure. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that that is the object, in my opinion, of the amendments that are offered here to-day. We will take first the amendment for $800,000 instead of $1,000,000. The gentlemen who will finally oppose this bill from this floor will tell you that they are opposing it because they believe the principle of the Government lending money to expositions, or to any other cause, is not a correct principle, and they are opposed to this proposition for that reason. Then what difference does it make to them whether they vote against $1,000,000 or vote against $800,000? The thing for them to do is to vote against the principle.

Mr. LITTAUER. Is the gentleman asking a question?
Mr. MAYNARD. I do not ask a question, but I am ready to let the gentleman answer it.

Mr. LITTAUER. The difference is $200,000 to the Treasury of the United States. That is the only answer that we can make That is the only answer that we can make to the question. What is the difference between $800,000 and

Mr. MAYNARD. This House by an overwhelming majority has put itself on record that the celebration to be held in commemoration of the first settlement of English-speaking people in this country shall be one that the people in this country may be proud of. The Congress of the United States up to this time has done all that the Representative of that important district and the other Representatives from the State of Virginia have asked them to do. They have said that this, the greatest event in American history, ought to be properly celebrated in the vicinity of Jamestown Island in the year 1907. Now, if we want to celebrate it at all, it looks too cheap, when we come here and show that we need a million dollars to finish this exposition, that any committee of this House or any number of Members of this House should get together and bargain with us and say, "We think you ought to have some, but take off $5 or $10 or $100,000 or $200,000." I want to say that when this matter comes before the membership of this House for a vote, if they think the principle is wrong, that there is no security and no precedent that entitles us to come here and ask this consideration at your hands, then vote against a million dollars and vote against $800,000. Give us what we have asked for in good faith or give us nothing. So much for the cut of $200,000. Now, the next proposition is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not only supervise the expenditure of this money, but also that the Secretary of the Treasury shall give his time to passing upon what they do with the money that has been loaned them in good faith, for which they give such bond and security as Congress has exacted at their hands; that then if they want to buy a needle or a paper of pins or a telegraph pole, they shall ask the Secretary of the Treasury to give his approval to the purchase of a needle or a paper of pins or a telegraph pole. It is ridiculous on its face; and, after this Congress has dealt so generously with St. Louis, with Buffalo, and with all the other expositions that have been held heretofore, it is a shame that any Member of this House should rise, when an exposition is to be given in another part of the country, and make an on-slaught upon the people who are behind that exposition, whose faith and credit and honesty and standing are as high as those of the people of any other part of this country.

I do not believe that the representatives of the American people are going to agree to that. I believe that the representatives of the American people upon this floor are going to put their protest against such talk, and when the vote is taken on this matter they will not only give them the million dollars or give them nothing, because the principle is wrong and they have not the security, or they are going to give them everything they ask for and going to treat fairly the people of that section who are to make this celebration the greatest celebration of its kind ever held in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYNARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, nearly all the expositions that have been held in this country when the time came to open the gates have not been ready. I want to present to you the unique condition of this exposition as compared with other expositions. The time fixed in the compromise bill, which the friends of the exposition accepted from the hands of this House when the celebration was authorized, was not the time that the people who are behind the exposition wanted, and the bill was not what they wanted, but we had to accept that because the session would expire the next day by limitation and there would have been no bill, and we were forced to accept that one. It fixed the time of the opening of the exposition on the 13th of May and closed it on the 31st day of October.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we will not only be ready to open that exposition on the 13th day of May, but we ask you to let us open in advance of that time, on the 26th day of April. I want to tell you why we have asked for the 26th day of April, why the 26th day of April is the most appropriate day in the year 1907 for the exposition to open. On the 26th day of April, three hundred years ago, in 1607, John Smith and his colonists were driven in between the capes by adverse winds and landed near Cape Henry and went up into the country and were driven back by the Indians. That was three hundred years ago on the 26th day of April that these colonists first put their feet upon American soil, and not the 13th of May, as was proposed in the bill that passed at the session I referred to. This exposition obviously could not be held on Jamestown Island proper, for there are no buildings there, no conveniences, and the land is swampy. There is no place there to take care of visitors, and the celebration had to be held at some convenient point near Jamestown Island. The present site was selected, and it is very near the spot where Smith's colonists first put their feet on American soil. For that reason the 26th day of April is the most proper day in this year for the opening of that celebration.

I trust that it will be the good judgment of this House to fix the date for the opening of the exposition on the 26th day of April, when it will be ready and when the President of the United States, who has already accepted an invitation, will be present and deliver a speech on that day of the opening of the exposition.

Now as to the closing. In our climate the month of November is probably the most pleasant month we have in the entire year. We have little if any frost, we have no weather so warm that we need a sunshade to protect us from the rays of the sun. It is a pleasure and a delight to be out in open weather during the month of November around Norfolk. For that reason it would be a pleasant month for visitors to visit the exposition. In addition to that, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer] said to the House, in reciting the terms of the payment, that after a certain time there were to be semimonthly payments, every two weeks of $100,000, and including the month of November, this would take us up to the 1st of December. After receiving 40 per cent up to a certain time, you would have ten payments; after having three or four payments, in which you received 40 per cent, not only of the gate receipts, but also the receipts from concessions, you would receive ten payments, each payment of which would be equal to one-tenth of the entire loan, or $100,000, and so, keeping open in the month of November-and I want to say that there will be a great many more visitors in the month of November— it would increase the security of the Government, because it would give one month longer in which to collect two payments of this money as further security on the loan. gates of this exposition on the 31st day of October, as contemplated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] would cut off from us the possibility of paying back this loan with re-. ceipts for the month of November, which will be, in my opinion, larger probably than the receipts of any other two months of the exposition.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly.
Mr. LITTAUER. Not to close the gates, but to make the Government's participation in the celebration not later than the 1st of November. The exposition company, having control of the gates, could keep them open as long as it pleased

Mr. MAYNARD. That is a distinction without a difference, as suggested by a gentleman near me. They can keep the gates open until the following Christmas, if they want to; but after the Army and the militia and the Navy and the merchant marine and the Government exhibits have been moved away, and all the principal features of the exposition are gone, what is the use of our keeping the gates open as long as we please? The minute the ships sail away, the minute the soldiers are gone, the minute it is announced that the Government has withdrawn its exhibit, then the exposition is closed, and nobody knows that better than does the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

There will not be anything left, will there? Mr. PAYNE.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Oh, yes; there will be a lot left, and if the gentleman will come down we will try to give him a more liberal education, which would allow him to see better things in expositions hereafter.

Mr. PAYNE. I think we will all get our eyeteeth cut on this

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In this particular case.
Mr. MAYNARD. There will be a lot there. But you advertise to the world, when the Government of the United States, which has inaugurated this exposition, which has—well, to please the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER], I will say inaugurated this celebration, and it is all a part of the same celebration.

Mr. LITTAUER. This celebration could have taken place without the exposition.

Mr. MAYNARD. Oh, yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman refer to this innocuous bill reported by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] several terms ago as being the inauguration of this celebration?

Mr. MAYNARD. The first bill that was ever reported to this House was, by direction of the committee, reported by me, providing for a celebration, containing an exposition also. A compromise measure was afterwards passed, which was never reported from any committee which provided for this.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That inaugurated it?

Mr. MAYNARD. Yes.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is what I supposed all the time.
Mr. MAYNARD. This celebration is inaugurated by the Government. It has invited all the nations of the earth to participate, and, as I remember it now, every country in the world, with the exception of Siam, and possibly one other of about the same importance, will be represented by representations of their army and navy at this celebration. And there are other rea-The convenience of the people ought to be considered in this matter. During the month of November there will be moving east from the west a great many people, coming to Washington. It is the time of the year when there is a great movement in this direction, and that will give these people an opportunity to see this exposition. It is the convenience of the people of the country that we want to consider, because the object of holding these celebrations outside of the commemoration of the event is for the purpose of educating the people. Expositions are like universities in that they are a means of educating the people and bringing them together, so as to broaden their views and increase their patriotism and make of them a better people.

Mr. GILBERT. What less security is provided by this than was provided at St. Louis?

Mr. MAYNARD. I am very glad that question has been asked. Mr. Chairman, if they are going to lend this exposition company a million dollars, what do they want to require at the hands of this exposition company that was not required at the hands of any other exposition company? The language of this bill—and I defy successful contradiction on this point is in word, if not in fact, and I believe almost word for word, the exact language of the St. Louis bill. I do not believe they want to feed St. Louis and the West out of one spoon and feed Virginia and the South out of another. This bill is in the exact language of the St. Louis bill, with the exception that the bill authorizing this celebration appointed a national committee, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War, who are to conduct this celebration on the part of the Government. They met and considered the bill, and the only difference between this and the St. Louis bill is that we put in this bill language guaranteeing that this commission, as far as it could, would see to the return of this money to the Government, and making the loan as safe as possible. One of the gentlemen who helped to draft the provision which was inserted at their request in the bill is now the Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. Bonaparte. I say we have offered the same security that was offered by the St. Louis Exposition and accepted. What is there in our situation, what is there in our people, what is there in this condition that surrounds us which says that one-fifth of the sum which was loaned to St. Louis on the same security you will not loan to us?

Now the Appropriations Committee has provided another amendment, and that other amendment is that as a further guaranty that there shall be a first mortgage upon certain real estate owned by the exposition company. Now, in the St. Louis loan, which is a precedent for this loan, there was no such requirement. You would answer that by saying that they did not have the land to mortgage. Then they were not as safe to loan money to as we are, because we have more security safe to loan money to as we are, because we have more security that the Government will get its money back besides the gate receipts and concessions. We own a piece of land there, upon which the exposition is built, that could be sold in the open market to-day, if it were for sale, for at least $500,000. Now that brings me to the question of the common stock.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a spection?

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia how much the preferred stock amounts to and how much the common stock amounts to?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will be glad to answer the question. I was going to answer it anyhow.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, how much has been paid in on the preferred stock and how much on the common?

Mr. MAYNARD. The preferred stock amounts to $500,000, or some hundred or two dollars more. The common stock amounts to $500,000, and the preferred stock is paid in to the amount of about 90 per cent. The last call was made on the 1st of January, 1907, and proceedings have already been in-augurated against any stockholder who is in default on his assessment and it will be collected by due process of law. Now, as to the common stock, various assertions have been made here upon the floor, and I want to state something that is a fact. It is not a matter of agreement between individuals. The prospectus or the slip that was signed and handed in by the men who signed for common stock provided that up to 1907 no call for more than 28 per cent should be made upon the conmon stock, and it enabled the men who took the preferred stock to take common stock for this reason—that the common stock was held as a guaranty that in the event that the exposition did not make enough money to take up the preferred stock and the other debts of the company that there was this further security in the uncollected assessment on the common stock to guarantee this preferred stock and also to guarantee the other debts of the company, and the fact that that assessment of 72 per cent has not been collected on the common stock is further security that this Government, if it makes this loan of a million dollars, will get it back. To collect that money, as asked for by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], is to put that money where it may be used for other purposes and defeat the object for which the two classes of stock were created, common and preferred, the common to be a guaranty to the people who had faith in the exposition to pay its preferred stock and at the same time had faith in the exposition to take a contract from it to perform work or services, that they might have this much guaranty, at least that there was a fund at the last instance that could be called upon to make good the debts of the exposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. MAYNARD. All right, sir; go ahead. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. What per cent of the total preferred stock has been called and how large a percentage of the stock has been paid?

Mr. MAYNARD. The entire preferred stock has been called and about 90 per cent is paid.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be about $450,000?

Mr. MAYNARD. The last call was made on the 1st day of January.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, the statement of the gentleman is to the effect that 90 per cent of the $500,000 of preferred stock has been called and paid. That makes $450,000. Now, what percentage of the common stock has been called and what percentage of that common stock has been paid?

Mr. MAYNARD. Twenty-eight per cent of the common stock has been called.

Mr. MADDEN. How much has been paid?

Mr. MAYNARD. I have to speak in round numbers; I should say about 90 per cent in round numbers.

Mr. MADDEN. Twenty-eight per cent of that, in round numbers, would be $100,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. And those people who are in default on the assessment are paying in that money every day, and I can not say to-day what has been paid in, but the statement made in a hearing held three months ago would not be a correct statement and should not be accepted as true to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. And the point I want to make is to get the gentleman's statement clear before the House as to just what the situation is, how much has been paid in by the people in control of this exposition, and how much of a resource they have in the unpaid assessments that are to be levied in the future, so that the House will understand how much money the exposition company can collect, if it is obliged to collect, to help the exposition from sustaining any loss for which the Government of the United States may be held responsible.

Mr. MAYNARD. The exposition company has dealt in good faith all the way through. They come here and regret that they are not situated so as to be in a rich and large community like that of the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MADDEN] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer]. We are not ashamed to say that our people are not rich. Virginia has been building up wonderfully since the civil war, but we have not yet reached that stage in commercial life or that stage in commercial wealth where we are rich and can subscribe millions to an enterprise. If we could, we would not be asking help. We are not a rich community, and most of that stock is held in one and two share subscriptions. The working people—the clerks, and merchants, and everybody—have worked together to make this thing a success to the best of their ability, and the people who are behind the enterprise are bending their energy to get in every cent that will make this thing go. They will collect and get from other sources about $500,000 in addition to what we have already spent.

In addition to the million that we are going to borrow from the Government, we will have a million and a half to complete this exposition and not to go further and inaugurate new enterprises there, but to complete that which is already undertaken. With the $500,000 that we will get from other sources and the million dollars that we will borrow from the Government, when the gates of that exposition open there will not be a dollar of floating debt upon it, and the only obligation that they will have will be its obligation to its preferred stockholders and its obligation to the Government of the United States, which will be amply protected by the security which we offer, if we are to take the precedent which has already been set us as a mark to go by.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?
'Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman to say that, in connection with the subscriptions to stock, on the blank upon which you subscribe to common stock it was said that 78 per cent should not be called?

Mr. MAYNARD. Seventy-two.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Seventy-two per cent should not be called. Was it not a fact that it says "shall be called on the vote of the directors," and is it not a fact that the directors are themselves the largest holders of common stock?

Mr. MAYNARD. Some of them are and some of them are

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have the list here. Mr. MAYNARD. My interest in this thing has been, as far as I could in my humble way, to help to make it, in connection with the other people who live down there, a success. not been looking for a point upon which to attack the people who live in Virginia and in that section. Now, if I had directed my attention to attacking the exposition that was held at Buffalo, and the people who were behind that exposition, or the exposition held at St. Louis, or the people behind that or any of the other expositions; I or some other Representative upon this floor might have found some point upon which we might have directed a lecture on the methods of those people connected with those expositions. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. MAYNARD. If it is a short one and can be answered

shortly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have in my hand here a list of the preferred stockholders and a list of the common stockholders. I think that the gentleman pointed out that these preferred stockholders took common stock as well. He did not include the railroad and steamship companies, did he,

in that category'

Mr. MAYNARD. There are seven trunk lines and a number of steamboat lines that operate between the northern cities and this city in Virginia, and all of these seven railroads and two or three electric lines and all these steamboat companies in the aggregate own $100,000 of both classes of stock, and they would have you believe that this is a thing on which they are trying to get you to loan a million dollars of the people's money so that the railroads may be benefited only. The amount of stock that they hold in the exposition gives a denial to that emphatically, and it is not necessary to give that statement further answer.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the railroads have paid in one-quarter of the money that has been

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not catch the question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the railroads have paid in one-quarter of all the money that has been paid in?

Mr. MAYNARD. I would answer that if the railroads subscribed one-quarter of the common stock I have no information of it. It does not make any difference what the railroads subscribed, whether it was one-fourth, one-fifth, or one-half. I presume that the railroads have been made to stand up and deliver everything they promised to deliver. And if they have not, I understand they have begun legal steps to make them do That answers the gentleman. I started to say that I have dealt all the way through in perfect good faith. Does this House think that we ought to make a mortgage on the real estate when we have given a mortgage on all its receipts; and if the receipts for concessions and the gate do not meet the debt of the million dollars we will owe the Government, if this House vote for it, then we will have the land to pay that debt and all the other debts of the exposition. Now, we made a bargain with the common stockholders, and we are going to keep faith with them, and I say to the House that we are going to keep faith with the Government and the common stockholders; and to borrow a million dollars we are not going back to the people and say to those who earn a few dollars a day and by installments contributed to this stock that we have broken faith with them so that we may borrow money somewhere. We are going to deal in good faith with the people and the Government both, and when this exposition is over you will say that for the amount of money invested it was the greatest exposition ever held on the American continent. You are all going to be proud of it, and it will be pretty hard to find the man who would get up here and confess that he fought it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

I want to say that an examination of the manner in which this bill is brought in will show the purpose is to kill it; why they have incorporated in this bill a whole lot of amendments If they wanted to permit the bill to pass they would have come in and offered one amendment, one after another, and have given you a chance to vote on them; but they hope that a strong one will carry a weak one, and in that way get them all in and thus have the bill crippled. Then they would get up and say that the bill ought not to pass, because the Government under the Constitution has no right to lend money to this or any other exposition.

This bill went to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions of this House, and the amendment which was put on by the Senate was the earnest work of the committee of which Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts is chairman, and which he is here to-day opposing, without having made a minority report. We made it after earnest consideration of this subject. having witnesses, after investigating it thoroughly, the committee made a report to this House, and that report was taken up by the Senate and, without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t," the Senate put in as a Senate amendment the bill that was reported by instructions of the committee of which Mr. GARDNER is chairman. They reported that bill as a Senate amendment on the House appropriation bill, and you are not considering an amendment put on the bill by the Senate committee, but an amendment the language of which was framed in this House committee, and which we could not get up in the House. know I stood up here, and the friends of the bill stood up here, day after day and strove to have consideration of the bill, but we could not get unanimous consent. This bill was sent to the Appropriations Committee, and you will find that after the bill is amended, if it is amended, if you poll the committee on Appropriations you could not get a majority of the votes of the committee on this floor for the passage of this bill for a loan of $50, and they report this amendment and they ask you to adopt it and kill the bill. I ask you to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, and either loan us what we ask for or defeat this bill. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the House for a few minutes, not to discuss the financial features of the bill, but to call attention to the character of this proposed exposition. As the Representative of a St. Louis district, I can not well vote against this amendment, because a similar favor was extended to the management of the St. Louis World's Fair, but I feel it my duty to call the attention of this House and the country to what kind of a show the Jamestown Exposition is really going to be. I hold in my hand a copy of the Portsmouth Star containing, as an official advertisement of the exposition management, a list of the "attractions" of the coming show. Some of these are as follows:

Greatest military spectacle the world has ever seen.
Grandest naval rendezvous in history.
International races by submarine war ships.
Magnificent pyrotechnic production of war scenes.
Reproduction of the famous battle between the Monitor and Merrimac at the place where that battle was fought.
Great museum of war relies from all nations and all ages.
Greatest gathering of war ships in the history of the world.
Prize drills by the finest soldiers of all nations and by picked regiments of United States and State troops.
Races of military air ships of different nations.
The largest military parade ground in the world.
Contests of skill between soldiers and sailors of different nations.
Dally inspection of war ships in the harbor and troops in camp.
The greatest military and naval parade ever witnessed.
More naval and military bands than were ever assembled in time of peace.

More naval and ministry bands than were ever assembled in time of peace.

Greatest array of gorgeous military uniforms of all nations ever assembled in any country.

More members of royalty of different countries than ever assembled in peace or war.

The grandest military and naval celebration ever attempted in any age by any nation.

A great living picture of war with all of its enticing splendors.

According to this astonishing programme, the main purpose of the exposition seems to be a glorification of war, a thing which no monarchical, no military country of the Old World has ever dared to propose to its patient subjects. And that this is not an individual conception is best shown by the managers of the proposed exposition themselves. To leave no doubt as to the proposed exposition themselves. To leave no doubt as to the real character of the show they have named the great en-tertainment promenade "The Warpath." In Chicago it was the "Midway Plaisance," in St. Louis it was "The Pike," and at Jamestown it is to be the "Warpath." There is only one thing lacking now to add to the realistic effects and to make the picture complete, and that is a real battle, in which men are being actually butchered and killed, and, judging from the rapid evolution we have witnessed from plans which appealed to the noble instincts of human nature to those which appeal only to what is brutal in us, we may yet see advertisements in the pa-pers calling for men who are willing to be killed to illustrate the vivid glories of war.

Mark this evolution:

"As late as June the intended character of the exposition was described in the official organ by the statement that the historical occasion which the exposition commemorates would be 'fittingly observed, first, by emphasizing the great historical events that have marked the progress of America from the first settlement; second, by an industrial exhibition primarily of American skill and art; and, third, by an international military, naval, and marine celebration.'

'In July the intended scope of the celebration has become: '1. A great international naval and military assemblage, in-augurated and controlled by the United States government. 2. An exposition inaugurated and controlled by the Jamestown Exposition Company, with exhibits on history, art, education, industry, etc. 'If Congress shall pass the appropriation bill industry, etc. 'If Congress shall pass the app now pending,' this would be the order of things. ment's original appropriation had been but $200,000. Before the issue of the August journal the additional appropriation of $1,500,000 had been made; and some of the uses to which an amount double that of the total original appropriation are to be put are announced, as follows:
"'Building for rendezvous for the soldiers and sailers of the United States Army and Navy and foreign armies and navies at the exposition, $75,000. Building for the commissioned officers of the Army and Navy of the United States and of, foreign countries, $50,000. For transportation of United States, State, and foreign troops to and from the exposition, $100,000. reproduction of battle of Monitor and Merrimac on Hampton Roads, $10,000. Official entertainment of foreign military and naval officers at exposition, $125,000.'

"In July, as in June, 'the main idea is historical' still, but with hints at readjustment. In August the first two items of the summary of the Jamestown Exposition in brief are: 'Official name, Jamestown Ter-Centennial Exposition; character, military, naval, marine, and historic exposition.' Militarism is now distinctly and avowedly at the front; and in September we find sanctioned on the first page of the official journal the frank declaration, 'The exposition will be primarily a military and naval celebration, commercialism being relegated to the

"'The Jamestown Exposition will be a continuous and vary"'The Jamestown Exposition will be a continuous and will be a continuous and will be a continuous and will be a continuous an ing scene of martial splendor from beginning to end,' we are informed in the official journal. 'Every branch of the United States Army will be represented, the whole force to act as the military hosts of the foreign troops.' In addition to these forces, 'which alone would make a display unequaled,' great bodies of State troops are to be brought from all parts of the country to encamp and parade in the exposition grounds. For the first time in an American exposition 'the policing will be by United States soldiers.' The presence of foreign troops, hitherto forbidden in the Republic, will be a marked and exciting feature. 'The United States has never hitherto permitted armed companies of foreign soldiery to visit this country. sequently, for the first time Americans will see an international encampment, and the size of this one may be imagined when we realize that almost every foreign country will send one of its crack regiments."

"The exhibits of the War and Navy Department will be 'extremely comprehensive.' The first 'will run the gamut from the 2,400 pound cast-iron projectiles' down, with all 'the various styles of machine guns' and 'cartridge-making machines in operation;' and the naval museum will show models of battle ships and cruisers galore, samples of the 'big guns,' and even a model dry dock in which 'a minature war vessel will be docked and undocked each day.' There will be decorative victures of famous payal battles, and so forth, ad nauseam." pictures of famous naval battles, and so forth, ad nauseam."

This is the true picture of the coming Jamestown Exposition, according to the official announcements of its own management. I want to say right here that the managers themselves are perhaps not as much to blame as Congress, which made the appropriations and plainly indicated the purposes for which the peo-ple's money is to be spent. But the managers have certainly entered into the spirit of the thing with a zeal worthy of a better There are those who believe that the best use to which a cause. battle ship might be put is to have it exhibited, and for my part I wish that "that most colossal collection of fighting strength that has ever been gathered in one spot," as the official journal characterizes it, could be kept at Jamestown for all time to come. There is some consolation, perhaps, in the fact that the military folk have at last taken the "one step too far" which was necessary to sicken the American people and shock their common sense into reaction.

But I ask this House, What would the founders of the American Republic say to this amazing programme? Does it not involve treason to all for which they have labored and aspired? As is stated in the protest of a number of members of the exposition's advisory board, it was precisely to help lead the world away from these baleful old vanities and wrongs that the Christian world should be led by interest to respect and at length to imitate." He would not consent to build up a new nationality merely to create more armies and navies to perpetuate the crimes and follies of Europe. "Our Government should not be permitted," he said, "to include in the miserable ambitions that had made the Old World a hell and frustrated the hopes of humanity." "Are there no means of coercing injustice," he asked, "more gratifying to our nature than a waste of the blood of thousands and the labor of millions of our fellowcreatures?" He demanded the same rational settlement of our differences between nations as between individuals and looked forward to the supplanting of armies and navies by courts and an international police. "War," he said, "is an instrument entirely inefficient toward redressing wrong. It multiplies instead of indemnifying losses."

What were the words of Washington concerning "war with all of its enticing splendors," with whose laudation his country is now invited to celebrate "its natal day?" "My first wish is to see this plague to mankind banished from the earth." He desired to see men "employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements than in preparing and exercising implements for the destruction of mankind." To this pushing of militarism to the primacy and the relegation of industry, science, and commerce to the rear his rebuking word after the century still rings strong: "It is devoutly to be wished that the manly employment of agriculture and the humanizing benefits of commerce would supersede the waste of war and the rage of conquest, that the wings of your young military men who are soaring after glory might be clipped, and the inhabitants of the world become as one band of brothers striving who should contribute most to the happiness of mankind."

These are the judgments of the founders of the Republic concerning "war's enticing splendors." These will be the Republic's judgments so long as it is faithful to their memory and their principles. The words of Washington and Franklin and Jefferson are the words also of their illustrious associates. The programme of "the great living picture of war" at Hampton Roads is the programme of our recreancy, and its fitting climax is the boast that the pageant will be witnessed by "more members of royalty than ever before assembled."

For one, Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the members of the

For one, Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the members of the executive board, above referred to, who in their protest against the diversion of the Jamestown Exposition to the service of militarism say:

militarism say:

We are not of those who impugn the Army and the Navy; they have their proper and necessary place. We are here urging no objection to dignified military and naval participation is the ceremonies of the Jamestown Exposition. We do not criticise commercial enterprise; we applaud the local energy and ambition behind our great expositions. We do not plead for any parsimonious policy toward them on the part of our National or State governments; and we would here heartily record our appreciation of the wise and useful purposes to which the funds appropriated for the Jamestown Exposition alike by the nation and the States have mainly been assigned. We would especially commend the plans so ably outlined by the eminent scholar at the head of the department of history and education and his neglected plea that "the central thought of the Jamestown Exposition should be the thought of the first English colony and its influence." We solemnly protest against the association of that high thought with the "enticing splendors of war" and the prostitution of a great national festival planned to commemorate our New World birth and the representative American achievements of these three centuries into an enterprise which "will be primarily a military and naval celebration," with history and education, industry, and commerce relegated to the background.

I realize that it is too late to change the exposition's pro-

I realize that it is too late to change the exposition's programme now, but I trust that the few remarks I have submitted will serve notice on the people of this and other countries that this Republic is still a democracy, and that the ideals of its founders have not perished on American soil. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] to the amendment of the Senate.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Littauer] to the amendment of the Senate.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTAUER) there were—ayes 74, noes 95.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTAUER. I move that the committee recommend to the House noncurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the committee recommend that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] that the committee recommend that the House concur.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt, and on a division there were-ayes 114, noes 82.

Accordingly the motion that the committee recommend that the House concur in the Senate amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee recommend to the House concurrence in the Senate amendment. Mr. OLMSTED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is there more than one Senate amendment

The CHAIRMAN. There are two Senate amendments. This is the second.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment concerns the $65,000 that is now claimed to be necessary to complete the channel of approach to the piers that were authorized last year, that the $400,000 appropriated will be expended upon, to the end that there should be ready communication between the ships and the shore. The Secretary of War in that same provision was authorized to enter into a contract for the building of those piers, and he took the precaution, before entering into the contract, to get an agreement from the exposition that if Congress did not appropriate the $65,000 the exposition would do the dredging and expend the sum necessary therefor.

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now you have taken one step toward giving them $1,000,000, which it seems to me is $200,000 more than is necessary, and I think that you had better let them pay the $65,000 out of the million dollars.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York was recognized by the Chair. The question is on the motion of the gentle-The gentleman from New York was recogman from Virginia that the committee recommend to the House concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

LITTAUER), there were—ayes 91, noes 68.

So the committee determined to recommend to the House concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Dalzell, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration two amendments of the Senate to the House bill 24541 and had instructed him to recommend to the House concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked for on any amendment?

Mr. LITTAUER. I ask for a separate vote on the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for a separate vote on the first amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 91, answered "present" 13, not voting 164, as follow:

CONSERVATION OF FORESTS.

Mr. WARREN. I have in my hand a petition, or rather a series of resolutions, adopted by the National Wool Growers' Association at their recent meeting in Salt Lake City. perhaps the oldest live-stock association in the world, having been organized in 1864, and also the largest one which we know anything about.

As the resolutions touch upon subjects being debated on this floor to some extent lately regarding forests, the grazing of public lands, etc., and as the resolutions are short, I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Organized 1864.]

[Organized 1864.]

HEADQUARTERS THE NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Cheyenne, Wyo., January 28, 1907.

The honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of resolutions adopted by the woolgrowers and sheep breeders of the United States in forty-third annual convention assembled, Salt Lake City, Utah, January 19, 1907, and respectfully ask for your careful consideration of the same.

Be it resolved. That we believe the general policy of the Government in conserving the forests for the future use of the people is right, but the method of administering the rules governing the same need remedying in many instances. We most earnestly protest against the creation of forest reserves in regions where there are no forests and where none can be created, thereby withdrawing from the use of the people lands which are of inestimable value for grazing purposes, and which can be used for no other nurpose. used for no other purpose.

Section 1. We ask that the Wool Growers' Association, now in session at Salt Lake City, Utah, appoint a committee of not to exceed three men from each of the arid States and Territories, active stockmen, to meet the Land Commission in the near future to confer with them relative to the Government control of the public domain, said committee to be instructed by this convention to try to show the Commission that under the now existing circumstances it would be better for all concerned to defar Government control of these domains until the forest-reserve policy is more definitely settled, and also discuss the most feasible and fairest way to all persons interested in these domains whereby one person's interests will not be ruined to build up another's. With due respect, this convention and the people owe this to the President of the United States, as Mr. Pinchot has explained to you. II.

Sec. 2. It is further recommended that a meeting with the United States Land Commission and the members of this committee at some convenient place in the very near future be held, said committee to name place of meeting.

We protest against the present fees charged for grazing sheep in the forest reserves as being excessive. The fee charged for grazing sheep is greater in proportion to the amount of feed consumed than that charged for cattle.

We further demand an equitable division of the grazing ground in the forest reserves as between sheep and other kinds of stock, and where practicable that each kind of stock should be made to graze within its allotted district.

We are unqualified in our indorsement of the present import tariff duties on wool, woolen fabrics, hides, meat, and meat animals, and oppose emphatically any legislation which shall tend to decrease or disturb the present prosperous condition of the wool and live-stock industry of the United States. VI.

We favor the enactment of a law to require all railroads handling live stock in shipments of ten cars or more to maintain a speed limit of not less than 17 miles an hour including stops.

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Burkert, known as Senate bill 7618, which authorizes the President of the United States to establish, from time to time, by proclamation, grazing districts upon the public land of the United States; and

States; and
Whereas we believe said bill to not be specific enough in some of its terms and provisions and does not make due allowance for the magnitude and variety of the interests and conditions involved, and, finally, will confer, if enacted, upon the Department and Bureau administrative officers certain powers practically legislative, and, further, does not make any provision whereby the various States interested may have a voice in the administration thereof: Therefore,

Be it resolved, By the forty-third annual convention of the National Wool Growers assembled, that we insist that if such a law be passed it be under joint Government and State control of the unreserved and unappointed lands of the United States. We view with jealous alarm any innovation that threatens to throw our affairs into confusion and which may deprive us of any voice in the management of our grazing privileges.

which may deprive us of any voice in the management of our grazing privileges.

Be it further resolved. That we respectfully protest against the proposed Senate bill No. 7618 and urgently request the President of the United States to appoint a commission of live-stock men representative of the grazing interests which will be affected by the proposed legislation, which said commission shall be authorized to confer and act with the present Government Land Commission with a view to suggesting and formulating such amendments to said proposed law as may be deemed wise and proper and for the best interests of those concerned. concerned.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of this association shall send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States and every Senator and Representative in Congress.

VIII.

Whereas we people of the United States are being buncoed daily by shoddy and cotton goods, misrepresented as wool; and Whereas the United States Government does protect the people by means of pure-food laws and meat-inspection laws from food adulteration; and

Whereas it is right and just in the abstract that any government protect its people from frauds and counterfeits and adulteration: Therefore, be it tect its people from frauds and countertest test its people from frauds and countertest fore, be it Resolved, That we have Government inspection to protect us from Resolved, That we have Government inspection to protect us from shoddy and cotton counterfeits of wool, and we hereby request our Congressmen and the United States Senators to introduce, work, and vote for an act requiring manufacturers of goods and clothing to brand their product, designating the percentage of wool, cotton, shoddy, or any other material contained in said clothing and goods; and be it any other material contained in said clothing any other material contained in said clothing further Resolved, That the President of the United States be made acquainted with this wish of the people of the United States so that he may recommend, if he deems proper, to Congress the necessary remedial legislation, GEO. S. WALKER, Secretary.

CERTIFICATE.

I hereby certify that the within resolution was introduced and passed by the constitutional convention on the date and in the manner above stated.

JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

RESOLUTION. Whereas the following special has been sent out from Washington;: FRISCO MERGER—CONGRESS ASKED FOR RIGHT TO CONSOLIDATE TERRITORY LINES.

WASHINGTON, January 30.

Frank Evans, assistant attorney of the Frisco, with headquarters at St. Louis, is here pushing a bill authorizing the Frisco Rallway Company to consolidate several small branch lines in the Indian Territory. The bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs and will be passed in a few days and go to the Senate. The lines to be consolidated into the Frisco system follow: St. Louis, San Francisco and New Orleans road, running from Hope, Ark., through the Indian Territory via Ardmore to the Red River, distance 280 miles; St. Louis and Oklahoma City road, from Sapulpa to Oklahoma City, distance 105 miles; St. Louis, Oklahoma and Southern, running from Sapulpa to Red River, distance 193 miles; Oklahoma City and Western road, running from Oklahoma City to the Red River on the west, distance 182 miles.

Therefore this constitutional convention hereby protests against the passage of any such act and memorializes Congress not to enact any such legislation as will permit the consolidation of said lines of railways, but to leave the new State of Oklahoma to investigate these matters and deal therewith as its legislature may see proper, and if it is necessary for the Congress of the United States to deal therewith, that it can be more properly done after the State of Oklahoma has two members in the United States Senate and five Representatives in the lower House, and for such reasons said protest is urged.

WM. H. Murray, President.

Attest: JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is not material to me, of course, to what committee this protest shall go. from South Carolina asked its reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but I call his attention to the fact that the resolution itself recites that this contemplated legislation is pending in the Committee on Indian Affairs

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; at the other end of the Capitol.
Mr. CULBERSON. At the other end of the Capitol?
Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. As one of those roads crosses the State line of Arkansas I suppose that interstate commerce is I am indifferent as to which committee it goes, but involved. I suggest that the Committee on Interstate Commerce is the proper committee for it to go in case the bill pending in the other House ever gets over here.

Mr. CULBERSON, I misunderstood the purport of the memorial, Mr. President, and therefore its disposition one way or the other does not matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ELIZABETH R. GORDON.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8040) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Gordon, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Maine to the report.

Mr. FRYE. It is a very short bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it receive consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consid-It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow to Elizabeth R. Gordon, widow of George A. Gordon, deceased, late major Fifth United States Cavalry, the amount found due by the Second Auditor of the Treasury March 10, 1885, on account of the services of George A. Gordon as an officer of the Army, and appropriates $2,146.78 for the payment of this claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-dered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF COPYRIGHT ACTS.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that to-morrow there will be a minority report filed with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report just presented will be printed and lie on the table.

NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I report back with amendment, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill (H. R. 23394) to provide for an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of California. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Washington to the bill.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the immediate consideration of the was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there shall be in the ninth judicial district two additional circuit judges, each of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation prescribed by law in respect to circuit judges of the United States: Provided, That whenever one vacancy in the office of circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit shall occur the same shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be four circuit judges only in said court.

SEC. 2. That in the ninth judicial circuit at least one term of the circuit court of appeals shall be held each year in the city of Seattle.

SEC. 3, It shall hereafter be the duty of all circuit judges when not sitting in the circuit court of appeals, or engaged in work connected with hald court, to hold terms of the circuit court and transact the business at chambers and otherwise, which devolves by law upon circuit judges.

SEC. 4. That there shall be in the northern district of California an additional district judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation provided by law in respect to other district judges.

SEC. 5. That the senior circuit judge of the ninth circuit or the rest.

judges. 5. That the senior circuit judge of the ninth circuit, or the resident circuit judge within the district, shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to know what change is proposed. I should like to have some one in charge of the bill explain the change made by it.

Mr. PERKINS. The change as to an additional district judge?

Mr. FULTON. Yes; and as to the place of holding the courts.
Mr. PERKINS. The bill as originally introduced and considered by the committee provided that an additional judge should be appointed for both districts in California, and this designates the judge for the northern district of California. I understand that a judge can be assigned in the southern district if it is necessary under great pressure of business.

Mr. FLINT. The senior Senator from California has been absent from the Chamber; and I desire to state that the bill has been materially amended in this, that it not only provides for an additional district judge, but for two circuit judges. The provision in the amendment that the Senator from Oregon requests information about is in reference to the time of holding court by the circuit judges.

Mr. FULTON. The court of appeals.

Mr. FLINT. The court of appeals. The amendment provides that terms of the circuit court of appeals shall be held in Seattle the same as are now provided by law.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, I think I understand it now. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has explained it to me. I understand that it does not interfere with the existing law authorizing a term of court to be held elsewhere in the Northwest-for instance, at Portland.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not.

Mr. FULTON. At the present time it may be held there.
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I understand there are already three circuit judges in the ninth circuit. This bill proposes to increase the number by two. That makes it, so far as the number of judges are concerned, the largest circuit in the United States, larger than the eighth, which has the greatest volume of business of any circuit in the country.

I should like to have some Senator familiar with the facts state the reason why this increase in the number of the judges is made. I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, but I was not impressed with the necessity for the appointment of two additional circuit judges for this circuit, making it larger than any circuit in the United States in the number of its judges, while the volume of the business there is not as great as in other circuits, particularly not as great as in the eighth circuit.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on the Judiciary

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have it read again,

The Secretary again read the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed. The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for additional circuit judges in the ninth judicial circuit, and for an additional district judge in the northern district of California, and for other purposes."

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] an-

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] announced that he would ask the Senate to proceed at the end of the routine morning business with the Indian appropriation bill. It is so important that the appropriation bills shall be pushed at present that I must hereafter object to the consideration of any bill, as the appropriation bill is ready for action.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to give notice that I shall undertake to call up the bill immediately following the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill now before the Senate. may occur to-morrow or the next day, I wish to insert in the RECORD a brief statement of the changes in figures in the bill, so that it may appear in the morning.

so that it may appear in the morning.

I should like to be permitted to say also in this connection, in view of the large increase made in the total, that the bill came from the House appropriating a little less than seventy-two and a half million dollars. It has been increased by the Committee on Military Affairs to about eighty-one and a half million dollars. The estimates originally made, under which the bill was prepared, were over $79,000,000. To that have been added estimates since made amounting to some $10,000,000, and requests from the War Department not in the form of and requests from the War Department, not in the form of official Treasury estimates, were for some $350,000. So the estimates amount really to something over $90,000,000.

The bill, as I have said, carries about eighty-one and a half million dollars. This entire amount is a direct carrying out of existing law, furnishing supplies that the law provides for, excepting, perhaps, three or four items, amounting to three hundred and odd thousand dollars, and these items are strictly in line with the general tenor of the bill.

The increases in the bill are partly due to the differences between appropriations made by the House and the Treasury estimates, where the members of the committee of the Senate felt that there should be some increase made, but a still larger amount and the main increase comes by reason of legislation enacted since the bill passed the House—that is to say, the "artillery efficiency bill," so called.

I ask that the figures I send to the desk may be inserted in NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed:

Senate resolution 247.

Senate resolution 247.

Whereas Congress by act of July 2, 1864, created a corporation under the name and title "Northern Pacific Railroad Company," to construct and maintain a continuous railroad and telegraph line from Lake Saperior to Puget Sound, and conferred upon said corporation a grant of more than 40,000,000 acres of public lands to aid in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line; and Whereas whilst there have been two so-called "reorganizations" of the Northern Pacific property, one in the year 1875 and the other in the year 1896, neither was ratified by Congress, and it is charged that neither reorganization took place under any valid judicial sale, but that in each instance the alleged reorganization was effected by a mere exchange of securities; the stock of the original Federal corporation always remaining as a basis of ownership, said stock, after 1867, having been held in trust for a partnership association composed of J. Gregory Smith, of Vermont, and his associates, calling themselves "proprietors," the same being subsequently acquired from said so-called "proprietors" by an unincorporated joint stock association of bondholders formed in the year 1875 as the reorganized "Northern Pacific Railroad Company," and on July 13, 1896, a majority of the shares of stock and obligations of this latter organization of 1875 having been delivered by J. P. Morgan & Co., reorganization annagers, to the Wisconsin corporation, now known as the Northern Pacific Railway Company, in exchange for the latter's stock and bonds under the terms of a written agreement wherein the Northern Pacific estate was valued at $345,000,000, being $155,000,000 in excess of all indebtedness whatsoever, real or alleged, existing against it, over $215,000,000 in excess of the mortgage bonds thereupon issued by said Wisconsin corporation, and over $60,000,000 in excess of the entire stock and bonds issued by said Wisconsin corporation in fulfillment of the so-called "reorganization;" and Whereas it is charged that the said so termed reorganization of 1896 was effected by a fraudulent conspiracy against the organization of 1875, and to the injury of the stockholders thereof, and that it results in a fraud upon the Government of the United States by wrongfully making it appear that the ownership of the Northern Pacific Railroad, telegraph line, and land grant is no longer vested in a corporation of Congressional creation over which Congress is possessed of direct and immediate legislative and visitorial power, and it appears that the said Wisconsin corporation in Illigation against it instituted by the United States Government, hath undertaken to defend against the enforcement of the act of Congress of August 7, 1888 (Rev. Stat. sec. 5269), relative to the exercise of telegraphic franchises by railroad and telegraph companies subsidized by the United States and hath averred therein that it is not subject to the provisions of the said act of Congress because it never received any subsidy from the United States, and because it "is not engaged in operating its said railroad or telegraph inne

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the Ascal year ending June 30, 1908.

The reading of the bill was resumed at page 86, on line 21. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, The next amendment of the committee of Indian Alfans was, under the subhead "Carson School," on page 87, line 3, after the word "Nevada," to insert "$50,300;" and in line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-two thousand one" and insert "one thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., $50,300, and for pay of superintendent, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 17, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 17, to insert:

That in carrying out any irrigation project which may be undertaken under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 388), known as the "reclamation act," and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the irrigation of all or any part of the irrigable lands heretofore included in allotments made to Indians under the fourth section of the general allotment act, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cancel all such allotments, including any trust patent which may have issued therefor, and in lieu thereof to reserve for and allot to each Indian having an allotment of such irrigable land and legally entitled to the same, 10 acres of irrigable land, which shall be exempt from the payment of any charges by the allottee assessed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 389), but such expense shall be borne by the United States: Provided, That any of the lands which may have been included in the canceled allotments and which are not needed or reserved for allotment in smaller areas shall be restored to the public domain, to be disposed of subject to the provisions of the above-mentioned reclamation act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to expend annually for ten years not to exceed $12,064 to repay to the reclamation fund moneys expended by him therefrom in extending the Truckee-Carson irrigation project to 4,800 acres of land in Churchill County, Nev., being a part of the lands embraced with other lands in Indian allotments which have either been voluntarily relinquished in consideration of receiving reallotments of 10 acres of irrigable land, or which it is proposed to cancel under authority of this act.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order, Mr. President, that this is a close time of the lands embraced with the lands of order, Mr. President, that this is a close tick.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order, Mr. President, that this is a clean piece of general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I do not need to argue it, because the terms of the amendment which has just been read show that plainly enough without

Mr. CLAPP. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the Department asks for this provision. not know, however, whether that makes any difference.

Mr. HALE. I understand that, but of course that does not bring the amendment within the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has examined the provision in advance

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And the Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Chair is prepared to rule against it, of cours

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that the proposed amendment is subject to the point of order interposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, may I urge the Senator from Maine not to make that point of order? I do so in the interest of the Government itself. This great reclamation projections of the control of the co ect now going on in Nevada is the reclamation of land belonging to the United States Government, which is about to be turned into homes for home seekers. The Indians have a large reservation in that vicinity. Arrangements have been made to divide up that reservation and allot the lands to the Indians. lands will be of almost no service to the Indians in their present condition, for they have no water. In order to supply them with water, it is necessary to bring them under the present irrigation project that is now approaching completion. It is proposed, therefore, to substitute for their present large holdings of land, to allot to these Indians very much smaller holdings. The Government would supply to each one of these smaller holdings water from this irrigation project, and thus enable the Indian to cultivate the soil allotted to him.

It also provides that, so far as the Indian's smaller allotment is concerned, he shall not be called upon to make the compensatory payment required by the reclamation act. Under that act every settler is compelled to pay back to the Government a portion of the cost of reclamation in ten annual installments; but it would be obviously unfair to impose that payment upon the Indians to whom these lands have been allotted. It is therefore proposed that, so far as these small allotments are concerned, compensatory payments to the reclamation fund shall be paid out of the General Treasury. That is done under the general power and control of the General Government over these Indians as the wards of the nation.

The expenditure involved, as I understand, will be very small. The improvement is of the greatest importance. It is of the highest importance to the Indians, who are about to be released practically from the control of the Government by the destruc-tion of this reservation, that they should have immediate means of livelihood. The Senator from Maine will recognize the fact that if these Indians are simply turned out upon the sagebrush, upon desert land, and obliged to depend upon such allotments for support, they will make a very meager support; in fact, they will be unable to make any support. In the interest, therefore, of the Indians it is important that this matter should be immediately adjusted.

This amendment has not been urged by any of the Senators or by the Member from the State of Nevada. It came originally from the Indian Office in the interest of the Indians. that the interest of the Government, the interest of the Indians, and the interest of the entire reclamation project would be prejudiced by postponing legislation upon this subject.

Mr. HALE. I wish I could see my way clear to withdraw the point of order. But the trouble with an amendment of this kind, and with this amendment, is that it is a radical change of the irrigation law passed by Congress, and there is no opportunity for the Senate to fairly consider it as an amendment upon an appropriation bill.

The object and purpose of an appropriation bill, Mr. President, is not to carry such provisions as this, but simply to make appropriations to carry out existing law.

The Senator from Nevada advances some good reasons for the passage of a bill covering this point. We are now at the There has been a long session and this sesend of a Congress. sion; there is a Committee on Irrigation for the consideration of such subjects-matter as this, and I do think that Senators interested in a project of this kind ought to have invoked the jurisdiction of the Committee on Irrigation to report any change of the irrigation law that Congress has established. I can not withdraw the point of order for the reason that there is no chance to fairly consider the matter on this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, would it not satisfy the Senator from Maine to suspend for a moment the making of his point of order and have this amendment referred to the Committee on Irrigation of the Senate? Then, if passed on favorably by that committee, let the proposition be considered on its merits by the Senate later on in connection with this bill.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that we can do that. We certainly can not do that on this bill. The Senator can introduce his bill, and I think he should have done so, and have it referred to that committee. If that committee can get a bill through, that is another thing.

I think I must insist upon the point of order. We can not do anything of the kind on this bill, as the Senator will see.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of or-

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Albuquerque School," on page 89, line 12, after the name "New Mexico," to insert "$50,300;" and in line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-two thousand one" and insert "one thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., $50,300, and for pay of superintendent, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 20, to increase the appropriation for support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., etc., from $61,900 to $62,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Santa Fe school," on page 89, line 24, after the name "New Mexico," to insert "$50,300;" and in line 26, before the word "hundred," to strike cut "fifty-two thousand one" and insert "one thousand eight; " so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., $50,300, and for pay of superintendent, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to cancel the allotments made to members of the Jicarilla tribe of Indians in New Mexico, provided all the members of said tribe relinquish all their individual right, title, and interest in the allotted lands to the United States, or he may cancel any of said allotments upon the relinquishment thereof by the allottee or his heirs; and each Indian taking advantage of the foregoing provisions, and each unallotted member of the tribe, shall be allotted not exceeding 10 acres of agricultural land and not exceeding 640 acres of other land, the areas to be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he shall cause patents to issue therefor in accordance with the fifth section of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388): Provided, That in making such allotments values shall be considered so as to make the allotments uniform in value as near as practicable.

That the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of all merchantable timber on allotments herein authorized during the term these are held in trust and on the surplus lands for twenty-five years, the proceeds therefor to be expended under his direction for purposes beneficial to the individual allottees hereunder and their heirs, or for families, as he may deem best, and no part of such proceeds shall be expended for community or common benefits other than irrigation, but shall be equitably apportioned as near as may be among the Indians entitled.

The Department recommends the provision, and I think it is a very worthy one.

Mr. KEAN. The only point that could be raised—that it is general legislation,

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that again raises the question whether dealing with a specific tribe of Indians in an Indian appropriation bill intended to make appropriations for the Indian service, in determining how those appropriations shall be expended, referring not to anyone else, not even to Indians in general, but referring simply and solely to the Indians of a certain tribe and allowing said Indians a certain right and granting privileges, dealing with them particularly, is general

It has been suggested several times by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], upon the proposition of general legislation, that any law which changes in the slightest degree a general law must of necessity be general legislation, and wherever there is no law upon the subject it is general legislation. Again, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is, we will say, a new law; there is no general legislation, we will say, upon the subject; it is absolutely a new law and, being a new law, affecting only a certain tribe, by its terms declaring that it affects only a certain tribe, how can it be considered to be general legislation or even legislation affecting a general law?

I do not want to go so far, and I believe Senators generally will not go so far, as to say that every bill which affects general legislation even is in itself general legislation.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: We have, for instance, a general law providing that any soldier who served ninety days in the civil war may obtain a pension under certain conditions. We introduce a special bill here for John Doe, reciting that he has served but eighty-nine days and that he shall be placed under the provisions of the pension laws, notwithstanding the fact that he has only served eighty-nine So far as that special bill is concerned, it necessarily varies the general law so that it takes in one individual and one individual only. We are passing these special bills every day, and every one that we pass widens or changes the general law, so that it affects a particular individual; but that certainly the Senator would not claim to be general legislation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. What the Senator is saying now is just what I want to be done. When we vary the general pension law by applying it to a single pensioner, one after another, in hundreds of cases, we submit separate bills. We do not try to put them all in an appropriation bill, because if we did, they would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me correct the Senator right there. Mr. HALE. I do not think that the Senator's contention is sound.

Mr. McCUMBER. The place where we put it does not determine whether it is general or special legislation. If it would change a general law, it would change it whether it comes be-fore us independently or whether it is placed upon an appropriation bill. To determine whether it is general or special we must determine not on what bill it is attached or whether presented separately, but what the effect of it may be.

Mr. HALE. That is just where it arises under the provision of the rule that general legislation shall be excluded, and the question whether a proposition affecting one man is or is not general legislation does not arise except when it is sought to be put upon an appropriation bill. However, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose that in this bill we should insert provision that a certain Indian of a certain tribe who had been wounded in the line of his duty as policeman should draw a pension, should come under the pension laws. Would that be a change of the general pension laws?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, on an appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I contend is that it does not make any difference whether it is on an appropriation bill or not. The proposition is that a general law can not be attached to an appropriation bill, and it does not become a general law because it is so attached any more than it would be a general tached or whether it comes in independently can not govern the question of its character as being general or special legis-

It seems to me that dealing directly with a tribe and for the purpose of benefiting that tribe and dealing with the subject which is dealt with on the Indian appropriation bill, it is not general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I can see a vast difference between placing a provision in an appropriation bill to pension an Indian, which I think is clearly objectionable, and a provision that simply disposes of the property of Indians which they have received and held under treaty.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be objectionable because it would not be pertinent to anything that is in the bill, but not because it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. It would differ materially from this. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from North Dakota has raised this point, because the Senate may as well consider it now as at any other time. The rules of the Senate and the course of legislation do not in any way recognize what is claimed here as special legislation. The distinction is broad and clear between private legislation and general legislation, and although a subject-matter may be confined to one State or one class or one community and does not apply to the whole United States, the Congress in enacting it is not passing private legislation, but general legislation, and not special legis-The volumes of the statutes make the division, and it does not follow because an amendment to an appropriation bill does not cover the whole country that it is, therefore, special legislation and can be considered. It is dealing with general law. If you may divide a subject-matter that has been embraced by general legislation and take up piecemeal separate portions of it and report it upon an appropriation bill, you may thus emasculate the rule as to general legislation.

Take, for instance, the great question of irrigation. That was a subject in which the West was interested, and not the country generally, but nobody raised the point that it was not general legislation. It confined itself to a portion of the United States, but it was passed by Congress as general legisla-If you can take that general law of irrigation, on the ground that it is special legislation, and provide on an appropriation bill for certain propositions relating to irrigation and making law only applying to one reservation or to one Territory or to one State or to a group of States, you have destroyed the whole theory upon which "general legislation" is placed in the rules.

The Senator from North Dakota has before made the point that it is not general legislation, because it does not apply to Within the last few years all the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will permit me, I have made no such claim.

Mr. HALE. I think the RECORD will show that the Senator has made that point. But I leave that.

Take the instance of legislation we had upon Alaska. It applied not to Maine, not to Wisconsin, not to Minnesota, not to the Dakotas. It applied to one single and distinct body of land, territory belonging to the United States. But nobody ever claimed that it was special legislation. Should we now attempt in an appropriation bill to change that legislation by certain new provisions of law relating to certain matters in Alaska and only to certain matters in Alaska, just as these matters refer only to a particular tribe or a reservation, the body of our general parliamentary law would be destroyed and

I think the trouble is that Senators do not realize the purpose and object of an appropriation bill. It is in terms to appropriate money to carry out existing law, not law that does not exist, not law that is created in an appropriation bill, but existing law; and it never was intended when the rules were originally framed, when the Committees on Appropriations were created in both House and Senate, or by the old committees that had charge of appropriations, that the mission of appropriation bills should be anything else than to appropriate money to carry out existing law. All the mischief that has come by reason of these propositions and these amendments on appropriation bills has come from forgetting this fundamental and cardinal proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the

Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Certainly. Mr. HALE.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Maine suggests that appropriation bills are intended to make appropriations under existing laws. It seems to me that anyone who has paid any attention whatever to the general appropriation bills must realize that if that is the intention and the purpose it is most thoroughly and completely ignored in every Congress. hardly take up any appropriation bill which does not contain provisions not related to appropriations under existing laws or for the purpose of carrying out or enforcing existing laws. The importance of that is to show a general interpretation placed upon such bills by Congress.

When the framers of the rule used the term "general legislation" it could not have been the purpose to exclude from an appropriation bill a matter which first is germane—it must be germane—and at the same time is not general legislation. the Senator has the Revised Statutes on his desk-he has there a book that looks like it-which is intended to contain all of the general laws now in force, he will find in it no such legislation as is proposed in this amendment to the pending bill. But it is treated by the compilers of the statutes-and because Congress enacts the statutes after they have been compiled it is treated by Congress itself—as special legislation, as local in its character, not pertaining to all the country and not pertaining to all the people of the country, and therefore it is incorporated in a separate volume in which local or individual legislation is contained.

It seems to me that the point made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] is perfectly valid. It is not general legislation. Ask any lawyer at first blush what he understands by "general legislation," and I think his statement would be it by "general legislation," and I think his statement would be it is legislation that refers to all the people.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it may be general legislation, although it applies simply to a genus or species, so long as it is general in its application to all those? It may still be general legislation. Thus a law that deals only with the pensions of soldiers, while it does not affect anybody but soldiers, is general legislation.

Mr. PATTERSON. It relates to all of a particular class.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and is general legislation.

I wish to explain that I do not think it must apply to everybody in the United States or in the country generally, but it must apply generally to a class or a species.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me perfectly clear that if there were an amendment added by the Senate committee to the Indian appropriation bill which related to one particular individual, and the legislation was germane to the bill, it would not be general legislation in any sense of the term.

Mr. HALE. That point is met by the rule-clause 1 of Rule

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation.

Such an amendment would be obnoxious to that clause without regard to the other point. Mr. PATTERSON. But I was speaking of legislation that does not appropriate money.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that rule refers to measures which would take money from the United States Treasury? But this is a payment out of funds belonging to the Indians themselves. It is not a general appropriation. Mr. HALE. That is another point-about the money. general provision may not contain anything about taking money from the Treasury. That is not the point raised here.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me that where I

It seems to me that where legislation refers to a group that may be distinguished, segregated, set apart, comprising relatively few of the entire population, it is not general legislation within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad the Senator has made that point, and I hope the Chair has noted it carefully, because that brings out what I have stated, that the Senator from North Dakota had made that point here and he now rather shrinks from it. The Senator from Colorado does not shrink from it. He makes the general proposition that legislation, no matter how broad it may be, establishing new law, which applies only to a distinctive class and not to all the people of the United States, is special and not general legislation. I take issue directly with the Senator on that point.

Mr. PATTERSON. With the modification made by the Senator from North Dakota it seems to me that the point is perfectly well taken. Any general legislation ought to be contained in the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Not necessarily. There is a great deal of general legislation that has been passed since the statutes were revised which is found in the volumes of the United States Stat-

Mr. McCUMBER. We call them "the general statutes."
Mr. HALE. We call them "general statutes." So the division is marked and clear between general and private legislation,

Mr. PATTERSON. Can the Senator state a rule under which general and private legislation may be differentiated—some rule by which the Chair would be able to determine unerringly whether legislation is general or private? I will not use the word "private." The language of the rule is "general legisla-Can the Senator state a rule by which the Chair can unerringly hold that a certain proposition is or is not general

Like any other provision of the rules, that must depend upon the judgment and the discretion of the presiding officer when the appropriation bill is before the Senate. He must settle that. The framers of the rule, when they put the restriction in the rule-and this rule was framed, I think, by the Committee on Rules when my colleague was chairman of it—did not consider that it was necessary to make a bill of items of what constituted general legislation; but the line had been up to that time so well recognized between general and private legislation that the Committee on Rules did not think it necessary to do any more than to declare in terms, in order to protect appropriation bills, that general legislation should not be incorporated in them. And that is left-

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to make just a suggestion to the Senator from Maine, and then I will refrain from interrupting him further.

The rule provides that legislation which is general and not germane is inimical to general appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. No; the provision Mr. PATTERSON. It is not at It is not any proposition that is not general which may be added to an appropriation bill. It must be germane to the bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator now is thinking about another clause of the rule, which has nothing to do with this clause.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am thinking now of the third clause of the sixteenth rule, and that is the rule which provides against general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I think it is on page 15 of the Manual, or page 16-one or the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. Page 16.
Mr. PATTERSON. That legislation must first be germane.

Mr. HALE. That is distinct.

Mr. PATTERSON. And then it shall not be general.
Mr. HALE. Yes; but the two are entirely distinct.
Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; you may have private legislation, which, if it was not germane, would have to be ruled out in all probability, and you may have an amendment germane and yet proposing general legislation, and it would be ruled out under But where you have a proposition that, first, is germane to the bill, and then that does not come under the head of general legislation, so that it affects the country at large, it seems to me it was intended by the framers of the rule, and by Congress in adopting it, and in the almost uniform practice of Congress since I have been in this body, as an examination of the appropriation bills for many years back will disclose, that such amendments belong to the bill and shall be passed upon by the body of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator makes that point distinct-that the provision must apply to all the country, or it is not general legislation.

When the Senator from Colorado rose I was coming to another point which he suggests very properly and fittingly. says that observation of the appropriation bills will sustain him in the proposition that just such provisions as this or kindred to it have been enacted upon appropriation bills. They have been. They have been incorporated upon a great many appropriation bills by unanimous consent, where no point of order was raised, as is raised here; and that does not carry the force of the settlement of the question except to the extent that the Senate has submitted to it.

The other day, in considering this bill, I withdrew the point of order in one case, a point of order which I believed was clearly strong and good parliamentary law, because I was convinced, on the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill, that it was one of those cases where we agree, and nobody op-poses it, to putting provisions on an appropriation bill that do not under this rule and this body of rules belong there. We are doing that all the time. We shall do it again at this session. Other committees besides the Committee on Indian Affairs will report such amendments. Quite likely in some rare cases the Committee on Appropriations will do so, calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment is subject to the

I may as well say that the reason why the point is made here and is insisted upon with as much force as we can put behind it is that this bill for the first time is covered and loaded and shingled with these amendments that are not proper here. It is wholesale. The chairman seems very fair and reasonable in his conduct of the bill, and when points of order are made that clearly appeal to him, he has not insisted that an undue time shall be taken up in discussion. I do not know how it is that all these matters came upon this bill, but I do say that in my experience in Congress I have never seen an appropriation bill which, from start to finish, from the first page to the end, had so many propositions of this kind, amendments subject to the point of order, some of them carrying immense sums of money, some of them reviving old claims, several of them being mere private claims, which go out upon the rule being invoked. It is be-cause the bill is so dangerous in that regard and different from every other bill that I have ever seen that Senators, not only I myself, but other Senators, old Senators, have invoked the rule. I am not charging the chairman of the committee with being unduly in favor of any of these things. I think he is not. I think he is conducting the bill with great wisdom and discretion, as he always does.

Mr. President, I accept the distinction, the point as made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], that any legislation on an appropriation bill is not general legislation unless it is general in its application to all the people of the United States. I am entirely willing to take the ruling of the Chair upon that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator from Maine, in discussing this question, had given us his definition of the word "general" as applied to legislation, and the word "special" as applied to legislation. Necessarily the one is intended to be the opposite of the other.

Mr. HALE. Where does the Senator get the word "special?"
Mr. McCUMBER. I take "special" as being the opposite in meaning of the word "general."
Mr. HALE. No; "private" legislation is the opposite. The

Mr. HALE. No; "private" legislation is the opposite. The rules never have said anything about "special" legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I differ with the Senator upon the question whether the word "private" is the opposite of the word "general." The word "general" has its opposite word, which would be "special." The Senator gives the opposite meaning of the word "general" as though it were "private," which is more restricted than the word "special." Suppose a treaty had been made with a tribe to sell its reservation, and that treaty been made with a tribe to sell its reservation, and that treaty with that particular tribe were incorporated in one of these appropriation bills, as we have from time to time done. Is that treaty general legislation? Is that agreement with a special tribe general legislation?

Mr. HALE. That is covered by clause 4, which says

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be irrelevant, but we must not confuse the idea of general legislation with irrelevant legislation. There may be many pieces of legislation attempted to be placed in this bill, which possibly would be open to the objection of absolute irrelevancy, but that does not make them general legislation.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me-

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The rules are very exhaustive. They provide for all cases that may arise. The question the Senator has submitted about a treaty being general legislation is taken care of by clause 4 of this rule, which says:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The rules are exhaustive upon everything. They deal with general legislation; they deal with private legislation, and there is nowhere in the body of the rules, from beginning to end, any reference to or any use of the word "special." It has been introduced by Senators themselves who are seeking for a distinction which will relieve them from the general proposition about general legislation. The rules deal only with "general"

and "private."

Mr. McCUMBER. I am trying as much as I can to get at the meaning of the word "general." I want to separate it entirely from the question of relevancy or irrelevancy. The opposite of the word "private" is not "general." It is "public." We have "public" and "private." We have "general" and "special." Neither of them is synonymous with the other of the opposite side by any means.

Mr. HALE. I think if the committee had selected the term

"public legislation" it would have covered. I am glad the Senator used that illustration. I think if the committee had used the term "public legislation," as opposed to "private, the two would cover everything; but they chose to put in the word "general."

Mr. McCUMBER. You can see the difference. Private legislation might refer to one individual. Thus a private pension bill would be the proper name for a bill to pension a single individual. But that is more restricted than "special legislation." We may have special legislation, because it deals with a limited or in a special manner with a special subject. Let us take the word "general" as it is given in the dictionary. The first definition is:

Of or pertaining to genus or kind; pertaining in common to all as of a class, group, order, race, or community.

It is to be general as applied to any of those; that the law would be general. Although it would affect only one community, or one race, or one class, or one group, it would still be of a general character.

Taking the third definition, it is as follows:

Large or unlimited in scope, meaning, or contents; not restricted in application or jurisdiction; opposed to particular or special.

In brief, to be opposed to particular or special-

Hence, indefinite or vague.

Now, coming down to the synonyms, we have the following: Common, universal. Universal applies to all, without exception; general applies to all with possible or comparatively slight exceptions.

That would bring it within the general definition. The only way that we can understand clearly the meaning of a word is to also comprehend the true meaning of the word of exactly the opposite intent. Taking the two, special and general, and the definition as we understand it of the word "general," it seems to me that it is only general legislation when it applies generally and universally to a class or to a kind. If it is brought into smaller dimensions than a class or kind, but applies to a few or to a special group or subdivision, then it ought to be considered as special legislation and not general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question, not in any spirit of criticism, but to get his specific view. Where there is a treaty with an Indian tribe. does he regard legislation designed to allot the lands and close up the affairs of that tribe as objectionable and subject to the point of order on an Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I should consider that, although it applies only to one tribe, it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. I will state the reason why I asked the question. It is true that this bill contains a good deal of constructive legislation, aside from the matter of some claims. The presence of the constructive legislation is due largely to the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I do not say that to place the responsibility on him, because I had supposed that legislation designed to close up the affairs of a tribe who held their reservation under treaties would be proper in the bill. It has been customary. There has got to be a great deal of additional legislation of this kind as the time approaches when the affairs of the tribes are wound up and closed up. For that reason I asked the question, because if that is the case there should be bills brought in for that specific purpose instead of putting them into this bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has struck what, Mr. President, is the remedy. There is a Committee on Indian Affairs for the purpose of considering precisely such matters.

The Senator uses another word that is almost as broad as the term "general legislation" when he says there is a good deal of constructive legislation upon this bill. Now, appropriation bills are not for constructive legislation.

I hope hereafter in the early stages of the session the Committee on Indian Affairs-for it has got to have these subjects before it, as the Senator says, in closing up Indian affairs in great volume and extent—will, in its meetings, deliberate and decide upon proper bills for this purpose and bring them in here, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] the other day brought up a measure, and he reported from his committee this morning a measure adding eight or nine or ten million dollars to the artillery branch of the service. He did not claim that that was proper on an appropriation bill, because it so distinctively and only applied to one class—a portion of the Army, as a reservation embraces a portion of the Indians-but he did what I hope the Senator will do hereafter. He reported his bill from his committee as a separate measure, had it considered by the Senate, and it passed both bodies and was approved by the President. Then he reported, as he had a clear right to do under the rules, a provision in the Army appropriation bill for the appropriation of the money necessary to carry out the existing law.

If the Senator from Wyoming had put that proposition on the Army appropriation bill as an amendment, I certainly would have made the point of order against it, and no doubt it would have been sustained. It was a provision that did not apply to the whole Army, but only to one branch of it; it was special; it was segregated; it was a part of the running establishment; and he did what I hope the Committee on Indian Affairs will do hereafter. I hope they will report the bills which involve legislation and involve the appropriation of money and let the two Houses pass them, and then we will provide the money on the appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I perhaps ought to add a word, that there may be no misunderstanding of my reference to the Commissioner. He ought not to be in any manner responsible for any mistake that has been made in placing this provision on the bill. There has always been a great deal of legislation on the Indian appropriation bill. So far as placing what I have termed "constructive legislation" on it is concerned, while the legislation was suggested by him I was responsible for placing it on the bill. He is laboring very hard and very earnestly to gradually close up and bring to a termination the affairs of the Indian tribes; he desires to get some of this constructive legislation; and it was my own misapprehension of what perhaps is the strict rule that resulted in this class of legislation being placed on the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I would not indulge at all in this controversy were it not that there are some matters in the bill in which my colleague is interested, and also some matters in which at least one of my constituents is interested. Whenever the decision is made I suppose it will be an end to all controversy, and we are really saving time by taking a little time now. At least that is the way I shall feel whenever the decision of the Chair is made.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to definitions found in Bouvier's Law Dictionary. It seems to me they are applicable and that they solve the matter on the side the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] is contending for. I read from page 877 of 1 Bouvier:

The later constitutions of many of the States place restrictions upon the legislature as to passing special laws in certain cases. In some States there is a provision that general laws only may be passed in cases where such can be made applicable. Provisions requiring all laws of a general nature to be uniform in their operation do not prohibit the passage of laws applicable to cities of a certain class having not less than a certain number of inhabitants, although there be but one city in the State of that class.

With that class of legislation we are all familiar.

The wisdom of these constitutional provisions has been the subject of grave doubt.

See Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, etc.

When thus used the term "general" has a twofold meaning. With reference to the subject-matter of the statute, it is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private."

Citing a number of cases and Sedgwick on Statutory Limita-

But with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate it is opposed to "local," and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction.

Citing a number of authorities.

Further, when used in antithesis to "special," it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class.

Citing a number of authorities.

When the constitution forbids the passing of special or local laws in specified cases, it is within the discretion of the legislature to decide whether a subject not named in the constitution is a proper subject for general legislation. The fact that a special law is passed in relation thereto is evidence that it was thought that a general law would not serve, and in such a case clear evidence of mistake is required to invalidate the enactment.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that when the term "general legislation" is used it is opposed, so far as the operation of the legislation is concerned, to local, and it means that the statute or the legislation to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction. Now, the whole of the United States and outlying territory is the territory that is subject to the jurisdiction of Congress, and it follows almost as a corollary to my mind that where legislation affects simply a group of persons, as a tribe or a band of Indians, or the particular land that is occupied by a tribe or a band of Indians, that that legislation from the very necessity of the case is local legislation as distinguished from general legis-

It is true that whether an act of Congress relates to an individual or the interests of an individual or to a number of individuals it is general in so far as it is an act of Congress. there are but a dozen individuals who may be designated by name, and the legislation is intended to confer some special benefit upon that dozen or to deprive them of some privilege or right that they had theretofore enjoyed, it is general in the sense that it is a law that is passed by the lawmaking power of the country, but it is local so far as those people are concerned.

And more especially would it be local, Mr. President, it seems to me, if the proposed legislation related to some particular, identical piece of territory in which they had an interest, and that the legislation was intended to affect, and the legislation could only relate to that particular piece of land, without including any other than the special individuals or the par-ticular special piece of land. If that does not constitute something that is the very converse of general legislation, then I can hardly imagine what is either special legislation or private legislation.

The framers of the rules, and the Senate in adopting the rules, used the very broadest general term that could be used for the purpose of excluding proposed amendments under that particular rule, general legislation, legislation that is applicable not to any particular piece of land, but legislation that is applicable to the entire country. If there were a number of cities or towns scattered all over the country and the legislation related to those towns scattered all over the country, then it would be general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary

Mr. PATTERSON. But, as I understand, the particular item that is now in controversy and all the rest that may be challenged by the Senator from Maine, they relate to specific segregated portions of land, and they relate to specific bands or tribes of Indians, one band or one tribe, and, since only general legislation in the broad sense is excluded under the paragraph of the rule that is applicable in this case, it seems to me that whatever does not come under the head of general legislation, however else it may be designated, whether as private legis-lation or special legislation, is not inimical to the rule. If that is the doctrine to be applied, it seems to me that the point of order made by the Senator from Maine is not well taken.
Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, it seems to me that the matter under discussion here is not one to be decided by the dictionary or by a critical examination of the meaning of words. What was the intent of the Committee on Rules when it framed these rules and what was the intent of the Senate when they As I have always understood them in referwere adopted? ence to appropriation bills, the words were employed for the purpose of making appropriation bills appropriation bills and nothing else. So that Senators who were not interested in that particular class of appropriations might be absent without fearing that legislation would take place in the bill which would be against anything which they believed and thought ought to pass.

I know that in the Indian appropriation bills especially there has been at different times just that class of legislation which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] calls local, because it applies to a particular tribe or particular piece of land; and yet it is well known that some of the greatest outrages that have ever been perpetrated upon the Indians have been done under these general clauses.

There are in the United States a number of highly intelligent, philanthropic people, men and women, who meet every year at Lake Mohonk or other places for the purpose of looking after these wards of the nation, and they discover that, rigid as may have been their examination of the files of the two Houses of Congress, there has been put in by the Senate, by way of amendment, which seldom comes to the public and goes to the newspapers, after the bill has passed the House, clauses which accomplish just the outrage that they are organized to prevent.

Mr. CLAPP. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly. Mr. CLAPP. Of course these suggestions probably do not apply to any recent legislation.

Mr. DEPEW. I will say to the Senator I have in mind the tribe of Poncas and the legislation in respect to them, which was about as bad as anything which is alleged against the actions in the Kongo Free State.

Mr. CLAPP. When was the Poncas legislation passed? Mr. DEPEW. Ten or twelve years ago.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not make it as any criticism, but I want to correct the Senator--I am not doing it to oppose the Senator's argument as to special legislation—but the worst legislation that was ever passed occurred in general legislation. It was the law under which, inadvertently perhaps, the United States Government released all control over every Indian who took an allotment, so far as regulating the sale of liquors to Indians was concerned. That was general legislation passed in 1887.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, if he will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly. Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if, also, the law removing restrictions generally was not done by general law and not on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir. Mr. McCUMBER. The law known as the "Curtis law."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly. Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is mistaken about the Curtis law removing restrictions. The Curtis law did nothing of the kind. I simply want to make this correction so that it may be known to members of the Senate.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, if a separate bill for the specific object of taking the lands away from these Indians which the Government has assigned to them and on which they are living in comfort and happiness, and dividing it up among speculators who rush over the borders and get it, is put in a bill and passes the ordeal of committees and debate in the House and Senate, then there is an opportunity for the Senators and the Members of the House and these benevolent bodies to find out what is being done, and the chances of wrong being done under such circumstances are exceedingly limited. But when an appropriation bill has passed the House and everybody who looks into that matter interested in Indians knows what it is and it goes to the Senate there is very little scrutiny or knowledge as to what are the amendments put in here, because the general presumption is that there will not be specific legislation for special purposes.

Now, take some of the provisions which are in this bill. How do we know, without it having been properly debated, the justice or the injustice of breaking up an Indian reservation, of taking away the lands which the Government has assigned for these Indians to live upon and to have their homes, and then as an act of alleged extreme generosity allowing them a minimum, as this item does here, of 10 acres of good land and 600 acres of arid land? How do we know whether the Indian is competent to irrigate arid land? How do we know whether he is an engineer, or they have engineers among them who can provide reservoirs and ditches and all the paraphernalia necessary for making such lands valuable? If these Indians are to be assigned lands upon which they can live they ought at least to be assigned lands which they are accustomed to cultivate and know how to cultivate.

But I am opposed to all this kind of legislation in appropriation bills, whatever I might do if a bill relating to a specific subject came up, so that there would be an opportunity for those who are interested, who understand these questions, and know about the Indians, their needs, and wants could be heard.

Now, I come back to my original proposition, that general and special legislation under the rule prohibiting general legislation in appropriation bills means that these bills should make appropriations to carry out the specific purposes which these bills are designed, and that anything else is general legislation and falls under the prohibition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has given us another idea of what was intended by the word "general." In substance, he states that the object of the rule was that no legislation other than mere appropriations should be considered in appropriation bills.

I should like to ask the Senator, then, why an intelligent House and Senate, if they intended that there should be no legislation, did not say "no legislation" instead of saying "no general legislation?" The very fact that they used the words that there should be "no general legislation" in the bill carries with it the idea that they considered that there might be special legislation other than the mere fact of an appropriation. Otherwise it would have been easy to have said that no legislation other than that of a mere appropriation shall be considered in appropriation bills. If that had been their intention it was the easiest thing in the world to have said it. The very fact that they did not say so, but added another term, "general," presupposes therefore that it would not exclude the word "spe-" and also presupposed that the intent of Congress-was that special legislation might be inserted in these appropriation

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I make the point of order that it is general leg-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has given this subject as much consideration as has been possible since the bill was presented to the Senate. He has examined the practice and proceedings of the Senate during a number of sessions of Congress when Indian appropriation bills have been under consideration. He has discovered that the divergence of view disclosed this morning in the debate is not entirely new.

The Senate has frequently put upon appropriation bills amendments proposing general legislation clearly in contravention of the rule. This has been done without objection, and therefore affords no guide for the ruling of the Chair.

The precise definition of what is general legislation within the intendment of the rule is not to be found, so far as the Chair has been able to discover, in connection with bills such as the one under consideration.

The Chair has examined the language of the amendment with some attention, and it seems as though it is, in effect, an amendment of the act passed in 1887, and that it falls within the classification of general legislation. It does not seem to the Chair that it is fairly embraced within the definition which is generally entertained with respect to the subject-matter of an appropriation bill.

It seems to the Chair that the amendment is clearly in contravention of the rule of the Senate, and the point of order is therefore sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Senecas of New York (treaty)," at the top of page 92, to strike out:

For interest, in lieu of investment, on $75,000, at 5 per cent, per act of June 27, 1846, $3,750.

For interest, at 5 per cent, on $43,050 transferred from the Ontario Bank to the United States Treasury, per act of June 27, 1846, $2,152.50.

And to insert .

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Seneca Indians of New York the sum of $118,050, being the value of the stocks held in trust for the Indians and taken by the United States and canceled under authority of the act of June 27, 1846 (9 Stat. L., p. 35), said amount to be deposited in the Treasury to draw interest at 5 per cent per annum until Congress shall direct the principal to be paid to the Indians, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the Seneca tribe of New York the said sum, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201).

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from New York if he desires to interpose the objection to this provision?

Mr. DEPEW. What is the provision? My attention was diverted for a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. The provision on page 92. It is of the same character as the one we have been discussing; but in this case it relates to the New York Indians. 'If the Senator from New York does not wish to raise the point of order, I raise the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. HALE. It is of the same kind as the other.
Mr. CLAPP. I want to call attention to the wo

I want to call attention to the word "directed," on page 92, line 11. I had intended to move to strike that out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment of the committee, proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 92, line 11, it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the words "and directed;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to place on the books of the Treasury, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. So far as the item under consideration is concerned, I do not know where it came from; but certainly no one has appealed to me on the subject, and I have not read it closely enough to know whether the objection of the Senator from North Dakota is valid or not; but if it comes within the opinion which I have heretofore expressed, I think it ought to go out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the legislation seems to be entirely the same as that on page 90. That on page 90 was to correct errors where there have been errors, and matters somewhat complicated in allotment by cancellation of the allotments and reallotting. This is to change general laws in exactly the same way. I believe that both amendments are really good legislation and proper legislation. I therefore withdraw the point of order, feeling that the amendment should go through, because it is proper in this case, as it was in the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota withdraws the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I will suggest that that amendment might be passed over to allow the Senator from New York [Mr. Depew] an opportunity to look it up and familiarize himself with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota wish the amendment passed?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no; let the reading of the bill proceed.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 93, line 1, after the word "all," to strike out "$11,902.50" and insert "$124,-050;" so as to read:

In all. $124,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Cherokee School," an page 93, line 12, after the name "North Carolina," to insert "$26,820;" and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty cight thousand these burdends and to strike out "twenty-eight thousand three hundred and twenty" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 160 pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., $26,820, and for pay of superintendent, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," on page 93, after line 23, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cause an additional allotment of not less than 2½ acres nor more than 10 acres of timber land to be made to each member of the Standing Rock band of Sloux Indians, to whom allotment is made under the act of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sloux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes:" Provided, That this act shall benefit those members only who are alive and in being at the close of the work of allotting said Indians under said act of March 2, 1889, and said additional allotments shall be subject to the provisions of the said act of March 2, 1889, and the amendments thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, after line 16, to insert: That article 3 of the act approved April 27, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 321), modifying and ratifying the agreement with the Indians of Devils Lake Reservation, in North Dakota, is hereby so far modified so as to permit the payment of the annual installments provided for in said article to be made in the month of April of each year, instead of

Mr. HALE. That only operates to change the time of payment?

Mr. CLAPP. That is all. I move that the word "so," at the beginning of line 22 of the amendment, on page 94, be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 94, line 22, after the word "modified," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the word "so;" so as to read:

Is hereby so far modified as to permit the payment, etc. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 95, after line 3, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, with the consent of the Indians to be obtained in such manner as he may deem best, to cause an allotment of 80 acres to be made from the lands of the Fort Berthold Reservation, including the lands to be restored, to each member of the several tribes belonging on and occupying said reservation, now living and to whom no allotment has heretofore been made; and where any allotment of less than 80 acres has heretofore been made, the allottee, if now living, shall be allowed to take an additional allotment, which with the land already allotted shall not exceed 80 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fort Totten School," on page 95, line 22, after the word "Dakota," to insert "$54,575;" and in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-six thousand two hundred and seventy-five" and insert "one thousand seven hundred;" so as to make the clause

For support and education of $25 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Fort Totten, N. Dak., $54,575, and for pay of superintendent, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Wahpeton School," on page 96, line 7, after the name "North Dakota," to insert "$16,800;" and in line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eighteen thousand three" and insert "one thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Wahpeton, N. Dak., $16,800, and for pay of superintendent, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, after line 12, to insert: For sinking and constructing a well and necessary machinery or apparatus for supplying said school with water therefrom, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for the support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Wahpeton, N. Dak., from $20,300 to $35,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," at the top of page 97, to insert:

That the act of June 5, 1906, entitled "An act to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the allotment of those children of enrolled members of the Klowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes who were not allotted under the provisions of said act because they were not of known Indian parentage: Provided, however, That the total number of allotments made hereunder shall not exceed twenty-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 19, to insert:

That all restrictions as to sale and encumbrances as to 40 acres each of the lands heretofore allotted in Oklahoma to No wa hi, Darwin Hayes, Red Plume and Shoe, Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, are hereby removed

Mr. CLAPP. It is due to the Commissioner to say that he has filed a protest against that amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under public law No. 149, approved May 8. 1906, the parties named in this amendment have the right to go before the Secretary of the Interior and if they make a proper showing they may receive a patent. I think for that reason the amendment should be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 98, after line 4, to insert:

to insert:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $215,239, the same being the difference between 32½ cents per acre heretofore paid to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians in the Territory of Oklahoma and the amount realized by the United States for their surplus land in Oklahoma, the said sum to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Pah-ke-tah and Martin J. Bentley, the authorized representatives of said Indians, through any national bank by them designated; the said sum to be immediately available and the indorsements of the warrant issued in payment thereof to be deemed to be a receipt in full for all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States, and said payment shall be considered and deemed a final settlement of all claims of every kind whatsoever of said Indians against the United States, and severy kind whatsoever of said Indians against the United States, and severy kind whatsoever of said Indians against the United States, and severy kind whatsoever of said Indians against the United States, and the severy sevences purporting to have been executed and acknowledged in the Republic of Mexico, of lands situated in Oklahoma and heretofore allotted to Mexican Kickapoo Indians now nonresident in the United States, and if the said conveyances or any of them appear to have been procured by fraud or fraudulently executed he shall, by his assistant specially employed, appear and defray the costs of proceedings in the proper courts on behalf of said Indians and their trustees to cancel and to set aside said conveyances and to clear the title of said Indians and their trustees to said land from any and all cloud thereon, the result of such fraudulent conveyances. He is further directed to prosecute in the proper courts any and all parties to said fraudas, and he is authorized to employ for said purposes some suitable attorney as his assistant who has the confidence of said Indians. Mr. HALE. I do not know much, if anything, about the merits of this amendment, but I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provision in the first clause of Rule XVI. It is not such a provision as we have been before discussing. It is as follows:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Of course the amendment is subject to that point. As to the merits of the claim I do not know anything whatever.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before I discuss the amendment at all, I wish to suggest that on line 1, page 99, after the word "Mexico," the words "or elsewhere" be inserted.

This claim is based, as partially appears from the language of the amendment, upon the sale of land by the Government that the amendment, upon the safe of land by the Government that it acquired from the Indians under a treaty. My idea was that that relieved it of the objection, and as to that point I was favorable to placing it in the bill. It is a matter in which the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is very much interested, and as we have passed several other matters in the bill, osted, and as we have passed several other matters in the bill,
I suggest that for the present we pass the pending amendment.
Of course, if we reach it finally before he returns to the Senate, we will have to dispose of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.
Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator asks that that amendment be passed over, I have here a very brief statement of the question, which I should like to have the Secretary read. will give us in a nutshell the whole matter. It is only two

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

The Kickapoo Indians, to which the pending bill relates, and now known as the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, is that majority division of the Kickapoo Indian tribe referred to in the fourth article of the treaty of June 28, 1862, and who elected to emigrate to the Indian Territory and who afterwards, during the civil war, went to Mexico and became known as the Mexican Kickapoos.

Speaking abstractly, these Indians had an absolute title to more than 750,000 acres of land in eastern Kansas. By the treaty of 1862 this tract was reduced to 150,000 acres, and out of that a diminished reserve was set aside for those who elected to remain in Kansas, leaving 123.832 acres.

was set aside for those 123,832 acres.

was set aside for those who elected to remain in Kansas, leaving 123,832 acres.

A stipulation contained in article 4 of the treaty of 1862 provided that this land should be sold at not less than $1.25 an acre, and that the sum so received ($167,290) should be invested in Indian Territory land, and the lands which were purchased and upon which these Indians were settled in conformity with the said article 4 of the treaty of 1862 were obtained from the Creek and Seminole Indians at 30 cents per acre. And while the United States should have purchased 557,633 acres, the amount actually purchased and set aside for these Indians by Executive order was 206,466 acres.

In 1891, by an alleged treaty, the Kickapoos ceded to the United States 183,965 acres, for which the United States paid them 224 cents an acre and which was sold by the United States for $1.50 per acre, which would have left a balance due the Kickapoo Indians of $215,239.

Had the United States fully and honestly complied with the terms of the Iteraty of 1862 these Kickapoos would have been entitled to the full proceeds of the 123,832 acres at $1.25 an acre. These lands were sold to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railway Company, and had the Indians received the quantity of land due them in the Indian Territory the acreage would have amounted to $737,948. By any consistent line of computation the Government of the United States owes these Indians the above-cited difference, growing out of the last two treaties made with them. In addition to which in law and in equity, and as held in the New York Indian case and others, these Indians are entitled to the difference between 50 cents an acre and $1.25 an acre on 600,000 acres of land ceded by them under the terms of the treaties of 1862 and 1864, or a total of $1,188,448.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to vertex that this items acres and acres of land ceded by them under the terms of the treaties of 1862 and 1864, or a total of $1,188,448.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to request that this item go over?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. Mr. LONG. Before that is done, I ask, in connection with the paper that has just been presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], that a letter from the Com-missioner of Indian Affairs, found on page 66 of the report, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. I would call the attention of the Senator to the fact that on page 61 of the report begins the discussion of this matter and includes the law in question. Before it goes over

Mr. KEAN. Why not put the whole of it in the Record?
Mr. CLAPP. It is already in the report.
Mr. KEAN. Yes; but if part of it is going to be printed in

Mr. CLAPP. Very well. Then, I will ask that the report on this question, commencing with the word "Oklahoma," on page 61 of the report, and going down to the word "Osages," on page 73, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

The Chair hears none, and permission is granted. The matter referred to is as follows:

OKLAHOMA—KICKING KICKAPOOS—HISTORY OF THAT TRIBE OR BAND OF INDIANS KNOWN AS "MEXICAN KICKAPOOS."

ORLAHOMA—KICKING KICKAPOOS—HISTORY OF THAT TRIBE OR BAND OF INDIANS KNOWN AS "MEXICAN KICKAPOOS."

On October 25, 1824, the Kickapoo Indians, in company with the Shawnee Indians, presented themselves to the alcalde of the city of Austin, in the then Republic of Mexico, to whom they stated that they were being crowded and pursued by the Anglo-Saxon race in the North, and that they desired to acquire land and a home with the Mexican people. This alcalde took up the matter with his superior officer, the governor of the province, representing to him that the Shawnees and those affiliating with them were both "entertaining and industrious," and he believed that if they were given some territory to the north of the capital, which was often in those days raided and harassed by the attacks of the Wacos, Comanches, and other hostile and refractory Indians who then lived in and infested that region, they would be a protection to the capital.

The King of Spain, Charles III, made a concession to these Indians, granting to them all that tract of country lying north of where the San Antonio road crosses the San Angelo River, the boundary to continue up said river to its source, then east to the Sabine River, and down said river to its source, then east to the Sabine River, and down said river to the crossing of the San Antonio road, and accordingly the Kickapoos, Shawnees, and some Cherokees and Delawares who affiliated with them, settled upon this tract, where they resided from about the year 1825 to 1842, at which time the Indians had one permanent village on this tract, containing more than 700 inhabitants.

The provisional government of Texas, during the time it was a Republic, through its duly appointed commissioners, made a treaty with these Indians wherein this grant to them was ratified. Afterwards a second treaty was made whereby the Republic of Texas acquired this tract, and the Indians were, by consent and at the expense of the State, moved to another grant of land, 40 miles square, northwest of the present capit tract and the plains of western Texas until the time of the early agitation preceding the civil war. When Gen. Sam Houston counseled with the Indians and persuaded them to move out of the State of Texas, he advised them that there was going to be war and that they had better move into the Indian Territory where they would be less liable to molestation, and accordingly the Indians moved. Some settled on the Little Red River, in southwestern Indian Territory, and the Shawnees and Kickapoos settled farther north. The Shawnees occupied the country along the Little River, which is now in Pottawatomie County, Okla., and the Kickapoos occupied the country along the North Canadian River and Squirrel Creek, between the present cities of Shawnee and Tecumseh, Okla.

The acute agitation growing out of the civil war proved exceedingly annoying to these wild Indians. First the North and then the South appealed to the Indians to take sides with them. The Shawnees, who were their neighbors on the south, were loyal to the United States; they removed to Walnut, Kans., where the able-bodied members of the tribe enlisted and became a part of Company K of the Fourteenth Kansas Cavairy. The Seminoles, who occupied the country immediately to the east, were owners of slaves, and naturally sympathized with the South. Chief Big George (Mah che ma net), of the Kickapoos, who in history should be known as their Tecumseh, said to his people: "We do not understand what these white people are wanting to fight about; none of them have injured us, and why should we stain our lands with their blood? We will leave and go to the wilds of Texas, and take no part in this fight." And accordingly the Kickapoos, in the early fall of 1862, broke camp and started south a thousand strong, their objective point being the Little Concho River, Tom Green County, Tex. In December of that year they arrived at the ranch of William Tankersley, which is 2 miles from the present town of Knickerbocker, Mr. Tankersley, who, though very old, is still living and prom Tex. In December of that year they arrived at the ranch of William Tankersley, which is 2 miles from the present town of Knickerbocker, Tex.

Mr. Tankersley, who, though very old, is still living and prominently known in Texas, states that the Kickapoos appeared at his ranch, having with them a large herd of horses, in the early winter of 1862. Though alone at his home, he states that he invited the Kickapoos to camp, which they did, getting water from his well to prepare their dinner, and that he sold them such provisions as he could spare. He had known many of them years before. They had assisted him in recovering stock that had been stolen from him by the Comanches and other thieving Indians who then roamed over the great plains of Texas. He says he invited them to make a permanent camp on his possessions on the river, 4 miles from his ranch house, and that after dinner they proceeded to the place designated by him. The next day a large company of Confederate cavalry appeared at his place, inquiring for the Kickapoos. He assured the officer in command that he need not be concerned about the Kickapoos—that they were friendly and would, during the war, be a protection to him and the neighboring ranchmen against the raids of other hostile Indians who had become emboldened because of the absence of many of the Texans. who were absent on account of the war. To this the officer replied that the Kickapoos had many fine horses, which interested him more and would be of more value to the Confederacy than Indian friendship, and he proceeded to pursue and attack the Kickapoos.

When the Indians saw the cavalry approaching, they sent forward an old buck bearing a white fiag, and accompanied by an aged squaw on either side. As soon as the cavalry came within range, this trio was ruthlessly shot down and the main camp charged upon. Though not anticipating this attack, the Indians offered stubborn resistance, and sixteen cavalrymen fell from their horses mortally wounded. Then the cavalry retreated for reenforcements, and north that of the Stera der Cammi Range. They followed down this range far into the State of Coahulla, finally taking up their home at Nacimiento.

The whole region around this place was then occupied by the fierce and murderous Lipans, Apaches, and Comanches, who had driven the Mexican population entirely out of the northern part of the State and as far south as the city of Muzquis, Mexico.

The State and Federal authorities welcomed these Indians, because they were a protection to the peaceful native population of the country and in remembrance of the protection that these same Indians had been to them when Texas was a part of the Republic, in 1824. The President, Benito Juarez, made a service grant to them and a treaty with them, by the terms of which the Kickapoos agreed to and did render the Mexican army valuable service in exterminating the Lipans and in subduing and driving the Comanches beyond the borders of Mexico.

Thus it will be seen that these Indians, from 1824 to 1874, a period of fifty years, had lived practically all their lives either in Texas, when it was a part of Mexico, or in the present Republic. As a matter of fact all the Kickapoo Indians of the age of 20 years or over, at the time of the opening of their land in Oklahoma, were native-born Mexicans. Even Big Jim (Wah pah meh ah peto) (Plain Straight Road), the last chief of the Shawnees and the grandson of Tecumseh, was born on the Angelo River, in what was then Mexico, where he died. By reason of their nativity and of race similarity and their acquisition of the Mexican language, these Indians naturally consider Mexico their home.

For several years after the civil war they continued to raid the country east of the Rio Grande River, stealing large herds of horses and cattle from Texans, which they drove across the Rio Grande River, where they were secure with their plunder. A considerable renegade element of Mexicans operated with and encouraged them in this, and they were a constant source of annoyance and danger to the border ranchme a constant source or annoyance and danger to the border ranchmen of Texas.

The cavalry stationed at Fort Bracket and Fort Stockton were kept constantly employed in pursuing these and more often other Mexican Indians who then preyed upon the west Texas ranchmen. All the cavalry could do was to follow the Indians to the Rio Grande River, and the Indians, once on the other side, were immune from further pursuit.

Major MacKenzie, then in charge of the cavalry at Fort Bracket, became so exasperated by his repeated failure to check or capture these Indians, that, without instruction from the War Department, and in total disregard of international law, he headed his command across the Rio Grande River and followed the Indians through one of the most rugged and mountainous countries on the American Continent to the Kickapoo Reservation, 150 miles from the Rio Grande River in the interior of Mexico, where he shot down and murdered the Indians who resisted, capturing the women and children and all who would submit to capture and then returning them as prisoners of war to the American side. It so happened at the time of the MacKenzie raid that a very considerable number of the male adults of the tribe were absent on a hunting expedition, and upon their return where the wife and all the children had been taken the father followed and united with his family where they were temporarily held as prisoners of war at San Antonio,

They said: "The Government has quit our agent, and we will quit the Government and go back to Mexico, where we can have our own agents and have some voice in the conduct of our affairs." And they moved, and would be contented and successful in their new location if their affairs could be taken entirely out of the hands and control of the Indian Department and they left to do for themselves as the other half of the tribe has done for forty years in Mexico.

A special agent was detailed during the summer of 1905 by the Department, who visited the President of the Republic of Mexico and the governor of the State in which the Kickapoos had their home, advising the executive officers of the Federal and State governments that a renegade element of wild American Indians was being located in their country, and against the will and wish of the United States, and that his great and good Government had sent him to warn its sister Republic of the character and of the danger of these undesirable emigrants.

This is precisely what these Indians have been about since then. At present they are considering the purchase of either the hacienda De Piedra Blanca, or that of Zamore. The first named is very suitable for cattle raising and surrounded by extensive hunting grounds in the mountains. It is situated at about 40 leagues northwest from here; the other, a very short distance from the town, is all first-class farming land, with an abundance of water for irrigation. But what can they do without having at their disposal the money to which they are entitled, or at least being sure of getting it in time? Therefore, they shall be very grateful to you, dear Father, if you will have the kindness to help them to get their money. Before concluding this letter allow me to state the following facts:

First. The Kickapoos consider Mexico as their country, in accordance with the traditions of their tribe (with regard to their traditions,
I may mention that they keep with great care two large-sized silver medals of merit with the respective diplomas, Medalla Grande de Merizo de Capitan, with which King Charles III of Spain decorated two of their chiefs).

Second. The Mexican Government under Benito Juarez rewarded their valuable services in the war against the hostile tribes of the Comanches, Lipans, and others with the grant of two squares each of land at El Nacimiento.

Third. The Oklahoma Kickapoos went to the Indian Territory a litthe more than thirty years ago, not spontaneously, but obliged by force, for in 1874 a Captain MacKenzie, making with his soldiers an inroad into this State, came to El Nacimiento when most of the Indians were absent on a hunting exposition, and after capturing all the Indians he could take by surprise, principally women and children, he took them along to the United States as prisoners of war. Of this I myself have been an eyewitness.

Thanking you beforehand for anything you

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 5, 1996.

Hon Moses E. Clapp, Chairman Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Sir: In response to the oral request of your committee, at the instance of Senator La Follette, for a report on an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill which he had in mind to propose, I beg to submit the following:

The amendment is preceded by a preamble of considerable length, and is intended for the relief of the Mexican Kickapoo tribe of Indians in Oklahoma.

By the first paragraph of the preamble the fact that the "treaty" was concluded with these Indians on the 9th of September, 1891, is stated. The second paragraph declares that these Indians ceded 183,965 acres to the United States at 32½ cents per acre. The third paragraph declares that the Government is disposing of the lands not allotted in severally to these Indians at $1.50 an acre, while the concluding paragraph of the introduction declares that the Indians concluded the "treaty" under a misunderstanding as to the price to be paid.

concluding paragraph of the introduction declares that the Indians concluded the "treaty" under a misunderstanding as to the price to be paid.

It enacts that there shall be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the amount paid the Indains and the sum that the lands would bring at $1.50 per acre, or $215,239.

It is provided that after a census is made by some person nominated by the chief and council of the tribe, whose appointment shall be indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the roll so prepared shall be made in triplicate and approved by the chief and councilmen of the tribe. It is to include the names of all members living on the 1st day of May, 1906. The census and enrollment are to be attested under oath by the persons appointed to make the census and enrollment, and it is to bear the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury before any payments are made.

It is further provided that the money appropriated shall be divided equally and distributed among the Indians so enrolled, the shares of the minors to be paid to the parents or next of kin having the care and custody of the minors, and the receipt of the United States from the payee in every instance is to be deemed a receipt in full for all demands on the United States and shall be held to be a final settlement by and between the Government and the Mexican Kickapoo tribe of Indians and all members thereof to whom payment or distribution is made.

Refore treating of the provisions of the amendment, it is deemed ad-by and between the Government and the Mexican Kickapoo tribe of Indians and all members thereof to whom payment or distribution is made.

Before treating of the provisions of the amendment, it is deemed advisable to invite attention to the history of these people and to examine the title they had to the lands for which it is now proposed to pay them. I quote the office records.

As far back as 1863 or 1864 a considerable number of the Kickapoos, then living in Kansas, being dissatisfied with the provisions of the treaty of June 28, 1862 (13 Stat. L., 623), left their reservation and went to Mexico, joining a number of their people who had gone there some years before. These Indians became a source of annoyance to the frontier settlements in Texas.

By the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. L., 359), $25,000 was appropriated to collect bands of Kickapoos and other Indians roaming on the borders of Texas and Mexico and locate and subsist them in the Indian Territory. By the act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. L., 569), $40,000 more was appropriated for the removal of these Indians to a reservation within the United States and for their subsistence thereon. The efforts made under these acts failed.

A commission was appropriated for make another attempt to remove them to some point in the Indian Territory. This commission in 1873 succeeded in removing three or four hundred of them to Indian Territory, where they were joined by 114 others in 1875. In 1876 they were reported as numbering 312, while in 1883 they numbered 418.

These Indians were located on the lands for which the amendment proposes to pay them. The tract on which they lived was bought by the United States from the Creek Indians under the provisions of the treaty concluded June 14, 1866 (7 Stat. L., 786), article 3. The Creeks were paid 30 cents per acre. After the Kickapoos were removed to this tract of land on motion of this Office the President, on August 15, 1883, by Executive order set aside the lands under consideration for the use and occupancy of the K

Here, then, is their title to the lands for which it is now proposed to pay them an additional sum over and above the price agreed on. Their care and control was a constant source of trouble and annoyance, the Indians refusing to do anything for themselves or to take any steps which would lead to the breaking up of their tribal relations and their savage mode of life.

Finally an agreement was concluded with them on September 9, 1891, which was approved by the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 557). By this agreement the Kickapoos ceded, conveyed, transferred, and relinquished, forever and absolutely, without any reservation whatever, all their claim, title, and interest of whatever kind or character to the lands in question. Each member was given the right to an allotment, and they were paid $64,650.

In this connection attention is invited to the provisions of article 5 of the agreement, specifying the amount of money that shall be paid to the Indians. It reads:

"In addition to the allotments above provided for and the other benefits to be received under the preceding articles, and as the only further consideration to be paid for the cession and relinquishment of the title above recited, the United States agree to pay the said Kickapoos," etc. As to the allegations that the representatives of the Indians concluded the agreement under a misunderstanding as to the price to be paid, I think the history of the transaction as it appears on the Government records wears enough of the guise of regularity to call for further investigation before accepting the charge of deception, either intentional or accidental, as proved. The commissioners appointed to obtain the agreement first negotiated with the Indians in Oklahoma, and the form the agreement was to take was there drawn up under date of June 21, 1891, but the matter was held open and finally completed on the 9th of September. 1891, in this city, the cause for the delay being that the Indians did not wish to take lands in severalty, but preferred a diminished re three men named therein to make an agreement for the sale of their reservation, but stipulating that the agreement should be concluded in this city. All the details of the agreement were settled at Oklahoma City except this matter of allotment or holding the reservation in severalty.

The delegation and the commissioners came here and discussed the matter fully with the Secretary of the Interior, who decided on September 9, 1891, that the Indians should take allotments in severalty. The names of fifty-one persons were then signed to the agreement by the three men alleged to be empowered to act for the tribe. Agent Patrick certified that from the best of his information the male adults of the tribe numbered about fifty, and that he was certain they did not exceed fifty.

On return of the delegation of Indians to Oklahoma, Agent Patrick reported on November 5, 1889, that a council was called, but nothing was done because of the absence of the Interpreter who accompanied the delegation; that afterwards another council was held, at which the agreement was explained and a vote taken, nearly unanimous satisfaction being expressed. Afterwards there appears to have been a split, one faction expressing itself as dissatisfied and the other as pleased with the agreement. These two factions were of nearly equal strength. From the records, therefore, it appears that the Government has twice paid for the lands, and the proposed amendment would authorize a third payment. First, it bought the lands of the Creeks at 30 cents an acre, then purchased the possessory right of the Kickapoos for a little more than 32 cents, which was stipulated to be the final and only compensation they were to receive, and the proposed amendment is designed to give them something more than $1.17 per acre additional. The committee may form its own conclusions as to how much of a title Kickapoos had to the land. All that they received was obviously a mere gratuity given them in the hope of inducing them to settle down in one place and become citizens.

The representatives of the tribe submit the following:

STATEMENT IN RELATION TO THE KICKAPOO INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA FOR THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN 32½ CENTS PER ACRE AND $1.50 PER ACRE.

Under the stipulations of an alleged treaty, concluded with the Mexican Kickapoo Indians in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, in the city of Washington, dated September 9, 1891, the Kickapoo Indians ceded to the United States 183,965 acres, at 32½ cents per acre.

These ceded lands were, under the act of March 3, 1893, open to homestead entry at $1.50 per acre; and it is the contention of the Kickapoo Indians, first, that they never made any treaty, that the alleged treaty was never in any sense understood by them, and, second,

It is contended for them that had the treaty been made understandingly larger and $1.50 per acre, received by the Government.

In support of the contention that the treaty was now a content of the treaty was now and the streaty of the Indiana gent in charge of the Indiana immediately precoding the time of the making port of the top of the Indiana gent in charge of the Indiana immediately precoding the time of the making port of the two part 1881 will be found the following paragraph:

That the Government of the United States owes these Indians the difference contended for there can be no question in equity or otherwise. Under date of April 24, 1906, Hon. Henry M. Teller, in speaking of this matter, as shown by the Congressional Record of that day, page 5889, said: "The amendment may be amenable to a point of order. The chairman of the committee seems to think it is. The Government of the United States bought this land from these people, who had the title and sold it. The Supreme Court of the United States declared in a similar case that the Government must respond as trustee to the Indians for the full amount it received for the land. Ordinary rules of law would also require the trustee to do that. The law does not allow the trustee to make any money out of the ward's property, and that is all there is in this claim."

Speaking further on the subject, Senator Clapp said: "Is not this a case where the evidence showed that a man came up here with one Indian and negotiated a treaty and got $5,000 for negotiating it, and the money was paid him by the Government?" To which Senator Tellers replied: "That is exactly what did happen in this case. It was a most scandalous affair under any phase of it." And further on in his remarks the Senator said: "But independent of that, Mr. President, the Government of the United States was dealing with its ward. It took its title from its ward and then sold the land for a different sum from what it responded to these Indians. The Supreme Court of the United States in a case some years ago entitled, as I recollect, "The New York Indians," settled that question. I need not say to the lawyers here that it is the rule that a trustee is never allowed to make any money out of the property of his ward. He is not allowed to make any money out of the property of his ward. He is not allowed to deal with them in that way."

MEXICAN KICKAPOOS.

MEXICAN KICKAPOOS.

This is a restless, suspicious, and stubborn tribe of Indians. They will sacrifice all comforts and benefits allowed them by the Government rather than deviate from their own nonprogressive notions, for fear of putting themselves in jeopardy of being civilized. They, like Big Jim's band of Upper Shawnees, refuse to patronize schools or allow themselves to be enrolled or enumerated.

The past year, owing to the failure of crops from drought, they were almost in a condition of famine, several of them actually starving to death. On representation of the facts, I obtained authority to purchase for them seven months' rations out of the funds appropriated for the support of Kickapoos. After the provisions were purchased they actually refused to enroll for the purpose of drawing the same, notwithstanding their starving condition, and the rations had to be sold. The cause of this was their fear that the enrollment might in some way serve to force an arbitrary allotment upon them.

It is extremely difficult to get them to accept any innovation into their customs and usages of living. Especially has it proven a tedious process in the case of allotments. The Cherokee Commission met this tribe in council twice in 1890 and once during the present year, at all of which councils the common result was reached—the Indians absolutely refusing to treat for the sale of the residue as surplus lands.

At the last meeting with them the argument was presented that they were situated on their present location merely by Executive order—a clemency that might at any time be revoked and the same power used to remove them to other lands; that they should take advantage of the present opportunity to secure permanent homes and a good competence arising from the sale of the surplus. To this they replied that their reservation was no larger than sufficient for their needs; that to become definitely located would be to destroy their visiting, feasts, and dances; that if they did not own the reservation it would not be right t

United States of America, ss:

On this 18th day of January, personally appeared before me the undersigned authority, Benjamin F. Beveridge, who, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

I have resided in the city of Washington, D. C., for more than thirty years last past, and was, in the month of September, in the year 1891, engaged in the hotel business in said city. That on or about the 1st of September, 1891, a delegation arrived at the Baltimore and Ohio depot, from Oklahoma Territory, consisting of two Kickapoo Indians and two white men, one of whom, I was told, was an adopted Kickapoo Indian. II's name was Joe Whipple.

I remember distinctly the arrival of said party because I sent a carriage to meet them, which the white man, John T. Hill, who seemed to be in control of the party, refused to take. He engaged another carriage and drove with his party direct to the Indian Office. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs detailed a messenger who brought the party on foot to my house.

The two white men seemed to guard and to prevent any person from talking to the two full-blood Indians who were with them. Joe Whipple, the adopted Indian of the party, told me that he and Hill had brought the Indians to Washington to try to get them to make a treaty; that he spoke the Kickapoo language, and would do the interpreting.

About the 10th of September this man Whipple became very much dissatisfied. He said that Hill was to be paid $5,000 for fooling the Indians into a treaty, and that Hill had agreed to pay him $500 and give him a good time in Washington for helping to fool the Indians; that he had misinterpreted to them and was afraid that he would be killed when he went back to the Oklahoma country for lying to them, because they did not understand they were making any treaty; that he thought Hill was acting in bad faith with him, and he said if Hill did not pay him he would go back to the Secretary of the Interior and give the whole thing away. During the winter of 1895 a delegation of Kickapoo Indians also stayed at my house. They were very persistent in declaring to me that they had not made any treaty, and said they never would take their allotments.

ART. 4. To those members of said tribe who desire to hold their lands in common there shall be set apart from the present reservation of the tribe an undivided quantity sufficient to allow one-half section to each chief, one-quarter section to each other herad of family, and 40 acres to each other person, and said land shall be held by that the whole reserve has been and set apart by the same tenure as the whole reserve has been did by set apart by the same tenure as to 1854. And upon such land being assigned in common the persons to whom it is assigned shall be held to have relinquished all title to lands assigned in severalty and in the proceeds of sales thereof whenever made, or should a majority of the adult males of said class decide to remove to the Indian country south of Kansas, then, and in that case, their new home shall not be limited to the quantity above designated, but shall be as large as can be purchased with the proceeds of the sale of the tract to which they would have been entitled had they determined to remain upon the present reservation, computing the same at the rate of at least $1.25 per acre: Provided, That the purchase of such new home shall be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and at such locality within said Indian country as he may select: And provided also, That such new home shall be purchased and the late of the survey herein provided on two years after the completion of the survey herein provided on two years after the completion of the survey herein provided on two years after the completion of the survey herein provided on two years after the completion of the survey herein provided on the years after the completion of the survey herein provided on the years after the completion of the survey herein provided on the years after the provided of the years of their full proportion share of all assets belonging to said tribe in the

Referring to the provision for bringing sult, the Commissioner says:

"I consider this legislation highly desirable because it may result in the final settlement of the question whether Martin J. Bentley, who has had charge of the Kickapoo Indians who migrated to Mexico, or the Department of the Interior, which, from conscientious motives, has done its best to defeat his plan, has presented the situation the more honestly to the public. If the charges which the Department has brought against Mr. Bentley are true, he ought to be severely punished. If the counter charges he brings against representatives of the Government are true, they ought to be severely punished. It is impossible that both sides should be right. If both are wrong, then by all means, in justice to everybody, let us find it out."

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase from Karl A. Torgerson and Charles E. Heyn 80 acres of land, more or less, now occupied by John Smith and Jane Isaac, allottees of the Grande Ronde Indian Reservation in Oregon, and to pay for said lands the sum of $650, and to use for this purpose $132.67 of the funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Grande Ronde Indians and derived from the sale of their surplus unallotted lands, and the further sum of $550, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the lands so purchased shall be patented to the said John Smith and Jane Isaac as a part of their respective allotments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Pennsylvania," on page 107, after line 7, to strike out:

For employees' quarters, $5,000.

Mr. CLAPP. At the time that amendment was made the committee had in mind the possibility of beginning at this time to gradually eliminate nonreservation schools, and Carlisle being the farthest from the Indians, it intended to commence with that school. This thought was abandoned, and if the school is to be retained, probably the House provision ought also to be retained.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask a question. I did not know that that theory had been abandoned.

Mr. CLAPP. It was abandoned as to this bill. We do not report anything of the kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is rather a surprise to me. I supposed that it was agreed upon at one time by the committee. I was not present at any time when any change was made.

I was not present at any time when any change was made.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; at a subsequent meeting of the committee it was agreed not to report it at this session.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator, then, what was done with the other school down at Hampton, Va.?

Mr. CLAPP. That was also left out.

Mr. McCUMBER. No provision was made for discontinuing either of them?

Mr. CLAPP. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 107, line 9, to reduce the total appropriation for support and education at Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., for transportation of pupils, etc., from $169,000 to $164,000.

Mr. CLAPP. That will have to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Returning to page 104, I ask that the vote by which the Senate committee amendment was adopted be reconsidered and that the amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered, and the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. KEAN. Which one is that?

Mr. CLAPP. The whole thing.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 108, after line 3. to insert:

PINE RIDGE AGENCY.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay for buildings and repairs of buildings and for water supply at Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., $10,000.

Mr. CLAPP. I move, on page 108, to strike out line 5 of the Senate amendment, including the words "authorized and directed to pay" in line 6, and that the word "for" commence with a capital F.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 108, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to the end of line 18, on page 109. Mr. CLAPP. Before we leave the Pierre School, it seems that the boiler house has burned since this bill was prepared, and I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted between lines 14 and 15, on page 109.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 109, after line 14, it is proposed to insert-

For rebuilding and repairing boiler house and installing and equipping heating and lighting plant, $4,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. That will necessitate a change of the total. In line 18. I move to amend it so as to read:

In all, $47,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 109, line 21, after the words "South Dakota," to insert "$42,150;" and in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three thousand seven hundred and fifty and insert "one thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 16, to insert:

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due, with the right of appeal as in other cases, in the claim of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sloux Indians, otherwise known as "Santee Sloux Indians," for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., p. 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed; and said act of forfeiture and all subsequent acts and parts of acts and treaties inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed for the purposes hereof: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act, and shall determine and include the present value of the same and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against such amount so found all payments or other provisions, of every name and nature, made to or for said bands by the United States, or to or for any members thereof under the authority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which are properly chargeable against said unpaid annuities.

Upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the break; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by any of the attorneys for said Indians who are thereunto authorized by contract with said Indians, on file in the Department of the Interior, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs June 29, 1897, and by the Secretary of the Interior July 12, 1897, or their assignees or associates, and the said cause shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims, and of the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed; and the court shall find and award to the attorneys of said Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians who have conducted said cause a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount of said judgment, and distribute the sum thus awarded to the attorneys and their associates as their respective interests may appear under agreements between themselves, which may be filed with the court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sum of money to the said attorneys immediately upon the rendition of final judgment and certification of the same to the Secretary of the Treasury by the cierk of the Court of Claims, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be reimbursed from the proceeds of such judgment.

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apply, out of any funds to the credit of said Indians, the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the attorneys of said Indians in said cause in the taking of testimony therein and defraying the expenses of printing incidental thereto.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the pending bill whether there is any objection to this provision going over?

Mr. CLAPP. None at all.
Mr. KEAN. I thought I would make a point of order upon it.
Mr. SPOONER. The point of order can be made just as well when it comes up again.

Mr. KEAN. Does the Senator think it had better be passed

Mr. TILLMAN. Why should we continue to defer the settlement of points of order on a matter like this? This amendment is very indefinite. It is an appropriation of an unknown sum of money, without any report to tell us just how much is involved. It may involve one million or five millions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Wisconsin wants to have it passed over of course I have no objection, but I think we might as well settle it now.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care about its being passed over.

Then let us settle it now.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a matter which affords a legitimate subject for very considerable debate.

Mr. LODGE. It is clearly out of order.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an old acquaintance,
Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. I do not care to discuss the point of order, but I do desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Till-MAN] to the fact that on page 76 and succeeding pages of the hearings before the committee there is a full account of this

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.
Mr. LODGE. I have read over what the Senator from Minnesota refers to, but it does not seem to me to meet the objection of the Senator from South Carolina at all. It does not give the amount of money that is involved here. It gives what is intended to dispose of in the way of claims.

The amendment provides that the attorneys shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, after which the United States is to be reimbursed from the award. It appropriates a sum of money to enable the attorneys to carry on the case against the Government. It seems to me it is as objectionable legislation of that kind, so far as the attorneys go, as I have ever seen.

Mr. SPOONER. The heart of it, if the Senator will permit me, is line 4, page 111, where it repeals the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why should it repeal that? Nobody tells

Mr. SPOONER. That act was passed shortly after these Indians committed the massacre at New Ulm.
Mr. TILLMAN. Why should the lawyers get in it?
Mr. SPOONER. I am not talking about that. If the suit is authorized to be brought, and lawyers are legally employed, and they conduct the suit, they should be paid. The question is whether this forfeiture ought to be repealed and the suit be permitted to be brought. That is the question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. LODGE. Time is precious at this period of the session. This amendment makes a charge on the Treasury not estimated for, and it provides for the payment of a claim. I make the point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has examined the proposed amendment with some care, and is clearly of the opinion that it is in contravention of the rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to call attention to one thing: In reporting a provision sending the claim to the court we could hardly state what the court should find. The number of acres are stated here, as well as all the other information available.

Mr. SPOONER. There is nothing due these Indians confessedly under the treaty of 1837 as annulties unless this provision is enacted into law, because it repeals the act of 1863, which, because of the murders and outrages which these bands had committed, forfeited those annuities. The Government in 1863 appropriated nearly a million dollars out of the Treasury to pay the people who still lived after the outbreak of Indians in northern Minnesota for damages which resulted from their course of conduct. It is a very large subject.
Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I think it is true that a million or a million and a half dollars was appropriated by the Federal Government and paid over to the State of Minnesota to be used by the State in liquidating the damages. But that sum was charged up against these forfeited annuities.

This is not unusual legislation, because the Sisseton and Wahpeton claim, which was very nearly in line on facts with this claim, was, in 1901, referred to the Court of Claims to re-turn findings. But owing to the indefiniteness of the reference no findings could be returned by the Court of Claims and at the last session of Congress the claim of the Sisseton Indians, under substantially the same facts and in the same language, was referred to the Court of Claims. Hence this is following the rule that then prevailed.

Now, a word or two in regard to the facts. Under the treaty of 1837, on account of the cession of lands of these Indians, I think, east of the Mississippi River, a perpetual annuity of $15,000 was agreed to be paid to them, and on account of the cession of nearly 15,000,000 acres largely in Minnesota and Iowa, under the treaty of 1851, $61,450 was to be paid annually for fifty years; and for a certain number of years those annuities On account of the massacre and the outrage that came in 1862 in the State of Minnesota, Congress forfeited those annuities. Appropriations of money have been made since for the benefit of both of these tribes. This reference is proposed to the Court of Claims to find the fact whether or not there be any moneys due these Indians. If the act of for-feiture had not been passed, something like three million, or upward of three million, dollars would be due them. But, as already stated, a million and a half dollars was appropriated by the Government and charged up to these Indians, which was paid to the settlers. Large sums of money have been, as gratuities, under treaties and voluntarily, given by the Government to these Indians to such an extent that it is claimed by the Department that more has been paid than would be sufficient to liquidate their entire claim.

Now, it is insisted (and the matter has been before the Senate, I am sure, a good many times before, and fully dis-cussed) that these facts should be determined. I have no apology to offer for the outrages that were committed by these Indians in 1862.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from South Dakota pardon me for a moment?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. As to those outrages, I may say that years ago, when they were far fresher in the memory of the people of Minnesota than they are to-day, my predecessor, Senator Davis, investigated this matter very thoroughly and favored the repeal of that forfeiture law. I understand these Indians are now in South Dakota very largely, but I do not believe there is any feeling in my State against them, nor is there any feeling that the forfeiture which Congress undoubtedly had no authority to make at the time should any longer stand on the statute books of the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Da-kota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GAMBLE. I will be through in a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well, I will wait. Mr. GAMBLE. I wish to call attention further to the fact, as there have been some severe criticisms, that on account of these outrages, I think something like 296 or 306 Indians were by a military court tried and condemned. The court ran with such expedition that I think thirty or forty or fifty were condemned in a single day. The records of those trials were gone over by President Lincoln and the findings were reversed as to all but 39, and they were executed and justice was meted out. I will correct myself there. I think something like 37 were convicted for committing the massacre. The others were engaged in actual warfare. A limited number of these Indians are residents of my State. They are largely residents of the State of Nebraska, to which State they were removed. Many, especially of the half breeds, live in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. President, all that is asked here, after a very exhaustive examination and hearing, is that this matter shall be referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts and return a judgment. No money is to be paid unless there is an appropriation by Congress in liquidation of that judgment as it sees fit. It is entirely proper, it seems to me, that an appropriation of $2,500, whatever it may be, should be authorized from the funds of the Indians to secure the evidence, to pay for the printing, etc., in order that these matters may be properly presented to the Court of Claims. Now, as I said, I do not care to go into the facts at large. have simply said what I did in justification of the report that is made here. The matter has been repeatedly reported here-twice been referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are one or two very important features in this case which I do not think have been touched upon. I have not read the bill carefully enough to know. exactly what the terms of the pending amendment are, but I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin and other Senators to the treaty of 1837, which granted the an-

That treaty provided in express terms that these bands, or the Sioux tribe, were not to make war upon white citizens. It also provided in express terms that if members of the tribe should pillage the country or commit any offenses the Government would pay for anything they destroyed and deduct it from those annuities. So the very thing that the Indians did in 1862, unless it can be regarded as a war by the entire Sioux Nation, was provided for under the terms of the treaty.

Then the question naturally arises, was this a war by the Sioux Nation against the white settlers or was it an uprising by a large number of irresponsible members of that tribe? lieve it has been well established that the majority of the Sioux Nation was opposed to the outbreak. All the old men spoke against it. Many of them attempted to check the impetuosity of the younger men of the tribe who joined in this great slaughter of 1862.

After the war was over the annuities were forfeited. They were forfeited of course upon the assumption that the entire Sioux Nation, the party with whom the treaty had been made, had engaged in a war against the United States. Of course, as a penalty against the Sioux Nation, under the rules that would govern any people in war with another, we had a right, legally and morally, to forfeit those annuities; but if it was not a war by the Sioux Nation, but merely a war or an uprising by certain bands of that nation, without the authority of the entire nation, then it was provided for in the very treaty. And inasmuch as we have paid those sums to the white settlers affected, and probably paid everything, I have myself come to the conclusion that the forfeiture never ought to have been made.

We forfeited annuities in the case of many Indian tribes, and I do not think there is a single instance left in which we forfeited the annuities of Indians because of uprisings where we have not reinstated them. This is the only one. Last year we showed rather conclusively that what were known as the "lower bands," the Wahpetons and Sissetons, except a very few of them, did not engage in this great massacre. We established also that practically all those who did engage in it, so far as we can ascertain, were punished, some of them by imprisonment and others by being hanged, and those who were not reached in that way were persons who escaped entirely from the tribe, and that there are none of them left-Mr. CLAY. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. As I understand the amendment, those who participated in the outrages would not draw anything under its provisions?

Mr. McCUMBER. They would not, if you can find them.

Mr. CLAY. I notice this—
Mr. McCUMBER. But I want to say to the Senator that I have no doubt that every one of them could show that he did not participate. Remember, this was in 1862, and it is probable that most or very many of those who participated are now dead, and those who are left, if there are any, we will admit we could scarcely identify at this time.

Mr. CLAY. I notice that the amendment provides-

Upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom the names of those found to have participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand, and I can say in explana-tion that my information is there are not now living fifty that we could say engaged in any degree in that massacre, and they for the most part are those who took a minor part in it and suffered imprisonment. So their names are known. The information is already within the Department. So practically it would be very easy to segregate those from the rest.

I desire to say just one word upon the attorney feature of this I intended, as I read the amendment over very rapidly, to offer an amendment, so that instead of 10 per cent, to provide for a reasonable attorney's fee to be determined by the court. But inasmuch as we have already relieved in the same manner those of two of the bands constituting the Sioux at that time, I can see no injustice in applying the same law to the remainder of them, the other two bands, if they come under similar conditions.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have prepared an amendment in regard to the provision for attorney's fee, embodying in the amendment, if it shall be passed, the same provision that was in the Sisseton provision last spring. In other words, it would be left to the Court of Claims to pass upon the amount.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina rises to a parliamentary inquiry. He will state it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has this amendment gone out on the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has. Mr. TILLMAN. What is the use of this discussion?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know, unless it would be to have the Senator who made the point of order withdraw it, which he might possibly do in justice to all of those bands of Indians. The point of order was made without considering or going into the merits of the case, and we have passed many amendments of like character. But, Mr. President, I simply submit that we ought to treat all of these Indians alike. We have allowed the other two bands of the same tribe to go to the Court of Claims and establish the facts.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. When did that occur?

Mr. McCUMBER. At the last session; last winter, I think. The case is now pending in the Court of Claims.

Mr. GAMBLE. It was referred on a prior occasion, I think in 1901:

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that it was fully argued on the floor here, and it was passed after argument.
Mr. LODGE. In a separate bill?

In a separate bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it was in the appropriation bill. Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a word. My information as to the real effect of this proposition if it were enacted into law, in dollars and cents to the Government, as well as in some other respects, came to me from a conversation with Senator Platt of Connecticut, one of the most faithful Senators who ever served in this body as well as one of the ablest. He was bitterly opposed to it after a searching investigation of the facts. think it is an extraordinary proposition, outside of the questions which have been suggested here.

The Senator from South Dakota is quite mistaken, as I understand the amendment, in his statement, that it will call upon the Court of Claims only to report the facts.

Mr. GAMBLE. And to render judgment. Mr. SPOONER. Ah, the Senator said, report the facts. It

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due, with the right of appeal as in other cases, in the claim of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, for any an-

It would be impossible to confer any greater jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims can not issue out of its court execution against the Government. All final judgments rendered by the Court of Claims are to be appropriated for by Congress, and they generally are appropriated for by

The Chair has ruled upon this proposition, and I do not intend to take any time in discussing the suggestion that Congress had not the constitutional power to forfeit annuities by the act of 1863. That is a question upon which lawyers may be very well divided. I knew something of some of these In-dians myself once; and long before the Senator from South Dakota I expect ever heard of South Dakota I marched 800 or 900 miles across that territory, and I think, outside of a fort, that I saw no habitation but at Yankton, which was then a little hamlet between Fort Randall and up about where the Northern Pacific now crosses the Missouri, near Bismarck. The Indians remaining of that tribe up there at that time did not have a very enviable reputation. Of course it is perfectly easy for these Indians to show that no Indian now alive participated in that massacre. They can establish the saintship of all the living Indians by each other's testimony. There is a history somewhere, upon which I can lay my hands, of the outbreak in Minnesota.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me right there, I must say that there are undoubtedly very many of the Indians who engaged in that massacre who are alive other than those who are known to have engaged in it, and who are still members of the band, but I think all of them have joined other bands in other sections of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator was absolutely correct in his statement that it will turn out, if this suit is permitted to be brought, that there are no Indians of those bands now alive who participated in the massacre.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken, if I may correct him. I said there are about fifty who are known, all of whom I think suffered terms of imprisonment.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will state in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin that I myself have seen some of the Indians who were recognized and known as having participated in the devastation and destruction in Minnesota. My information is, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota, that there are about fifty still living, and those Indians are largely across the river at Fort Niobrara, in the State of Minnesota, and only in limited numbers are they with the Flandreaus in my State. I think a large number of the mixed bloods are in the State of

I wish to make just one further suggestion. I understand it to be a historical fact that there were certain treaties abrogated with the Five Civilized Tribes during the war, and that every dollar of their annuities was restored to them, and in addition there was paid an excess price for their land over and above that agreed to in the original treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. sacring the whites? Was that a premium or a reward for mas-

Mr. GAMBLE. I am simply stating the fact. Of course, I have not undertaken any justification of it. But there was a terrible punishment imposed upon a large number of these Indians. Four hundred of them were imprisoned for some four or five years, and during that time I think 160 of them died in prison, 39 of them were executed, and between 800 and 900 of them fled as fugitives from justice and have remained since that time in Canada. Not a dollar is appropriated to them, because they were largely the guilty people.

I think it is shown in the record here that upward of 1,500 of these people were taken up to the military post between Minneapolis and St. Paul to be protected, not only from the In-dians, but from the white people. Many of them had rescued and had risked their lives to rescue the white settlers and protect them. They were the enemies of the Indians. The white people thought they were their enemies, and the Indians had to flee for protection. I am speaking of the innocent; and the innocent should not be punished for the limited number of guilty, who already have been punished so severely.

Mr. SPOONER. At the very last session, I think, before Senator Quay left this Chamber we appropriated some money to a number of Indians who rescued the children and one or two women from one of these bands.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am sorry to say that that proposition failed d conference. We passed it in the Senate a number of times.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator speaks about the terrible punin conference.

Mr. HALE. In her arms?

Mr. SPOONER. In her arms, without food, lying among the trees and concealing herself by day and traveling by night. She came out a maniac, with her mind destroyed for twenty years afterwards. A long time has elapsed, but the horror of that outbreak, which was no ordinary outbreak, remains. It took a great many troops to put it down. It is fresher in my memory, though I did not live in Minnesota, than it is in the memory of others who were more remote from that region.

I wish to say, Mr. President, this debate shows what the Senator from Maine has been constantly contending for, that no proposition of this kind ought ever to find a place in an appropriation bill. If this is a meritorious proposition, why not introduce a bill covering it, so that it may not in the last hours of the session be brought here, but may be investigated by a committee and thoroughly debated on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. GAMBLE. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that this identical bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it on the Calendar? Mr. McCUMBER. It was on the Calendar under Rule VIII, but went over under objection to Rule IX. It has been on the Calendar since the last session of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Having gone over under objection, it finds its way into the appropriation bill. I do not think it is good legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish simply to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in view of the fact that we have passed exactly the same character of legislation for the other two bands and in view of the fact that many Senators have not looked into this and many other matters are to be passed over, that he will withhold for the present his objection. Of course, that is entirely within his power. It may be raised at any other time in the proceeding, but I wish he would withhold it for a short time

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to withdraw the point of order, but I am perfectly willing to withhold it. I only made the point of order now in the hope of saving time on the bill. If the Senator from South Dakota wants me to withhold it, of course I will do so. I will withhold it, Mr. President, and ask that the amendment be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts

withholds his point of order, and the amendment will be passed

Dak., losses claimed to have been sustained by said Indians on account of property taken from them in the years 1876, 1877, and 1878, as reported by J. M. Lee, Ninth United States Infantry, acting Indian agent, $8,200. The next amendment was, on page 118, after line 9, to insert:

The reading of the bill was continued to page 120, line 10. Mr. CLAPP. On page 120, lines 6 and 7, an amendment was adopted by the committee, but in some manner it was left out in the printing. I should like to send it up and have it read and ask for its incorporation in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 120, after line 6, insert:

That the sum of $5,000, for the purchase of lands and sheep for the San Juan Plute Indians, and $10,500, for the support and civilization of the Kaibab Indians in Utah, etc., appropriated in the Indian act for the fiscal year 1907, are hereby reappropriated and made available for the use of the Piute Indians in southern Utah and northern Arizona.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is not rather peculiar legislation and something new? Heretofore when we desired to remove restrictions in regard to the sale of Indian lands have we not left it to the Secretary of the Interior, or has Congress provided what restrictions should be made? This amendment simply authorizes the Indians to petition the court and the court to hear the facts and determine whether the restriction shall be removed and the Indian be allowed to sell his land.

Mr. CLAPP. The Commissioner does not favor this provision very strongly. My own judgment is that it is the proper way to reach this question. It is true that heretofore we have provided that an Indian may have his restrictions removed by applying to the Secretary, or, as in the case of some of the Indians in my own State last year, I had a law passed removing their restrictions, which exceeded my most sanguine expectations in the favorable outcome of the legislation. But these Indians are citizens of a State. They can only bring their case before the Department through agents, and in many cases they are induced to believe that they must employ some one to accomplish that for them.

The Secretary of the Interior can not know these Indians; he must act only on the advice of subordinates, and it does seem to me, while this was not initiated by myself, that it is a very wise departure; that where allotment restrictions are to be removed as to individual Indians by anyone it should be done by the court instead of by a Department residing hundreds or thousands of miles away and relying upon subordinates for information.

That is all I have to say. It is a matter that pertains to the State of Wisconsin. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA Fol-LETTE] is here, and if there is any further discussion desired I think he will be able to explain it fully.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law and that it is general legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have read a communication from one of the members of this tribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the communication in the absence of objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say just a word, with the permission of the Senator, if he will yield me the floor. Of course, I understand that the point of order can be insisted upon and the proposed amendment forced out. I am very certain that it would be an injustice to these Indians if that should be done. They are citizens of the State; they are in a highly civilized condition, and the terms of the court are held in close proximity to where these Indians are located. They find it very difficult to get action by the Indian Office simply because their cases can not be reached. The communication sets forth the fact that but two of them have succeeded in having their cases acted upon within the last year, I think. I should say that the writer of this letter is an Indian, one of the members of this tribe, a very intelligent and capable man.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 2, 1907.

The Secretary read as follows:

February 2, 1907.

Dear Sir: Without intending to impute any motive repugnant to good intentions to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the desire of the Oneidas to have a right to appear before a competent tribunal in proceedings to remove restrictions as to sale of their land arises. In the fact that great delay often occurs when applications are made through the Indian Office for a determination whether or not applicants for patents in fee simple are competent to care for their property.

Two years ago a large number of the Oneidas filed applications for patent in fee simple. Two of the number engaged attorneys to secure the patents for them; the balance of the number left the matter to be attended to by the Indian agent. The two who engaged attorneys have had their patents over a year; of the balance not more than five have received any consideration, notwithstanding that the agent recommended the applicants and their names were inserted in the Indian appropriation bill approved June 21, 1906, and the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to issue patents, in his discretion, to them.

The Commissioner admits that there are a large number of Oneidas who are competent to care for themselves. All desire patents in fee simple. Yet it has taken two years and more for five Indians to get their patents on the strength of that knowledge.

The Commissioner has issued directions to the Indian agent at Oneida to investigate every application carefully for the purpose of ascertaining whether a patent issued would be caref for or not, and to advertise to the reservation for the production of any objections which might be in the knowledge of any person showing that the applicant ought not to be given a patent, and to inform all applicants that if they engaged any assistance in securing their patents in the way of attorneys, such action would be deemed evidence that the applicant is incompetent to care for himself, etc.

That intelligent Indians should refuse to expose themselves to any

That intelligent Indians should refuse to expose themselves to any such proceedings is not to be wondered at. The amendment proposed is in line with all American law and is based in a high sense of justice and equity. If the Indian Department has any suspicion that any oneida is going to fool the honorable court of the district named, it will be its duty to appear forthwith before it and apprise it of the intended fraud.

Real experience has taught the Oneidas to regard the intentions of the Indian Department as coming from a conscientious desire to do good, but very slow in execution. In fact, we regard the Indian who would willingly leave his interests to be cared for by the Indian Department as conclusively incompetent.

Very respectfully,

Dennison Wheelock.

Hon. Robert M. La Follette,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will also ask to have read by the Secretary all that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says in opposition to this provision. I have marked in the document which I send to the desk the portion which I desire to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

ONEIDA RESTRICTIONS REMOVED.

The Commissioner submits the following:

"Although I do not know of any particular reason why this paragraph should not be enacted, I do not see exactly what need there is for it. Under existing law, any Indian who is capable of caring for his affairs is entitled to a patent in fee; and I think I am safe in saying that no Oneida Indian who has asked for a patent in fee simple has been denied it. I know the Oneida Indians more or less well, and I am confident that a large number of them are competent to care for their own affairs and ought not to be denied a fee to their lands. A number of patents have already been ordered by the Secretary to be issued to the Oneidas, and perhaps a dozen applications are yet pending here. I dare say that a good many more are still before the superntendent at the agency, as, under departmental instructions he must post a notice for thirty days, so that anyone having evidence to offer can do so.

"The only question that arises in my mind as to the wisdom of passing this paragraph is that which would arise in connection with can do so.

"The only question that arises in my mind as to the wisdom of passing this paragraph is that which would arise in connection with any special provision of legislation where a general provision already exists. But if the Senate does not agree with me, or if it believes that the United States district court for the eastern district of Wisconsin would be better qualified than the Department to pass upon the competency of any allottee, it will be all right to transfer jurisdiction to that court, especially as the Indian, if he is incompetent, will have to fall back upon the State of Wisconsin, and not the United States, for support in case he becomes a pauper."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know that I can say enything that will implace the Senetor to withhold the can say anything that will induce the Senator to withhold the point of order which he has made against the amendment. will say that I would not under any circumstances favor it if I believed that a single Oneida Indian who would be given the right to alienate his property would not be as capable of taking care of it as the average citizen in Wisconsin. I believe that that is true with respect to this particular band or tribe of Indians.

I believe further that the court there, on the ground, where testimony can be taken, and much more testimony than can or will be taken if a hearing is had here before the Indian Department, is in a vastly better position to judge what is best for the Indian in each case.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am satisfied if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] had looked into the record and examined the cases where the United States court in years gone by was permitted to grant citizenship to Indians he would not insist upon this amendment. This policy has been tried before by the Government, and it was a decided failure. The United States courts were busy. Applications were made for Indians by people who desired to purchase their land and others who desired to have the land placed upon the tax roll. As a result, in a majority of cases where the court acted, the Indians lost their lands by tax titles or were robbed of them by people who desired to secure the title. I believe it would be a very unwise policy to put this matter into the hands of any United States judges or United States courts. The act of May 8, 1906, not yet a year old, was passed to meet just such cases as this. If the members of the tribe referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin are competent-and I know that many of them areto transact and manage their own affairs, they can go to the Secretary of the Interior under that act—not as the Senator from Wisconsin says they did years and years ago, but under the act of May 8, 1906—and have the restrictions removed. I am satisfied if they pursue that course their interest will be protected much more fully than it will be if the matter is left to the United States court. I hope Congress will never make the mistake of referring the question of removing restrictions to the United States judges.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, personally I do not think the United States courts should have any jurisdiction in this case. The State courts should, in my humble judgment, have jurisdiction; but anyone who has had experience with the present system would turn to almost anything as better than the pres-

In the first place, they have to depend upon agents and employees who are far removed, susceptible to influences, making contracts, and sometimes attorneys getting contracts. my office a roll, I think, of 100 Indians who were induced to sign an agreement to pay $150 apiece to get their restrictions removed in my own State. That taught them one lesson, which was that they should not squander their money in that way. They do not have to pay to get their rights and to get justice from the Government. I believe that it is a mistake to handle these individual allotments through the mechanism of the Department of the Interior. I believe it should be passed upon by a tribunal of some sort in the community where the Indians live.

Restrictions rest upon an Indian upon the ground that he is incapable of doing business, and the tribe becomes the subject of guardianship at the hands of the court and not at the hands of the executive officer. The whole theory of an executive officer dealing with incapacity and guardianship, in my humble judgment, is a false theory.

I have no interest in this particular item. It comes from the State of Wisconsin, and is not even in my own State; but I do believe, with the experience I have had in this matter, that if these restrictions are to be removed as to individual Indians they should be removed by some tribunal in the neighborhood where the Indian is living and where it can know something of the qualifications and not depend upon some subordinate clerk or agent of the Department.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp], that any tribunal that we can arrange for in any State in the Union where they have Indians will be a tribunal to assist the man who wants to get the land to get it. That is the result wherever it has been tried.

Let us suppose, now, that we select any tribunal—suppose a court, if you see fit, in a county in the State of Minnesota. A wants to get the land of the Indian B, and he applies to have the restrictions removed. A appeals. B says he knows how to take care of his property, because he wants to sell, and A swears that B can take care of his property, because he wants to buy, and he probably will get two or three more friends to testify that B is absolutely capable of taking care of his property, and the restrictions will be removed. In twenty minutes after the restrictions have been removed, in practically every case, there will be a transfer of the land; and in twenty days after the Indian has received his money he will be begging for some place to live, and the white man will have both his land and his money. That has been the experience.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, granting the result which the Senator from North Dakota states, that when an allottee sells his property he soon squanders his means, yet if we are going to have any plan, the question is which is the better for disposing of these restrictions in individual cases. I would ask if there is anything in the position of an Indian agent calculated to lift him up to such altruistic heights that he is less susceptible to these influences than would be the courts-probate, district, or otherwise-to influences brought to bear upon them?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is very easily answered, Mr. Presi-The Secretary of the Interior acts for and on behalf of the Indian. The Secretary of the Interior will take it for granted, unless the contrary be established beyond any question, that the Indian is not capable of taking care of his property. The Secretary of the Interior acts as the friend of the Indian. He acts as one who desires to protect him in his property rights and to shield him from being deprived of them. On the other side, your local influence wants to get the property away from the Indian. The Secretary's influence is to keep the Indian's That is the difference, and it is all the differproperty for him. ence in the world.

Mr. CLAPP. That argument, Mr. President, proceeds upon the theory that the Secretary is personally supervising and investigating these matters. He can not do it. He must accept the information furnished him by his subordinates, the agents and others upon whom he relies. There is nothing in my experience with them that leads me to believe that they are less susceptible to influences than are the ordinary courts.

Mr. McCUMBER. They may not be less susceptible to influences, Mr. President, but I think the Senator will agree with me that the sentiment, not only of the head of the Interior Department, but of every one in the Department, is to protect the Indian and to shield him in his property rights. The Secretary in and out of season has been making a strenuous fight against any attempt to dispossess the Indian of his property, and all of the subordinates in the Department have seconded the desire of the head of the Department. So you have that force at work all the time, actuated by that sentiment-to protect the Indian. On the other hand, removing the judge from this position to that in the State, you will have every influence desiring to get the property away from the Indian, and the result will be that in every instance he will lose his property.
I believe, Mr. President, that the Secretary would refuse applications in probably two-thirds of the cases. Any court that you might select in the State would grant them, probably, in nine-tenths of the cases.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall insist upon the point of order, and, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota, I will state that I think any Indian competent to manage his own affairs has judgment enough to apply to the Interior Department to have restrictions removed. If he has not, then he is not competent to manage his own affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I concede that; but suppose he has not sense enough to manage his own affairs, and is induced to apply under the manipulation of others to the subordinate? That is the weak point in this thing—the subordinate, upon whom devolves the duty of making the report, perfecting the evidence, and submitting it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CURTIS. The answer made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] is a direct answer to the question asked by the Senator from Minnesota, that out of all the applications made only five have been granted. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] interposes a point of order. The Chair thinks the amendment proposes general legislation within the contemplation of the rule, and is therefore out of order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Shoshone School," on page 125, line 7, after the word "Wyoming," to insert "$28,225;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty thousand and twenty-five" and insert "one thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, acknowledges and the support of superintendent, which is the support of superintendent, which is the support of superintendent, and support of superintendent, support of support of superintendent, superintendent, support of superintendent, support of superintendent, supe Shoshone $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Shoshones and Bannocks (treaty)," on page 126, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "twentyfive; " so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of article 4 of the agreement ratified by the act of March 3, 1905, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and make appropriation for carrying the same into effect," $25,000 of the amount specified by said fourth article to be immediately available and to be reimbursed from the proceeds derived from the sale of surplus lands, as provided by said act.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there is a mistake in that amendment. In line 7 "one hundred" should be restored and "twenty-five" should be stricken out. Then, on line 8, after the word "article," should be inserted "$25,000;" so that it will read:

Twenty-five thousand dollars, to be immediately available.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 7, striking out "one hundred" and inserting "twenty-five."

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota now moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 126, line 8, after the word "article," it is proposed to insert "$25,000;" so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of article 4 of the agreement ratified by the act of March 3, 1905, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and make appropriation for carrying the same into effect." $100,000 of the amount specified by said fourth article, $25,000 to be immediately available and to be reimbursed from the proceeds derived from the sale of surplus lands, as provided by said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, after line 10, to in-

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1.401, the same to be immediately available for meandering the north bank of the Pope Agle River through township 2 south, range 2 east; townships 1 and 2 south, range 3 east; township 1 south, range 4 east, and the south bank of Big Wind River, through townships 1 north and 1 south, range 4 east, and township 3 north, range 3 west, surveying fractional townships 1 and 2 south, range 2 east, and making such retracements and resurveys as may be necessary in the diminished Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President what is the force—I suppose per-

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what is the force—I suppose perhaps it has some application in surveying—of the word "meandering," in line 14?

Mr. CLAPP. It is not only surveying the river, but, as I understand, fixing the course in the field notes and subsequently on the plat, so that the river is not only a boundary, perhaps, but the field notes and the plat show where that boundary is. I understand that is what they call "meandering" a stream or "meandering" a lake.

Mr. HALE. Is that a word commonly in use in surveys?

Mr. CLAPP. I think so. It is commonly used in connection with water courses.
Mr. HALE. I suppose so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 126, after line 22, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, with the consent of the Indians of the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., to be obtained in such manner as he may deem best, to lease for a term not exceeding twenty-five years, lot 1 of section 2 in township 1 south of range 1 west of the Wind River meridian, in said reservation, for the erection of a sanatorium, at such rate of rental and subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to explain who is going to run this sanatorium and for what purpose, and what has the Secretary of the Interior got to do with running sanatoriums?

Mr. CLAPP. There are several questions—
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was going to suggest that a full explanation of this amendment may be had from a letter of the Secretary of the Interior to be found on page 82 of the report, which is perhaps more concise than an explanation would be.

Mr. TILLMAN. Probably the Senator can give it to us in a few words.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can give it to you in a very few words. Close by the Shoshone or Wind River Agency is a great health hot spring. There is no rule or regulation or law under which that spring can be taken advantage of, and there have been numerous applications made by outside parties to lease that spring and prepare baths for the use of the Indians and The Secretary has no authority under the law to make any such lease for any business purpose. The object of the amendment is to give the Secretary authority to lease for that purpose this particular piece of land that has been reserved from allotment for the benefit of the Indian tribes, for the benefit of the troops who are stationed near there, and for the benefit of others who may go there. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, if it is in the interest of health and a utilization of some of nature's blessings in the shape of good mineral water, I can see some sense in it; but there is no explanation of it here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course there could not be an explanation of it in the bill, but there is an explanation of it in the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not ask for it in the bill. The provision is worded very vaguely and indefinitely. I should think if this were a good thing we might as well buy it from the Shoshone Indians and let Uncle Sam own it, as he does the Hot Springs of Arkansas. Then we could take care of it for all future time, instead of for twenty-five years, and get some fellow stuck in there with a lease, and after that come along with another amendment to purchase it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to. The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. If agreeable now, I should like to move the Department amendments which I called attention to as we progressed with the reading and which were printed and laid on the table. The first is on page 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to designate any individual Indian belonging to any tribe whom he may deem to be capable of managing his or her own affairs, and he may cause to be apportioned and allotted to any such Indian his or her pro rata share of any tribal or trust funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe or tribes of which said Indian is a member, and the amount so apportioned and allotted shall be placed to the credit of such Indian upon the books of the Treasury, and the same shall thereupon be subject to the order of such Indian: Provided, That no apportionment or allotment shall be made to any Indian until such Indian has first made an application therefor.

Mr. HALE. It is difficult to tall from marchy listening to the

Mr. HALE. It is difficult to tell from merely listening to the anding what is the scope of the amendment. Will the Senator reading what is the scope of the amendment. explain just what it refers to, how much of an innovation it is, and what its purpose is?

Mr. CLAPP. I will.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the amendment be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota vield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.
Mr. CURTIS. Is that the same as the bill which was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. CLAPP. I can not say whether it is or not. I was going to make a statement to the Senate covering the entire subject. Mr. CURTIS. Does the Department recommend the adoption of that amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs does. will state for the benefit of the Senate that some time ago the proposition was made, and discussed somewhat in the committee, of providing for placing the funds standing to the credit of the Indian tribes to the credit of the individual Indians, and a bill passed the House of Representatives this which provided that the President might designate from time to time any individual Indian or any tribe that he might deem capable of managing his or their own affairs, and then, after he had thus designated the Indian as capable of managing his own affairs, or the tribe of managing theirs, segregation was to be made and the money paid subsequently under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The Senate committee in December reported that bill with amendments, and instead of devolving this duty upon the President, which, it seemed to the committee, was entirely beneath the dignity of the Presidential office, it left the duty incumbent on the Secretary, and then provided that when he found an Indian so capable of managing his or her own affairs he might cause to be allotted to any such Indian his or her pro rata of the tribal funds

Now, the House provided that before an individual Indian could have his share paid him he must file a release of all sub-sequent accretions to that fund. While it is true that a man engaged in business association may sometimes, for the sake of taking his capital out, be required to make some concession, the accretions to an Indian fund do not depend upon an individual Indian's share remaining in that fund. It comes from sources wholly independent of the question whether that Indian's share remains there or not, and the committee was very clearly of the opinion that he ought not to be required to release his right in order to obtain his share of the fund as it then existed.

Then the committee proceeded on the theory that, if the Secretary found that the Indian was capable of managing his affairs, somewhere the string should be cut loose and the restraint and control over the Indian as to that particular fund Consequently they reported this bill with these I have the following letter from the Commisshould cease. amendments.

Department of the Interior,
Office Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Washington, January 30, 1907.

My Dear Senator Clapp: Will you kindly offer on the floor, if it meets with your approval, an amendment embracing the text of House bill 5290, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, which you reported with the amendments of your committee on December 17, 1906? This is the bill "providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds," which passed the House and was somewhat made over by your committee.

I consider the completion of this act a very important matter, especially in view of some of the new legislation we are contemplating in the Indian appropriation bill. If this were left out, we should find ourselves in the position of permitting the Secretary to give noncompetents their share of tribal funds before any provision were made to take care of the competent Indians. That would be rather a "cart-before-the-horse" arrangement. With this proposed amendment and the one enabling us to relieve the necessities of some of the very old, decrepit, maimed, or otherwise incompetent people we should have a very good system, easily workable, and resulting in the greater good to the greatest number.

I hate to add to your burdens as chairman conducting the bill through the Senate, but I know you believe as more constructive legislation.

I hate to add to your burdens as chairman conducting the bill through the Senate, but I know you believe as much as I do in furthering constructive legislation, and that both of us have to sink our prejudices for keeping the appropriation bill strictly an appropriation bill for the sake of getting work done.

Sincerely, yours,

F. E. Leupp, Commissioner

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

Hon, Moses E. Clapp, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

It is not the bill the House passed. That bill, as I say, provided that the Indian should not have his share until he re-leased his rights, and it also provided that after he had been found capable of managing his own business and was put on the roll for that particular purpose the money should still be subject to further control.

I think that is all I care to say, unless some questions are asked.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me this is a better way to distribute these funds than to wait and get the Indians tired out, some of them dead, and then have lawyers employed to come here and lobby through this distribution. I am inclined to think this is a good provision.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course the chairman of the committee understands that this and many of the amendments which he will offer are subject to points of order, and he simply leaves it to the Senate to determine whether the exigencies warrant permitting them to go on the bill.

Mr. HALE. The amendment as read appears to be very sweeping, very far-reaching, embracing not one, but all tribes. and is a method of selecting by the Commissioner, to control all of these hundreds and perhaps thousands of allotments. does not seem to have been either adopted by the House or by the committee of the Senate in reporting the bill, and comes to us, as the Senator says, at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Maine pardon me?

Certainly.

The Senator must have misunderstood me. The Senator must have misunderstood me. The House bill Mr. HALE. Mr. CLAPP. Senate Committee on Indian Affairs did report the House bill amended so as to read now as this proposed amendment does. That was done some time ago.

Mr. HALE. In this bill? Mr. CLAPP. No; not in

Mr. CLAPP. No; not in this bill. Mr. TILLMAN. It was an independent bill?

Mr. HALE. An independent bill. But, as I say, on this bill neither the House nor the committee here have reported it. The Commissioner seems to be anxious for it. I am free to say that on the subject of allotments, which we had up rather extendedly at the last session-

Mr. CLAPP. This is not an allotment of land, but an allotment of money.

Mr. HALE. I know it is not an allotment of land. I will say an apportionment. That is a better word. I do not know much about this. Other Senators with more experience in dealing with the Indians know more about it. But I can see that it is a very sweeping amendment, and the Senator has been, as he has been all through the bill, very frank about it. amendment is subject, if any Senator knows enough about it to believe it is dangerous legislation, to the point of order. But I only rose to make the inquiries and to say that I realize, without knowing whether it is going to work well or not, that it is a very general and sweeping amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have hesitated whether to make a point of order on this amendment or not. Every stage of this Indian drama-and the curtain will be rung down before long; I do not know that anyone is justified in an attempt to delay it-is toward, in a large sense, the complete spoliation of the Indian, in my judgment. I have, during the last four or five years especially, observed that tendency, and the almost absolute impossibility of resisting it. A great many good people in the United States who have very, very much had at heart the well-being of the Indian have, I think, unwittingly conspired with those who desired very much the spoliation of the Indian to bring about a condition of affairs which is swiftly leading to that result. I have had occasion to say this much before on the floor of the Senate.

There are a great many Indians who are capable of taking are of their own affairs. I do not know but that that remark care of their own affairs. could accurately be applied to a third of the Indians of the United States. I am not in a position to know. I think myself a very great mistake was made in the allotment of lands to the Indians, except in special cases and under peculiar circumstances. In my own State there were allotted to Indians lands rich in timber, of great value. The timber was sold, and sold under the supervision of the Department. I do not know, but I venture to say that most of those Indians have not retained to any great extent the proceeds of the sales of the timber on their allotments. They were made citizens-taken out from the guardianship of the United States. Their entire relation to the Government changed. Lands have passed into their hands. They are citizens, having a right to manage their own affairs, except where restrictions and reservations have precluded it.

Then, in every Indian bill-not so much in this-which has come before the Senate for years have been found very sweeping provisions for the removal of restrictions upon the power of alienation. That will all be done sooner or later, and I think sooner than later. Perhaps the homestead will be guarded—protected in the Indian from the white man—longer than the remainder of the tract which he owns.

Then comes this general proposition, which in one guise and another has presented itself here for some years now, to clean up the books of the Government on Indian trust funds. I do not know how much money is held by the United States now in trust for the Indians. But I believe it will not be very long until there will not be much money held in the Treasury by the Government in trust for the Indians. I believe it will not be very long after this general policy shall be adopted and these funds segregated and turned over to the individual Indians before the Indian upon whom it is bestowed or to whom it is paid will be without funds.

Mr. HALE. He will be relieved.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; he will be relieved. Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield, although I will take but a moment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is just for a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did I understand the Senator correctly? I understood him to say that when the Indian was declared to be a citizen of the United States he was thereby removed from the guardianship of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Very largely.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. But not entirely?
Mr. SPOONER. I think so far as restrictions existed upon the power of alienation at the time he was made a citizen, perhaps they would continue. I doubt the power of the Government after the Indian had been made a citizen of the United States and had obtained an allotment or is obtaining one to restrict him.

Mr. CURTIS. May I answer the question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. CURTIS. The Supreme Court has decided that the Indian to whom an allotment is made is still under the guardianship of the Government until the prohibition of allenation in his patent expires. Under the act of 1887 patents have issued, but the fee is not in the Indian for twenty-five years. The Supreme Court has held that so far as that land is concerned and so far as his personal property is concerned the Indian is still under the guardianship of the Government of the United States. Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut? Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas whether that was the case of an Indian who owned the fee of his land and was a member of a tribe which had formerly owned the land in common, or whether it was—

Mr. CURTIS. It was a case in the Northwest, where an allotment had been made under the act of 1887 to members of a tribe, and the patent had been issued with the twenty-five years' restriction, and before the expiration of the twenty-five years the county authorities attempted to tax the real estate and to tax the personal property. In that case the Government intervened in behalf of the Indian, and the Supreme Court held that the Government was still the guardian of the Indian and that the State had no right to tax his land or his personal property

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if he refers to the Rickert case?

Mr. CURTIS. I think it is the Rickert case. I have it here on my desk.

Mr. McCUMBER. The South Dakota Rickert case.

Mr. CURTIS. The case of United States v. James A. Rickert. Mr. SPOONER. I have had a feeling that these trust funds in the Treasury, held for the benefit of Indians, might very well and wisely be held by the Government for some years yet, until this experiment in full citizenship and education toward ability to manage his own affairs might have been more thoroughly developed.

As it is said, a bill has passed the House and is pending in the Senate

Mr. TILLMAN. Here it is. Mr. CLAPP. Pending in the very form in which it is reported now.

Mr. TILLMAN. Reported from the committee, Mr. SPOONER. A bill has passed the House A bill has passed the House and is pending in the Senate in the form which I understand this amendment takes. I think I shall make the point of order on this amendment, in order that the Senate may deal with the bill itself relating to this subject, so that there can be a little fuller debate upon it and larger consideration of it without delaying an appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the permission of the Senate, I wish to make one statement with reference to what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners]. I want every Senator here to understand that this Government is reaching the stage of a crisis in its dealings with the Indians. If the present law can not be modified in the matter of restrictions; if the law which we passed last winter continuing the restrictions for twenty-five years and which was based for the most part upon the Rickert case that has been cited by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] is unconstitutional, then within fifteen years at the longest practically every acre of Indian land will have passed into the hands of white men. We will then have in the United States an army of pauper Indians subject to the tender mercies of the white people in the several States in which they reside, to be cared for and supported by those States or driven out of the States. The probabilities are that the only Mecca that will be open to the Indian will be Mexico, if in some way he can get money enough to get to Mexico, where possibly he may be allowed to settle among those of his own

Our mistake was made from the very beginning of the Government in its treatment of the Indians. The mistake has been continued tenaciously up to the very present time. That mistake was the theory that we could make a white man out of the Indian, with proclivities inherited from thousands upon thousands of years of an environment so different from that surrounding the white people that it was impossible at this late period to make him over. We have found, when it is too late, I fear, to rectify our errors, that we have made a mistake all the way along; that we can not make a white man out of the Indian; that we can not make him self-supporting unless we give him a certain amount of land that will be inalienable for all time and keep him on that land, when he will possibly be able to take care of himself in a meager way, if he resides upon that land. That he will absolutely dispose of the land is the record all over the United States wherever the restriction has been removed.

I deny, Mr. President, that one-third or one-quarter or one one-hundredth of the Indians-those who are real Indians, not white Indians-are capable of taking care or will take care of their property if you turn it over to them. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] has cited the Rickert case as one which will give us authority, as I understand him, still to deal with the Indian as the ward of the Government. All that that case decided was that when the Government had given an Indian an allotment, with a restriction upon the alienation of that allotment, its taxation by the State was contrary to the trust that was created in the restriction itself; that the State could not deprive the Indian of the lands which were held in trust and given as a trust; and then on the personal property

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Will the Senator permit me to read two lines Mr. CURTIS. of the decision?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I read as follows:

These Indians are yet wards of the nation, in a condition of pupilage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition. They occupy these lands with the consent and authority of the United States: and the holding of them by the United States under the act of 1887, and the agreement of 1889 ratified by the act of 1891, is part of the national policy by which the Indians are to be maintained as well as prepared for assuming the habits of civilized life, and ultimately the privilege of citizenship.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the position I attempted to sustain myself on, although not entirely satisfactorily to myself, when I insisted that if we had any rights whatever it was under the theory that the Indians were still wards of the Government, and as wards of the Government we had control over their property, and while we had stated to them as wards that at a certain time we would release the property from restrictions, yet if we found before the expiration of that time that they were unfit to take care of that property, they still being wards, we might continue the restrictions for a further period. I am afraid the cases will not sustain me to that extent.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator? Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. I am glad to say that recently the Supreme Court has taken a position which, in my opinion, sustains the views entertained by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall be very glad if the Senator can point out a case in which the Supreme Court has sustained the position I took at that time.

Now, coming to the matter of personal property, the local or county authorities also levied a tax upon the Indian's personal property. That personal property-Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield in a moment, when I shall have finished the sentence.

That personal property was also the gift of the Government, but no restriction was placed upon it. The court held that notwithstanding the fact that no restriction was placed upon the sale of that property, it was given to the Indian for a specific purpose, and inasmuch as he was still under the pupilage of the Government, the Government had a right to hold that property, and that the Indian held it practically as a gift from the Government for a specific purpose, which could not be taken away by the State.

Now I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator from North Dakota. I desired to ask the junior Senator from Kansas to state the case he referred to, that we might have the opportunity of examining it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that the Senator from Missouri asked what case the Senator from Kansas referred to. Mr. CURTIS. I have it here.

Mr. McCUMBER. While the Senator is looking that up, I will state that this case seems to me to be entirely out of harmony, at least according to my theory and the theory of the Senator from Kansas, with the Heff case, which grew out of the matter of the sale of intoxicating liquors. That seemed to insist, and went upon the broad ground, as I remember, that when we had given the Indian an allotment and had made him a citizen of the United States we had released our control over him as a ward of the Government. That was my understanding of the Heff case, and the two seemed to be diametrically opposed to each other, unless we do not consider the two lines read by the Senator from Kansas as really governing in the decision.

Mr. CURTIS. In the Intermarried White Persons case v. The Cherokee Nation, decided November 5, 1906, the question was raised that the agreement of 1902 was a treaty and therefore binding upon the Government and could not be changed. Supreme Court sustained the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota. I will read the language:

Counsel for claimants speak of the act of 1902 as a "treaty," but it is only an act of Congress and can have no greater effect.

If it is only an act of Congress, Congress has the right to amend it at any time it sees fit, and under the decision in the tax case, which was read, Congress has control during the twenty-five years' period, and may change the law any time be-fore the twenty-five years expire. In other words, I maintain that Congress, in its wisdom, at any time before the jurisdiction of the United States has ceased over the allottees and lands may increase the restrictions as well as remove them,

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. The Intermarried White Persons case simply dealt with the same principle that was involved in the Lone Wolf case, that, notwithstanding treaties, so far as the Indian tribes and all that went, they were subject to the laws of the United States, and we could pass laws and amend the laws. does not go into the question how far the property rights of an Indian citizen can be interfered with.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question about this. The Rickert case does declare, although I do not know that it was necessary for the court so to declare in that case, that the Indian whose property was taxed, notwithstanding the fact that he had his allotment, nothwithstanding the fact that he had been made a citizen of the United States, was a ward of the nation. In the Heff case, under similar conditions and reciting the fact of his allotment and that he had been made a citizen of the United States, it was directly held that the Government had lost its control over him.

Mr. SPOONER. May I interrupt the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. It would not seem necessary for the court to pass upon the question of the continued wardship in order to hold that land subject to a restriction for twenty-five years upon the power of alienation could not be taken away from the Indian by the exercise of the power of taxation by the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am compelled to accede to that, Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator was proceeding to speak of the ground upon which the Supreme Court put the exemption of the personal property of the Indian from taxation, and was interrupted. I do not remember the decision specifically. Did it put it upon the same ground?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was practically placed upon the same ground—that the Government had presented and made a gift to this Indian of certain property which was necessary for his civilization, and that the State was undertaking to take away, that which the Government had given to the Indian for the purpose of civilizing him. That was the basis really, although they recite the other fact as a condition, and assert that the Indian is a ward of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. That is, Congress already having made a citizen of him, it was necessary that he should retain his personal property in order to become a civilized citizen?

Mr. McCUMBER. A civilized citizen. That is practically what it means.

So, Mr. President, I for one am perfectly satisfied, and I hope the Senator will stand on his point of order. As I have stated, I believe the time is coming when we have got to do something with these Indians. We ought to keep every acre of land that we possibly can and every dollar of annuity that we possibly can which belongs to the Indian, to have it ready to utilize for his benefit when the crisis arrives, which will be in less than fifteen years, in most cases in about five years.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin made point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin made the point of order against the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. After line 18 on page 20 insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior may, on the approval of this act, require all moneys desired to be conserved for Indians, individually or as a tribe, not otherwise secured, to be deposited in national banks which have been or may be designated as depositories of public moneys pursuant to law; and all depositories of public moneys shall be liable for such deposits in the same manner as for deposits of moneys of the Inited States. United States.

Mr. LONG. I should like to have the amendment explained. Mr. CLAPP. The amendment first came up on a proposition to require all deposits to be placed in banks that had been designated as public depositories. The committee rejected that amendment. Subsequently the Department sent to me with its approval the amendment which I have just offered. I may say, however, that the reason why the Government does not deposit in the public depositories is that sometimes they are quite at a distance, and so they deposit in banks closer by, requiring the banks to give security. The amendment as it is drawn now and offered simply provides that the Secretary may, whenever he wants to, deposit any public funds in these depositories.

Mr. LONG. It does not compel him to do it.
Mr. CLAPP. No, sir. It is in full accord with the view of the Department.

Mr. LONG. I ask that the amendment be again read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not hear the explanation of the Senator from Minnesota as to the rule at present. Where is the money now deposited?

Mr. CLAPP. As a rule it is deposited, as a matter of convenience, in those banks that are nearest to the reservations. Earlier the Department deposited the money with public de-positories. Many of those banks are at a great distance, and so the Department adopted the rule of depositing in a bank in the vicinity of the agency, requiring the bank to give security. The amendment simply provides that the Secretary may, if he wishes, place it in a public designated depository.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 24, after line 10, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 24, after line 10, insert:

PIMA INDIANS.

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use such part of the $300,000 heretofore appropriated for an irrigation system for the Pima Indians in the payment of such Indians' proportionate part of the construction of the Salt River project, and such funds may be transferred to the reclamation fund, to be expended by that Service in accordance with its rules and regulations; the Indians to receive a credit upon the reclamation charge assessed against their lands under the Salt River project for the amount so transferred.

Mr. HALE. Has the committee of which the Senator is chairman considered this proposition?

man considered this proposition?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think it was considered in the prepara-tion of the bill. It was informally considered. As I said, I am now offering the amendments suggested by the Department.

Mr. HALE. I understand, but I did not know but that in some way in its deliberations the committee had considered the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir.
Mr. HALE. What does the Senator himself think about it?
Mr. CLAPP. I think it ought to be done. Here is a full explanation from the Commissioner that I can have read if desired.

Mr. HALE. I think it had better be read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 29, 1997.

OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,

Washington, January 29, 1907.

My Dear Senator Clapp: I hand you herewith an item I should be very glad to see incorporated in the Indian appropriation act, where it seems to me to have a legitimate place, as it provides for a method of using money which has been already appropriated. This item refers to the provision which the Government has tried to make for the Pima Indians, a very worthy tribe who were originally good farmers, but who were so unfortunate as, through ignorance of the law, to let white settlers appropriate the water which was necessary to irrigate their little farms. Their case has aroused general public sympathy, and two years ago the Congress gave its approval to a plan for procuring water from other than old sources, and voted an appropriation on the strength of statistics furnished by the Reclamation Service as to the cost of the proposed undertaking. The plan the Reclamation Service and in mind had never been passed upon by the engineers of the Indian Service, and it was assumed that the Reclamation Service would conduct the work. As the appropriation, however, was made so that it could be used only by the Indian Office, the Reclamation Service withdrew from the enterprise, leaving the Indian Office to carry out certain plans which it had not had any direct share in preparing.

After a considerable survey and study of the situation, this Office made a tentative arrangement with the Reclamation Service whereby, if it made possible to use the money voted to the Indian Office for carrying out the reclamation plans, the whole problem of irrigating the Pima farms would be solved, and at far less expense than originally contemplated, besides relieving this service of the responsibility of keeping a number of expensive trained persons on the spot to handle the machinery.

The construction of the Roosevelt dam and the attendant system of irrigation by the Reclamation Service has developed a larger supply of water power than the reclamation project now in hand would need. Therefore, by permitting the Pima Indians to participate in the reclamation project and obtain their power from the Reclamation Service plant every proper interest, including economy of cost, will be promoted.

As will be seen, the paragraph which I hand you is simply permissive and will not be exercised unless we have positive assurances of the result.

Sincerely, yours,

F. E. Leupp,

Commissioner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do not see any objection to the amendment for ne. In this statement of the Commissioner an incident is referred to in the line of what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has brought to our attention, the spoliation of the Indians. He says that these Pimas had a good country, had good farms, and were thrifty, but that certain whites obtained a control and use of their water property and cut them off and obliged them to resort to this proposition in order to maintain their farms and to cultivate them. Does the Senator know what the incident was by which the whites spoliated the Indians of their water supply?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not the conversal before Y.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not. It occurred before I became familiar

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. CLAPP. On page 26, after line 9, I offer an amendment.
This did not come directly to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, but was sent to the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask that the amendment be read and that the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs also be read.

unless such person shall acquiesce in and accept the appraisal provided for in this act in all respects, and shall thereafter, upon demand and payment of such appraised value, execute a release of all claims and the theorems.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire the letter accompanying the amendment read?

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the Record without reading.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 1, 1907.

Hon. James S. Sheeman,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Sherman: I am in receipt of your letter of January 31, 1907, wherein you acknowledge the receipt of one from the Secretary of the Interior inclosing Office letter of January 28, with other inclosures and a proposed bill having reference to the various Mission Indian reservations in California.

You say that the matter is rather voluminous and one with which you are not familiar, but that your impression was that in the blanket appropriation of $100,000 carried by the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1907 the interests of all California Indians were taken care of; that you see no possible objection to the bill, provided it is not one that involves a great expenditure of money, but that you are unable to determine from a hurried reading of the matter what the probable cost of the execution of this bill in a statute would be, and request information relative thereto.

The proposed bill does not involve any expenditure of money other than that carried by the appropriation mentioned. The passage of the bill referred to will enable this Office to secure to the Indians of the various Mission reservations such public lands as are at present in their use and occupation, without drawing on the $100,000 appropriated at the last session except in cases where valid existing rights of persons to lands within the proposed additions to the various reservations have to be purchased. In these cases it is contemplated paying for such improvements out of last summer's appropriation. By the adoption of this procedure the money already appropriated can be used for the purchase of lands and other incidental expenses for the Indians in neighborhoods where the public lands have been exhausted. Favorable action should be had on the proposed bill at this session, if possible, in order that the additions may be made and the improvements already thereon be paid for before the appropriation for the benefit of the Indians of California has been exhauste

Mr. CLAPP. On page 42 I offer an amendment to come in after line 13, to do away with the Choctaw courts.

The Secretary. On page 42 insert after line 13:

That upon the passage of this act tribal courts of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations shall be abolished, and no officer of said courts shall thereafter have any authority whatever to do or perform any act theretofore authorized by any law in connection with said courts or to receive any pay for the same; and all civil and criminal causes then pending in any such court in said nations shall be transferred to the proper United States court in said Territory by filing with the clerk of the court the original papers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 37 the committee reported an amendment for recording leases in the Indian Territory and it was passed over. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the Senate committee amendment. Mr. LODGE. It is a substitute for the whole of that?

Mr. LODGE.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir. Mr. LONG. That amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. No; it was passed over on the suggestion of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis].

Mr. LONG. It was afterwards called up by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark], and the amendment presented by the Senator from Wyoming was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. No; it was not agreed to. The Senator from

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the amendment at the bottom of page 36 was amended and agreed to, and the amendment beginning at the top of page 37 was passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. There are two amendments there, one relating to the fees, for which the substitute proposed by the Senator from Wyoming was adopted. Then the amendment on page 37, which provides for the recording of the leases, was passed over.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to hear the substitute which was adopted read, for I was prepared to make a point of order on the amendment, and it was only on the understanding that a satisfactory substitute would be presented that I withheld it.

If it was done in my absence, I shall renew the point of order when the bill is in the Senate.

That is entirely satisfactory; but let us dis-Mr. CLAPP. pose of this amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. That seems to be a very short amendment, but I did not quite catch the meaning of it. I ask to have it read again.

The lands along said right of way allotted to any minor may, in like manner, be sold to either of said companies by the Indian agent or other officer in charge of the reservation, acting for and on behalf of such minor.

And any deed executed hereunder, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall convey title as fully as if a fee-simple patent had issued for the lands covered thereby, but without such approval shall be absolutely null and vold.

The money received from the sale to said companies of lands allotted to a minor may be paid, in the discretion and under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the parent or other person having custody of such minor, for his support and education. Any such money not needed for such minor's support and education. Any such money not needed for such minor's support and education shall, when so directed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of such minor and paid to him when he attains his majority, or, in case of his death, to his heirs, the money thus deposited to draw interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. McCUMBER. While the Senator is looking it up, I ask the Senator from Minnesota what has been done with the provision in the bill which seeks to repeal the restriction clause which we passed last year? Has that been acted on?

Mr. CLAPP. No; that was passed over.

Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow morning at the close of the routine business I will ask for the consideration of this bill. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 6, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent, pending his motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that all general debate may close to-day at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill R. 24991, the river and harbor appropriation bill, Mr.

CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] is entitled to the floor and has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to curtail the scope of the remarks I should have liked to submit.

When I was last on the floor, I was about to comment on an appropriation proposed in the bill of $400,000 to improve Hilo Harbor, Hawaii. This is a harbor of one of the small islands. The bill also carries an appropriation of $200,000 for improving Honolulu Harbor, Hawaii, but nothing for Pearl Harbor at Honolulu, now almost useless for want of a wider and deeper channel. Our larger ships can not enter it. If it were fortified, our war ships could not enter it. The latter is deemed the most important to be fortified for the holding and defense of the Hawaiian Islands.

This House is now asked to spend $600,000 to improve two island harbors in Hawaii, but nothing for its defense. Surely we are proposing to be generous to any country that may come along and occupy them. This, under present circumstances and in the absence of a purpose to fortify Hawaii, looks like baiting it as an inducement to some country to take it. This condition in Hawaii invites war. Wisdom dictates that we should provide for the defense of our island possessions as well as to improve them.

But I must refrain from further pursuing this line of discus-

I do not deny the constitutional right to appropriate money for the improvement of rivers and harbors where necessarily international or interstate commerce will result, and where their improvement will be of national importance, but it may well be doubted whether mere local streams or inlets, having no interstate relation and where no general public utility will result, can be improved at the expense of the Federal Treasury without violating the Constitution of the United States.

The bill contains appropriations for improvements in only thirty-three of the States-twelve are "not in it." I do not believe the civil war gave any new construction to the Constitution. It did settle, and forever, that the States were a union of States, not a mere league of States dissoluble at will; that it was constitutional to preserve the Union and perpetuate it under one This result did not take from the States or the people their hitherto constitutional and reserved rights within the Union.

The power under the Constitution to make internal improvements has always been questioned, especially by the framers of the Constitution. The right to make river and harbor appropriations has been denied, and none were made until long after the Constitution went into effect. As early as 1806 it was proposed to build the Cumberland road. Those who favored the construction of the Cumberland road at the national expense justified it because it was interstate, and this view even was vehemently denied by others, and bills for its construction and maintenance were so often vetoed on the ground that they were unconstitutional that the road was never completed and its maintenance was long since abandoned.

There is no provision in the Constitution for internal improvements, but from the beginning appropriations were made for such harbors, beacons, buoys, etc., as were generally regarded as being strictly within Federal jurisdiction.

The views of the Presidents of the United States and of our greatest statesmen have in later years and in this bill been entirely ignored. The idea, somehow or other, seems to now prevail that the Constitution has undergone a substantial change, that States with once vested powers, as the Constitution was formerly construed, have been moved out and the United States have moved in. There are some powers given exclusively to the United States. There are others given exclusively to the States, and there are still others in which the States may exercise concurrent powers and where the United States may, if they choose to do so, intervene, but whenever intervention comes on the part of the United States which interferes with State powers, then the State powers are superseded. But there is nothing in the matter of internal improvements that vests the United States with a right to depose the States in the exercise of powers that are local in their character. is no such thing as concurrent powers as to internal improvements between the States and the United States. It was decided in Ex parte Seibold (100 U. S., 371) that where the United States undertook and had the constitutional right to exercise powers that could be exercised by States the United States became at once supreme in the matter, and there could be no conflict; that the States simply became dispossessed of any further power in relation to the matter and there was no possibility of a conflict either, the United States' authority superseding the other. Rightly construed, there never can be any conflict between Federal and State au-Where the United States is given exclusive power or jurisdiction it is always supreme, and where they are, by the Constitution, not given any right they can exercise none; that where a State has exclusive jurisdiction the United States can not interfere at all, and that where a right may be exercised by a State with a reserved right in the Federal Government to come in, as in the case of elections for Senators and Representatives in Congress (sec. 4, Art. II, Constitution), and make regulations relating to the same thing, such regulations become the sole and supreme law. I quote from the syllabi of the case already mentioned:

10. The exercise of such power can properly cause no collision of regulations or jurisdiction, because the authority of Congress over the subject is paramount, and any regulations it may make necessarily supersede inconsistent regulations of the State. This is involved in the power to "make or after."

11. There is nothing in the relation of the State and national sovereignties to preclude the cooperation of both in the matter of elections of Representatives. If both were equal in authority over the subject, collisions of jurisdiction might ensue; but the authority of the National Government being paramount, collisions can only occur from unfounded jealousy of such authority.

And from the opinion (pp. 386, 392):

So in the case of laws regulating the elections of Representatives to Congress, the State may make regulations on the subject; Congress may make regulations on the same subject, or may alter or add to those already made. The paramount character of those made by Congress has the effect to supersede those made by the State, so far as the two are inconsistent, and no further. There is no such conflict between them as to prevent their forming a harmonious system perfectly capable of being administered and carried out as such.

The power of Congress, as we have seen, is paramount, and may be exercised at any time, and to any extent which it deems expedient; and so far as it is exercised, and no further, the regulations effected supersede those of the State which are inconsistent therewith.

There can be no doubt about the right of the States, if they choose to exercise it, to provide for internal improvements of a purely local character; and this being true, the General Government in entering on the work of improvements of such character will unwarrantedly invade their rights, and, as we have seen, must necessarily oust them of all such rights, at least to the extent it interferes. But if the Federal Government has no right to make internal local improvements within a State, then all attempts to do so are unconstitutional and an invasion of a right reserved to the States and to the people. In the case of South Carolina v. United States (199 U. S. Rept., p. 451) it

The two governments, National and State, are each to exercise their powers so as not to interfere with the free and full exercise by the other of its powers. Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of free and independent autonomy to the States through their union under the Constitution, but it may not be unreasonably said that the preservation of the States and the maintenance of their governments are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and maintenance of the National Government. The Constitution in all its provisions looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.

It is proposed in this hill. Mr. Chairman, as I understand its

It is proposed in this bill, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, and as it seems to be interpreted by its distinguished chairman, for the United States to move into the States and undertake to do local work there in the way of improving rivers and creeks, inlets, and so forth, purely local in their character. It is my purpose to review somewhat the position, as I have already stated, of the earlier Presidents and some of the later ones on this subject. First, I desire to say that the great objection to this river and harbor bill, and, perhaps, all river and harbor bills, is that they are a combination of local and general appropriations that is expected to bring together the friends of all of the favored localities and to vote for all of the appropriations. The earlier Presidents of the United States denounced this as highly improper, and insisted that if appropriations for the improvement of any of the rivers and harbors was desired that they should be made by separate bills.

A brief review of the history of internal improvements, especially relating to rivers and harbors, may be of some interest. In doing this we shall see how Congress has progressed in asserting a right, originally denied, of making internal improvements, until it now assumes to exercise it without limitation and regardless of the character of the improvements, and to insure success, provides for them in omnibus bills, instead of by separate bills where the merits or demerits of particular improvements would be considered.

Before coming to important vetoes by Presidents of bills appropriating money for internal improvements and for rivers and harbors, let us first see how the practice of making such improvements, at the expense of the Federal Treasury, commenced, and what constitutional difficulties were encountered. The initial step was not taken until long after the Constitution went into effect.

On March 29, 1806, three commissioners were authorized by Congress, to be appointed by President Jefferson, to lay out a national road from Cumberland, Md., to the Ohio River. road was then projected through Georgia to New Orleans, and later another like road was projected from Maysville, Ky. None of these were ever completed.

As early as 1824 the policy was entered to appropriate money for roads, canals, rivers, and harbors, its expenditure to be under the direction and control of the President, and for such improvements as he might deem of national importance, and nothing was appropriated for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare and which did not promote commerce among the States. And it was all along contended that appropriations for even such purposes should be made by separate bills.

President Arthur (Mess., etc., vol. 8, pp. 122–123, 138) ably reviews in his messages of August 1 and December 4, 1882, this character of legislation, giving some of its history.

We have now reached a time when all river and harbor appropriations are made exclusively in omnibus bills.

The true test probably of the constitutional right to appropriate money to improve rivers and harbors or to appropriate money for other internal improvements must rest on that provision of the Constitution granting that-

Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign tions, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes. (Ar sec. 8, par. 3.)

It has been said that it was a sufficient warrant for internal improvements to invoke that part of clause 1 of the same section of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States,"

But this is too broad a claim and leads to absolute centralization. Thus construed under pretense of "common defense" or general welfare," Congress might assume unlimited power in all things. Common defense is an inherent right of every nation as well as of an individual. So as to a State's right to provide for its general welfare. But both rights are functional as to its sovereign existence. In a sense every law that is passed is intended to be for the "common defense" or for the "general welfare," yet it was not intended by the framers of the Constitution to vest in Congress all legislative power and strip. States of wights manufactured by the constitution of wights and wi strip States of rights guaranteed to them or reserved to the people by the Constitution and not prohibited by the express provisions of the Constitution. (Art. X.)

Those who maintained that Congress had power to build at the expense of the United States the Cumberland (or National) road put the constitutional right to do so mainly on the interstate-commerce provision. They did not pretend that Congress could build a common road wholly within a State. To attempt to do this even now would nowhere and in no State be tolerated, though it might be for the "general welfare."

If the words "general welfare" were used in the Constitution as intending to mean "general welfare" of the whole United States, then with only here and there the appropriations proposed in the bill would be constitutional.

Of the 346 places sought to be improved by the bill not a large number of them would stand the test.

Thomas Jefferson, when revenues were likely to exceed expenditures, regretting that there was no constitutional right to expend money for internal improvements, especially for the improvement of rivers and harbors and canals, in his annual message to Congress December 2, 1806, recommended that the Constitution be amended so as to give it power to appropriate money for such purposes, using this language:

I suppose an amendment to the Constitution, by consent of the States, necessary, because the objects now recommended are not among those enumerated in the Constitution, and to which it permits the public moneys to be applied.

He had in 1803 pronounced his own action in acquiring the Louisiana purchase unconstitutional and suggested that the Constitution should be amended to make his action legal.

President Madison, in his annual message of December 5, 1815, made a recommendation for a like amendment of the Constitution and for the same reason—that is, that the Constitution did not grant any right to appropriate money for internal improvements. He was one of the framers of the Constitution.

James Monroe, in his annual message to Congress of December 2, 1817, declared Congress had no Constitutional power to make appropriations for such improvements, and he also recommended that the Constitution be amended so as to give such right. He used this language:

right. He used this language:

Taking into view the trust with which I am now honored, it would be improper, after what has passed, that this discussion should be revived with an uncertainty of my opinion respecting the right. Disregarding early impressions, I have bestowed on the subject all the deliberation which its great importance and a just sense of my duty required, and the result is a settled conviction in my mind that Congress do not possess the right. It is not contained in any of the specified powers granted to Congress, nor can I consider it incidental to or a necessary means, viewed on the most liberal scale, for carrying into effect any of the powers which are specifically granted. In communicating this result I can not resist the obligation which I feel to suggest to Congress the propriety of recommending to the States the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution which shall give to Congress the right in question. right in question.

And in his annual message, dated December 3, 1822, he referred to his prior veto of a bill which proposed to adopt a system of internal improvements, and concluded by again recommending that an amendment to the Constitution was the only way to give Congress the power to adopt such a system. These are the words he uses:

Believing that a competent power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement has not been granted to Congress, but that such a power, confined to great national purposes and with proper limitations, would be productive of eminent advantage to our Union, I have thought it advisable that an amendment of the Constitution to the effect should be recommended to the several States.

President Monroe, in his message vetoing a bill relating to the Cumberland road, again says that only an amendment to the Constitution would vest such power in Congress. He expressed himself as follows:

I am of opinion that Congress does not possess this power; that the States individually can not grant it, for although they may assent to the appropriation of money within their limits for such purposes they can grant no power of jurisdiction or sovereignty by special compacts with the United States. This power can be granted only by an amendment to the Constitution and in the mode prescribed by it.

President Jackson, in his annual message dated December 1, 1834, suggests that an amendment to the Constitution is necessary to confer power on Congress to make internal improvements national in character. He expressed his views on the subject thus:

If the people of the United States desire that the Public Treasury shall be resorted to for the means to prosecute such works, they will concur in an amendment of the Constitution prescribing a rule by which the national character of the works is to be tested and by which the greatest practicable equality of benefits may be secured to each member of the Confederacy.

I come now more particularly to vetoes by Presidents.

President Madison vetoed, March 3, 1817, a bill for the improvement of roads, canals, and water courses, on the ground of its unconstitutionality. He there discusses the "common defense and general welfare" clause of the Constitution and denies that it gives Congress the right to enact such a bill. He uses the following language in his veto message:

The legislative powers vested in Congress are specified and enumerated in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, and it does not appear that the power proposed to be exercised by the bill is among the enumerated powers or that it falls by any just interpretation within the power to make laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution those or other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States.

"The power to regulate commerce among the several States" can not include the power to construct roads and canals and to improve the navigation of water courses in order to facilitate, promote, and secure such a commerce without a latitude of construction departing from the ordinary import of the terms strengthened by the known inconveniences which doubtless lead to the grant of this remedial power to Congress. to Congress.

A restriction of the power "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" to cases which are to be provided for by the expenditure of money would still leave within the legislative power of Congress all the great and most important measures of Government, money being the ordinary and necessary means of carrying them into

President Jackson, in a veto message of May 27, 1830, reviewed the whole subject of constitutional power of Congress to appropriate money for internal improvements, and in the same message he pronounced them unconstitutional and declared that Thomas Jefferson had exceeded his constitutional authority in paying $15,000,000 for the Louisiana Territory to Bonaparte. He concluded that no appropriation is constitutional for any class of works which are not "of a general, not local, national, not State, character." He uses language as follows:

Such grants have always been professedly under the control of the meral principle that the works which might be thus aided should be of a general, not local, national, not State, character." A disregard this distinction would of necessity lead to the subversion of the Federal system.

He affirms Madison's views of the unconstitutionality of internal improvements not national in character. And he shows that under the "common defense and general welfare" clause of the Constitution it would give Congress all power if it was subject to the construction often claimed for it. He denied that the clause granted any right to appropriate money generally for internal improvements. In vetoing the bill in question President Jackson coincided in part, at least, with Madison, and in his veto message quoted the following:

message quoted the following:

A bill was passed though both Houses of Congress and presented for his (Madison's) approval, "setting apart and pledging certain funds for constructing roads and canals and improving the navigation of water courses in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions for the common defense." Regarding the bill as asserting a power in the Federal Government to construct roads and canals within the limits of the States in which they were made, he objected to its passage on the ground of its unconstitutionality, declaring that the assent of the respective States in the mode provided by the bill could not confer the power in question; that the only cases in which the consent and cession of particular States can extend the power of Congress are those specified and provided for in the Constitution, and superadding to these avowals his opinion that "a restriction of the power to provide for the common defense and general welfare.' to cases which are to be provided for by the expenditure of money would still leave within the legislative powers of Congress all the great and most important measures of Government, money being the ordhary and necessary means of carrying them into execution."

In a veto message of May 31, 1830, Jackson reaffirms the same views.

Jackson again, in vetoing a bill for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers—December 6, 1832—pronounced it unconstitutional, saying, among other things, that—

It is obvious that such appropriations involve the sanction of a principle that concedes to the General Government an unlimited power over the subject of internal improvements, and that I could not therefore approve a bill containing them without receding from the positions taken in my veto of the Maysville road bill and afterwards in my annual message of December 6, 1830.

President Jackson, in speaking of a bill to improve the naviga-tion of the Wabash River, declared it unconstitutional, and he further declared that there is little danger of violations of the Constitution affecting personal rights, but that the danger was great where money and selfish motives may be involved. I quote from his annual message of December 1, 1834:

We are in no danger of violations of the Constitution by which encroachments are made upon the personal rights of the citizen. The sentence of condemnation long since pronounced by the American people upon acts of that character will, I doubt not, continue to prove as salutary in its effects as it is irreversible in its nature. But against the danger of unconstitutional acts which, instead of menacing the vengeance of offended authority, proffer local advantages and bring in their train the patronage of the Government we are, I fear, not safe. To suppose that because our Government has been instituted for the benefit of the people it must therefore have the power tod whatever may seem to conduce to the public good is an error into which honest minds are too apt to fall.

Provident Tyler Lune 11, 1844 vetoed a river and harbor bill

President Tyler, June 11, 1844, vetoed a river and harbor bill, holding it unconstitutional, and also because the improvement of a river or harbor for the benefit of one place might be rank injustice to another or other places. He expressed himself on the subject as follows:

The power to remove obstructions from the water courses of the States is claimed under the granted power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;" but the plain and obvious meaning of this grant is that Congress may adopt rules and regulations prescribing the terms and conditions on which the citizens of the United States may carry on commercial operations with foreign states or kingdoms and one which the citizens or subjects of foreign states and kingdoms may prosecute trade with the United States or any of them. And so the power to regulate commerce among the several States no more invests Congress with jurisdiction over the water courses of the States than the first branch of the grant does over water courses of foreign powers, which would be an absurdity.

The application of the revenue of this Government, if the power to do so was admitted, to improve the navigation of the rivers by removing obstructions or otherwise would be for the most part productive only of local benefit. The consequences might prove disastrously ruinous to as many of our fellow-citizens as the exercise of such power would benefit. I will take one instance furnished by the present bill—out of no invidious feeling, for such it would be impossible for me to feel, but because of my greater familiarity with locations—in illustration of the above opinion: Twenty thousand dollars are proposed to be appropriated toward improving the harbor of Richmond, in the State of Virginia. Such improvement would furnish advantages to the city of Richmond and add to the value of the property of its citizens, while it might have a most disastrous influence over the wealth and prosperity of Petersburg, which is situated some 25 miles distant on a branch of James River and which now enjoys its fair portion of trade. So, too, the improvement of James River to Richmond and of the Appomattox to Petersburg might, by inviting the trade to those two towns, have the effect of prostrating the town of Norfolk. This, too, might be accomplished by not adding a single vessel to the number now engaged in the trade of the Chesapeake Bay or bringing into the Treasury a dollar of additional revenue. It would produce, most probably, the single effect of concentrating the commerce now profitably enjoyed by three places upon one of them.

President Polk, August 3, 1846, vetoed a river and harbor bill

President Polk, August 3, 1846, vetoed a river and harbor bill on the ground of its unconstitutionality, saying:

The Constitution has not, in my judgment, conferred upon the Federal Government the power to construct works of internal improvements within the States or to appropriate money from the Treasury for that purpose.

He also vetoed a like bill December 15, 1847, for like reasons. President Pierce also, on August 4, 1854, vetoed a bill for completing certain public works classed as internal improvements. He also vetoed, May 19, 1856, a bill appropriating money to remove obstructions in the mouth of the Mississippi because unconstitutional. He did not believe that it was constitutional to appropriate money for the improvement of the mouth of the great Mississippi River, but things have changed. Mr. Chairman, I remember a few years ago, when we were considering the question of appropriating money for levees for the Mississippi River, of hearing a distinguished Member of Congress from the State of Mississippi state the reason why it was not advisable any longer to press the question of constitutionality. He said he had been a strict Jackson Democrat, but when he was down in his district along the east bank of the Mississippi River in the time of a flood, when the waters of that great stream had overflowed much of his district and many of his constituents were in the attics of their houses, with their heads out at holes they had constructed, and he delivered a constitutional argument to them attempting to demonstrate that it was unconstitutional to levee the Mississippi River, there was not one of them who would listen to it. [Laughter.]

President Grant vetoed, June 30, 1876, a bill which related to certain improvements of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers in Wisconsin, because it was not shown to be of a public character.

I may observe here that at another time President Grant, when he encountered the matter of approving a river and harbor measure that was tacked onto a general appropriation bill, approved the bill, but notified the Secretary of War to see to it that the money appropriated for the local purposes relating to rivers and harbors should never be expended, and it never was.

President Arthur, August 1, 1882, vetoed a river and harbor bill, principally for the reason that it contained appropriations for purposes not for the "common defense and general welfare and which did not promote commerce among the States." He said:

States." He said:

My principal objection to this bill is that it contains appropriations for purposes not for the common defense and general welfare and which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of the particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriations of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus, as the bill becomes more objectionable, it secures more support. This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the lawmaking power. power.

President Cleveland vetoed, May 29, 1896, a river and harbor bill largely for the same reasons assigned by President Arthur. He gave construction to the "general-welfare" clause of the Constitution, denying that it gave Congress power to appropriate money to improve rivers and harbors. Among other things he declared:

Many of the objects for which it appropriates money are not related to the public welfare, and many of them are palpably for the benefit of limited localities or in aid of individual interests.

On the face of the bill it appears that not a few of these alleged improvements have been so improvidently planned and prosecuted that after an unwise expenditure of million of dollars new experiments for their accomplishment have been entered upon.

I am convinced that the bill now under consideration opens the way to insidious and increasing abuses and is in itself so extravagant as to be especially unsuited to these times of depressed business and resulting disappointment in Government revenue.

To the extent that the appropriations contained in this bill are instigated by private interests and promote local or individual projects their allowance can not fail to stimulate paternalism and encourage a sentiment among our people, already too prevalent, that their attachment to our Government may properly rest upon the hope and expectation of direct and especial favors and that the extent to which they are realized may furnish an estimate of the value of governmental

Mr. Chairman, he did, it is true, in that message step aside little from the veto on constitutional grounds.

Now, I have about finished my review and I want to turn back a little. These matters that were discussed ably many years ago have apparently undergone great changes. One of the great controversies over the matter of internal improvement arose in relation to the construction and maintenance of the national roads, and I think I can read with some interest-perhaps some -some of the arguments pro and con on the subject of internal improvement, and especially some that relate to rivers and harbors and national roads. I have here a copy of a speech made in 1838 by Thomas Corwin, and as I recollect it this was the final farewell to appropriations in Congress for the National or Cumberland road. There were intellectual giants in those days, and they did not lightly assume powers not plainly granted by the Constitution. If I occupy a minute or two in reading from this speech it will better show you the character of the discussion than if I undertake to state it. A question was pending before Congress as to the right to appropriate further to maintain the Content of the Constitution. tain the Cumberland or National road, and in the course of the discussion, among other things, the great Corwin said:

discussion, among other things, the great Corwin said:

Yesterday my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Calhoun], with a power of argument and generosity of sentiment equally honorable to his head and heart, spoke in favor of this bill. He adverted to certain objections made by his colleagues [Messrs. Graves and Underwood]. They had opposed the bill as partial in its operation, as giving to the three States through which the road passes a disbursement of money which Kentucky was not permitted to enjoy. He said the disbursements in Indiana would flow into Louisville, in Kentucky, where goods, and even liquors, would be bought, with which the labor on the road would be paid. Upon this another gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Pickens] takes fire. "This, said he, "shows the demoralizing tendency of the system! This is the motive to vote appropriations, that money be raised to buy whisky for the poor laborer to drink!" Sir, I have no objection to the gentleman's moral lectures, but do not see the necessity of throwing his moral sensibilities into convulsions at the sight of a glass of punch, while he can look with a sanctimonious composure at broken promises and violated national faith.

Mr. Speaker, I have one word to say before I sit down to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Underwood]. He spoke the other day in opposition to this bill. He did not deny that the Cumberland road might be useful; but, as he could obtain no money here to enable his people to build dams and make slackwater navigation on Green River—

Where is Green River to-day?—

he could not help us to make a road on the northern side of the Ohio. And then the gentleman proceeded, in a grave disquisition upon our constitutional powers, to make roads and improve rivers. What says the Constitution? "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." What is the gentleman's commentary? "You have," says he, "a clear and undoubted right to improve rivers, but not so of roads." And why, Mr. Speaker, why? Do you, sir, remember the reason for this distinction? It was this: "Providence." says the gentleman, "has marked out rivers as the proper channels and avenues of commerce." What a beautiful and exalted plety is here shedding its clear light upon the dark mysteries of constitutional law! And then how logical the conclusion! Thus runs the argument: "Since it is not the will of God that commerce should be carried on on dry land, but only on the water, the powers over commerce given in the Constitution by our pious ancestors must be understood as limited by the Divine commands; and therefore," says he, "you have power to remove sandbars and islands and blow up rocks out of rivers and creeks to make a channel which Providence has begun and left unfinished, but beware," he would say, "how you cut down a tree or remove a rock on the dry land to complete what Providence has begun there. You have no power by law to do this last; besides it is implous; it is not the will of God."

Mr. Speaker, I know of no parallel to this charming philosophy, unless it is found in the sayings of Mause Hedrigg, an elderly Scotch lady who figures in one of Sir Walter Scott's novels. In one of her evangelical moods she rebuked her son Cuddle for using a fan or any work of art to clean his barley. She said it was "an awesome denial o' Providence not to wait his own time, when he would surely send wind to winnow the chaff out of the grain." In the same spirit of enlight-ened philosophy does the gentleman exhort us in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to cease our impious roadmaking and wait the good time of Providence, who will, as he seems to think, surely send a river to run from Cumberland over the Alleghenies, across the Ohio, and so on in its heavend

The Cumberland road was completed only to Springfield, Ohio, about 1839. It for a time was controlled by the Federal Government, then passed to the State of Ohio.

I know, Mr. Chairman, my time will not permit me to read further from this great speech delivered in 1838, relating to the matter of appropriations for national roads in this country. In 1839, according to my recollection, the National road was finished from Cumberland to Springfield, Ohio, my home. line of it was cut out clear through, I believe, to St. Louis. Further appropriations being refused, in time the National Government surrendered its control to the State of Ohio over that part of the road in Ohio. I introduced the last bill into the Congress of the United States, and had it passed through both Houses, finally surrendering all right, power, control, or liability of the United States to the State of Ohio over that part of the Cumberland road, and then after that the State of Ohio surrendered all that right to counties, so that the National road in Ohio has gone back to the county-road system and is now so maintained, without toll.

We have long since ended the business of national road improvements, but river and harbor bills still come up blooming. If Green River, Kentucky, is not remembered in this bill the Kentucky River is remembered, with a direct cash appropriation of $100,000 and an authorization of $450,000 more to build locks and dams, and that sort of thing has been going on for about eighty years.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.
Mr. JAMES. If I understand correctly, you were arguing that Congress has no authority to make improvements on the

Mr. KEIFER. I did not state it so broadly as that. I said for these local improvements that were purely State.

Mr. JAMES. Now, I understood you to say last week, when you were making a speech on this bill, that your district, so far as appropriations in this bill were concerned, was de bonis non.

Mr. KEIFER. You bet. [Laughter.] Mr. JAMES. Now, if the committee had dealt liberally with your district, would that have thrown any light upon the constitutionality of it?

Mr. KEIFER. Not a particle. And my complaint about brethren here is that their constitutional sense is gathered from the number of dollars found in the bill for the benefit of their particular localities. I am, however, clearly of the opinion that an improvement could be made through my district, such as was recommended by George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, both before and after the Constitution of the United States took effect, and that is to connect by a ship canal on the line of the Miami and Erie Canal, the Ohio with Lake Erie by a channel through which the commerce of the world could flow; and if we build that I will have no constitutional scruples about our power to do it, and I will still not be in favor of purely local river and harbor improvements,

That would elucidate the Constitution. Mr. JAMES.

Mr. KEIFER. Not a bit.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, the historical data just given us by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] is decidedly interesting and instructive, but I would like to say to the gentleman, in all kindness, that while he has been taking a recess from political activity in this House the procession has moved forward; public sentiment has grown until to-day it is generally recognized that the development of the waterways of the country is one of the most commendable projects undertaken by the National Government, and one which adds materially to the commercial development of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of this committee to the pending bill, and to the sins of omission and commission charged against the Rivers and Harbors Committee. committee has sinned, it appears that it is in omission rather than in commission. So far as the discussion has given us light upon the bill, but one item has been criticised, and that in a humorous vein, probably for the purpose of putting it upon a parallel with other projects which it is desired to include in the bill and which the committee is charged with the sin of omission for not I refer to the Cold Spring Inlet or Cape May project. including. It is true there is no commerce there at present. It is true there is no national or public harbor at this place. It is only fair to this House, therefore, that a statement concerning this project be made. I was not a member of the subcommittee that considered this, but I will give the facts as I understand them.

A harbor, land locked, safe from every storm, 500 acres in area, has been constructed on the New Jersey coast between the mouth of the Delaware River and Sandy Hook, a coast 123 miles in length, subject to severe storms, and without a harbor of refuge or a place where a boat can seek safety in time of storm.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How far from this place is the nearest harbor of refuge?

Mr. DAVIDSON. The nearest harbor of refuge is at the mouth of the Delaware River, about 17 miles south, to be reached by an entrance which is decidedly dangerous when ice floes are jamming out of the Delaware River. A few years ago seventeen vessels sunk at their anchors and others were torn loose and carried out by the ice and never heard of afterwards.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a moment ago that there was no harbor within 123 miles of this place. I wanted to give him an opportunity to correct that statement.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The gentleman from Illinois is absolutely mistaken. I said there was no harbor of refuge on the New Jersey coast from the mouth of the Delaware River to New York, a distance of 123 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the particular harbor that the gen-

Mr. DAVIDSON. I have said that the harbor does not yet If the gentleman will take his seat, he will get some information. This proposed harbor is but a short distance comparatively from the mouth of the Delaware River, but the mouth of the Delaware River and harbor of refuge connected therewith is, as I have stated, one of the most dangerous entrances on the coast at a time of storm and when the ice is going out of the river. Now, this proposed harbor and inner basin has been constructed to a depth of 35 to 40 feet over an area of 500 acres, at a cost of nearly $5,000,000. The only thing the Government is asked to do is to build a channel connecting the outer ocean with the inner harbor.

Mr. MADDEN. How does the recommendation of the expenditure of $1,200,000 in this instance compare with the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the effect that it was the policy of the committee never to make a recommendation for an appropriation except where the tonnage was sufficient to warrant the expenditures?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Oh, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors never made any such statement. There are appropriations in this bill for projects where there is no commerce, and the gentleman knows, if he knows anything about waterway improvement, that there are many places where the improvement must be made before there can be any commerce. The 45,000,000 tons of commerce that goes through the Soo Canal was absolutely impossible before the canal was built.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very glad to have the gentleman make that admission; very glad.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The gentleman may get what satisfaction he can out of it. The tonnage through the St. Clair River of 55,000,000 tons was not possible until the Government stepped in and deepened the channel.

Now the Cape May project is for the Government to construct a channel half a mile long to connect with the inner har-Under the provisions of the bill by which the inner harbor becomes a public harbor, all necessary land for lighthouse purposes, engineers' quarters, and all those things, is to be donated to the Government free of cost. In addition to the large amounts contributed by private parties and by Atlantic City to create this inner harbor, amounting to about three and one-half million dollars, we require them to contribute one hundred thousand more, upon the condition that the Government shall dig a channel to connect the inner harbor with the outside waters, so that boats of the deepest draft can enter in time of storm or can come in for purposes of commerce.

There are two lines of railway expending a large amount of money and creating terminal facilities there. That they will benefit from this I have no doubt.

Isn't this intended for a summer resort? Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Oh, the gentleman knows that Atlantic City is a summer resort.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not owned by wealthy individuals that have summer homes there?

Mr. DAVIDSON. When the gentleman made his speech he read the advertisement of a realty company and imitated the barker at a side show with admirable ability in describing the inducements that the realty company offered to people who would buy their land. The fact is there isn't an expenditure of money made in the United States upon any harbor or river but what it benefits some railroad or some real estate company, and I do not know but what it is just as laudable for men in the real estate business to advertise as it is for men in any other busi-The mere fact that a real estate advertiser saw fit to print something of this kind on the back of a calendar seems to have convinced the gentleman from Illinois that this project was an unworthy one.

Will not the gentleman from Wisconsin ad-Mr. MADDEN. mit to the House that the real estate company who advertises so beautifully owns all the real estate on the harbor for which this House is being asked to appropriate $1,200,000?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I do not know whether it is true or not, nor do I care. The fact is that the harbor will be a public I believe commerce will be developed there, but in any event this improvement ought to be adopted to make a harbor of refuge on the coast of New Jersey. Since 1879 fifty-six vessels have been wrecked on this coast, with considerable loss of This of itself is enough to convince me that the Governnent can well afford to spend the amount here recommended toward this harbor of refuge. The fact that the project is favorably recommended by the Board of Engineers, by the legislature of New York, the Maritime Association of New York, the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, Delaware Bay and River Pilots' Association, and a large number of captains and masters of vessels ought to convince every member of this committee of its worth. So much for the sin of commission,

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will not yield at this time. I will give the gentleman a chance to ask questions later on.

Now, what are our sins of omission? The first one is the charge that we have failed to make provision for a survey for a 35-foot channel in the Delaware River. We have made liberal provision for the completion of a 30-foot channel in the Delaware River. To obtain a 30-foot channel in the Delaware River from Philadelphia to its mouth requires some 60 or 70 miles of dredging, and to maintain a 30-foot channel dredging to a depth of 32 feet is necessary. There is a tremendous amount of silt carried down the Delaware River. It is only exceeded as a silt-bearing stream by the Missouri. The question of the cost of maintaining a 35-foot channel is a very serious one.

Philadelphia has done more for itself in the improvement of its harbor than any other city in the United States, and this is to its credit. It is a city very nearly 100 miles inland. It is a city of large commerce. But large as its tonnage is, the question arises, Can a city nearly 100 miles inland expect always to be upon the same footing as a city on the coast? We have Boston, New York, and Baltimore—cities on the Atlantic coast each of tremendous tonnage. Philadelphia wants the same depth of channel. Its tonnage entitles it to the best channel we can give it, but the application of the same principle would carry deep water to Albany, on the Hudson; to Richmond, on the James; to Jacksonville, on the St. Johns River. it becomes a question for us to seriously consider how far up we can carry deep water to an inland city. But the most serious question is the one which involves the maintenance of a 35-foot channel in this river, and whether it can be done at anything like a reasonable rate. If it can, I want to see them have a 35-foot channel. But no one can determine that fact until we have first obtained a 30-foot channel and then had some experience in maintaining it. Then engineers can tell with some degree of certainty how much it will cost to maintain a channel 5 feet deeper. This, gentlemen, is the reason why we have not thought it was good business policy to undertake to find out now what it would cost to make and maintain a 35-foot channel.

What are the other sins of omission? Practically a sin of omission is charged by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] and his colleague because we have cut the appropriation for that portion of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the In connection with this a map was exhibited, by which the attempt was made to show that the committee had been partial to other localities as against that portion of the Mississippi River. They told us that the Lake region had $19,473,000 in this bill, and that this was one of the reasons why this portion of the Mississippi had not received what it was entitled to. Gentlemen, I want to say to you in all candor that in the framing of this bill there never has been since I have been on that committee a question of sectionalism or of Neither one of those things has ever entered into the committee room. We undertake to dispose of every project on its merits in comparison with the other projects throughout the country, and recommend to your consideration a bill which does fair and equal justice to all portions of the country.

It is true this bill carries about nineteen and one-half million dollars for the harbors and connecting channels of the Great Lakes, but, gentlemen, that appropriation gives benefit to over 240,000,000 tons of commerce. This is divided among a number of States in which are harbors located on some of the Great Lakes, as follows: New York, 14,377,000 tons; Ohio, 39,950,000 tons; Michigan, 15,577,000 tons; Wisconsin, 15,388,000 tons; Minnesota, including harbor at Superior, Wis. 38,213,000 tons, and Illinois, 20,060,000 tons. It includes 45,000,000 tons of commerce which last year passed through the canal at Sault Ste. Marie, and 55,508,000 tons which passed through the Detroit River during the last season.

Of the nineteen and one-half million dollars referred to. $6,200,000 is for an additional lock at the Soo. This additional improvement is absolutely necessary in order that the tremendous tonnage passing that point may not be delayed through any accident which might happen to the existing lock.

Of the nineteen and one-half million dollars referred to, $6,970,000 is for the construction of an alternative channel in the Detroit River. It is said that during the navigable season of the year a boat passes a given point in the Detroit River every seven and one-half minutes. Think of that tremendous tonnage of 75,000,000 passing through that river, and then realize, if you can, what it means to have a boat sink and block the channel. This has occurred several times. When such an accident happens all navigation must cease, and boats will be at anchor for miles and miles on either side of this obstruction awaiting its removal in order that they may pass on.

It seemed to the committee absolutely necessary that an additional channel be provided so that there may be no possibility of delay to the tonnage which must necessarily pass through that

This is why we have put nineteen and one-half million dollars on the Lakes and their connecting channels. It is because the tonnage is there; it is because the business is there that demands this appropriation. We have recommended in this bill $4,000,000 for the Ohio River. We do it because the Ohio River carries a commerce of over 13,000,000 tons. The Mississippi River, between the mouth of the Missouri and St. Paul, has a tonnage of 4,089,000. For this section of the river we have appropriated $2,000,000. For the lower Mississippi, from the mouth of the Ohio down to the Passes, and which has a tonnage of three and a half millions, we have appropriated something like $9,000,000, I believe. Now, gentlemen, coming to this portion of the river, for which my friend from Missouri so severely criticises the committee, from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Missouri, the figures show that the tonnage was 7,125,000. The figures also show that of that amount 6,684,000 tons were transferred by ferries. That is commerce which simply crosses the river at the city of St. Louis from one side of the river to the other on a line of ferryboats. That commerce does not need the removal of snags above or sand bars below. It is simply a transfer across the river where there is plenty of water at all seasons of the year. Take that amount out of this tonnage, and I take it out because in no other harbor which I have quoted has that kind of tonnage been included-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my friend permit an interruption here?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. When he started his argument, he stated that the result of these improvements is commerce; that the improvement must first be made, and that the commerce will follow in many cases. Well, that is exactly our argument. Our argument is that we can not have the commerce as long as you leave that stretch of the river unimproved, which, in our judgment, is the most important.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes. I thank the gentleman, but before answering his question, I want to show the net tonnage for the river from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio. Subtract the amount transferred by ferries and you have a net tonnage of 440,554 tons. Why, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] said that he had difficulty in finding how the committee could appropriate money for Raccoon Creek, yet I say to you that the tonnage of that creek, for which we recommend $15,000 in this bill, almost equals the tonnage of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio. [Applause.] Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] interrupts me to say that you have to spend the money first; that you have to improve a river before the tonnage will come. What have we been doing for this particular part of the Mississippi River? What have we spent on this most important stretch of the river? We spent, from 1890 to 1905, $8,819,999.96. On this particular stretch of river we have spent altogether over $12,000,000, and all it has produced is 440,554 tons of commerce. We have spent money enough, if that is what they wanted to get commerce. In 1893, 1894, and 1895 we spent $758,000 a year, and in 1897, 1898, and 1899 we spent $673,000 each year.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will my colleague excuse me for an interruption? I may say that that amount is larger than the total amount spent upon the Rhine River by the Government of Germany, with a commerce of 30,000,000 of tons.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. You spent the money, but did not give us the water. That is the reason we did not have any commerce.

Mr. DAVIDSON. In the hearings held in the hotel at St. Louis two years ago I asked one of the leading board of trade men what was the fact as to the navigability of the stream at that time, as compared with twenty or thirty years ago. He said the navigable stage of the Mississippi River had never been as good as it was at that time. We have been spending this money to improve this stream. They say we have not given them water, but we have given them more water than they ever had before as a continuous navigable channel. The project for that river provides for a 6-foot channel from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Louis, an 8-foot channel from St. Louis to Cairo, and a 10-foot channel from Cairo to New Orleans. The 8-foot channel has been maintained throughout the entire season from St. Louis to Cairo and a 9-foot channel has been maintained during the entire season from Cairo to New Or-

Now, with that tremendous appropriation since 1890, or the last sixteen years, of $8,819,000, they ought to produce results, they ought to do business; but what have they done? Let me read to you the commercial statistics of the city of St. Louis, as far as water transportation is concerned. In the year 1899 the tonnage amounted to 669,815; in the year 1900 it amounted to 757,590. In the year 1901 it commenced to go down; 1900 was the high-water mark of the tonnage of the city of St. Louis. In 1901 it was 672,000; in 1902 it was 641,000; in 1903 it was 352,000; in 1904 it was 377,000; and in 1905, 370,000.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. DAVIDSON. I will ask for ten minutes' additional time, and I will be as brief as I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for ten min-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit an inter-

Mr. DAVIDSON. I can not permit further interruptions, as my time is limited.

The persistent campaign of misrepresentation and abuse which the leading newspapers of St. Louis have conducted against the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and especially against its chairman, comes with poor grace, when it is known that there has been a continuous falling off in the transportation of commerce to and from the city of St. Louis during the last fifteen years, notwithstanding the fact that during that time nearly $9,000,000 have been expended on that stretch of the Mississippi River. In addition, I am informed that of the leading packet lines engaged in traffic on the Mississippi River not one is owned by capitalists of St. Louis. It is true a few gentlemen residing in St. Louis own stock in some of these packet lines, and it is also true that a few small boats outside of those engaged principally in ferriage are owned in that city.

A few years ago a transportation company was organized at St. Louis, and at one time they had in operation on the Mississippi River 13 towboats and 102 freight barges. This, I think, was in 1889. In that year this company did business to the extent of 549,464 tons of freight. This, however, was its high watermark. Steadily each year thereafter its volume of business decreased. The building of new boats ceased in 1893, and at each opportunity thereafter it sold some of those they had. In 1904 its fleet had been reduced to three towboats and thirty-two barges, and during that year those were sold to the Monongahela River Coal and Coke Company, of Pittsburg, and the St. Louis company went out of business.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman decline to answer a question?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I can not yield. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have shown to the committee that this stretch of the river has, during the last few years, had a more permanent channel for navigation purposes than ever before in its history, and yet notwithstanding this and the large amount of money expended, the traffic has steadily decreased, and but little use is made of the river by the great industrial institutions of the city of St. Louis. This of itself is, in my judgment, sufficient reason for the action of the committee in reducing the appropriation for this portion of the river.

There is, however, another very good reason why a larger appropriation should not be made. You are all aware of the project for a deep waterway from Chicago to the Gulf. From Lockport to St. Louis this proposed waterway had been surveyed and an estimate made of its cost of construction. plan recommended for that portion of it along the Mississippi River from Grafton to St. Louis proposes the construction of a dam near Alton which will create a pool sufficient to form a 14-foot channel a distance of 151 miles from Grafton to the mouth of the Missouri. From this point to the city of St. Louis, a distance of about 23 miles, it is proposed to construct a lateral canal along the side of the river. The construction of such a canal and the diversion of the traffic through it from the Mississippi River would make it unnecessary to further permanently improve that portion of the river.

The board of engineers to whom this deep-waterway project was referred in its report says:

From Cairo to New Orleans the present project contemplates a depth of 10 feet, and, while a depth of 9 feet has been practically secured, to maintain it calls for an expenditure of approximately $300,000 per year. So far as known, no estimate for increasing this depth to 14 feet has ever been made, but it is clear to the board that it would involve enormous expenditure and for a portion of the distance at least the construction of a lateral canal.

If, therefore, as a part of the deep-waterway project, a lateral canal is necessary from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Louis. and a lateral canal probably necessary for at least a portion, if not all, the distance from St. Louis to Cairo, why should we at this time provide money for permanently improving that portion of the river when we have already provided in this bill for a survey for an extension of the deep-waterway project from St. Louis to the Gulf, and when we are so strongly assured by the gentlemen interested in that project that this deep waterway is bound to come. The committee must remember that the appropriation recommended for this portion of the Mississippi River is entirely sufficient to maintain the existing channel and to repair the existing permanent revetment work. In view of all these circumstances, I submit that the appropriation recommended for that portion of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio is entirely sufficient, and sound business judgment would not warrant any larger appropriation at this time.

The deep-waterway project from Chicago to St. Louis is another sin of omission charged against the Rivers and Harbors

For several days we have listened to able addresses on the benefits of waterway improvement generally, and especially of the benefits to accrue from the construction of this particular waterway. No one who has spoken in beof this particular waterway. No one who has spoken in behalf of this project has informed this committee how many locks would be necessary, how many reaches or pools would be constructed, how much material would have to be removed, what difficulties there are to overcome, and even some have had trouble, in answer to questions propounded, to tell how many miles in length this waterway would be.

This is a great project. As originally conceived it was for a 14-foot waterway from Chicago to St. Louis. As the campaign in its behalf has progressed, it has grown and lengthened until now it is not only a project for a 14-foot waterway from Chicago to St. Louis, but is heralded generally as a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, and of sufficient depth to float the largest battle ships.

The amendment upon which the committee will be asked to vote not only makes provision for the construction of a 14-foot waterway, but an additional amount of $1,600,000 is included for the purpose of putting the miter sills of the locks down to a depth of 20 feet, indicating that at some future time the pro-motors of this proposition propose to make it of that depth.

Many reasons have been given why this project should be adopted, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey] advanced one or two which are unique, to say the least. If I remember correctly, the gentleman urged that this waterway was necessary in order that boats to engage in traffic on the Gulf might be built at the shipyards on the Great Lakes.

Is it not possible to build shipyards on the Gulf coast where such boats may be constructed?

Again, he said that it would afford an opportunity for boats engaged in traffic on the Lakes during the summer to go south and engage in coastwise traffic on the Gulf during the winter.

He evidently is not aware that boats operating on the fresh water of the Lakes are constructed different in many respects from those intended to operate on the salt seas, and it would seem as if it would be necessary for boats operating on the Gulf to remain there continuously if they were to do a successful business.

An additional reason for the construction of this waterway was that it would afford an opportunity to bring battle ships to the Great Lakes to confront any enemy which might bring its battle ships through the Welland Canal and thus endanger our northern frontier. I believe he expresses the opinion that the Dreadnought, England's greatest sea fighter, could be lightened sufficiently to come through the Welland Canal, and this 14foot waterway would enable our largest battle ships to come up from the Gulf. The draft of the Dreadnought loaded is 27 feet, and lightened by the removal of everything possible to remove would be 24 feet. Our largest battle ships draw from 25 to 27 feet loaded and from 22 to 24 feet lightened; even the cruisers draw 20 feet before receiving their turrets, guns, ammunition, and coal supply. Hence something better than a 14-foot waterway is necessary, if it is to afford a channel for our Navy. But why do we omit this project? I will tell you.

In the first place, of what value to the commerce of the country is a 14-foot waterway from Chicago to St. Louis unless the same depth is continued to the Gulf? Why should we expend $31,000,000 to construct a channel of this depth to St. Louis and there let it end in a pocket, from which the only escape would be a channel 9 feet in depth? If this waterway is to be of benefit to the commerce of the country, and especially in connection with the completion of the Panama Canal, it must be extended to the Gulf, so that boats loading on the Lakes or at Chicago could at least take their loads to New Orleans for transfer to ocean-going vessels. If a transfer from a bottom drawing 14 feet to one drawing 9 feet is made necessary at St. Louis, then there is no reason why the channel from Chicago to St. Louis should exceed a 9-foot depth.

Had the promoters of this project been willing to accept a proposition to construct an 8 or 9 foot channel to St. Louis and there connect with the present navigable channel in the Mississippi River of the same depth, it is possible we might have Such a channel would be of material benefit not only in actually carrying commerce, but in regulating the freight charges on all commerce originating in or transferred through that section.

We have included in this bill a provision for a survey from St. Louis to the Gulf in order that we may know whether it is practicable to obtain and maintain a 14-foot channel either within the banks of the Mississippi River or by a lateral canal.

We believe we ought to know whether such a channel is possible of construction and of maintenance, and, in addition, what it will cost not only to construct but to maintain it, and then to have some estimate as to the commercial benefits which may easonably be expected therefrom.

We would justly be entitled to the severest criticism if we placed in this bill any provision for commencing work on any project unless we were able to tell you whether it was possible to complete it, how much it would cost to complete it, and something about the benefits which it is expected will be derived from Why, therefore, should we make an exception in this case? Why appropriate money to construct the first link of this deep waterway without knowing whether it is possible to construct the second, without which the first is practically of no value?

The friends of this project, notably the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden], and the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rodenberg], and the other gentleman from the same State Mr. RAINEY], each assert that the drainage canal which has been constructed by the city of Chicago at an expense of nearly $50,000,000 was to form a part of this great waterway, and that it would be donated to the Government of the United States to be used for the purposes of navigation, providing the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers were improved by the General Govern-They have offered an amendment making provision for $5,000,000 cash appropriation and $26,000,000 under the continuous-contract system to complete this work, and yet there is not in that amendment any reference to the provision under which this drainage canal is to be donated to the Government. There has been nothing filed so far as I am aware with this Congress, or with the Rivers and Harbors Committee, that would bind either the State of Illinois, or the city of Chicago, or the Sanitary District, to convey free of cost to the Government this drainage canal.

Mr. RAINEY. It is provided in the laws of Illinois; the statute provides it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. What law of Mr. RAINEY. The act of 1889. What law of Illinois?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I thank the gentleman for this informa-Government, under the provisions of the act of the legislature of the State of Illinois. We have been told that it comes free of cost. Let me read to you section 24 of the act referred to:

When such channel shall be completed and the water turned therein to the amount of 300,000 cubic feet of water-per minute, the same is hereby declared a navigable stream, and whenever the General Government shall improve the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers for navigation to connect with this channel, said General Government shall have full control over the same for navigation purposes, but not to interfere with its control for sanitary or drainage purposes.

You will note that section provides for making the drainage canal a navigable channel, but it reserves to the sanitary district the absolute control for sanitary or drainage purposes.

If at any time the General Government shall improve the Des Plaines or Illinois rivers, so that the same shall be capable of receiving a flow of 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute, or more, from said channel, and shall provide for the payment of all damages which any extra flow above 300,000 cubic feet of water per minute from such channel may cause to private property, so as to save harmless the said district from all liability therefrom, then such sanitary district shall, within one year thereafter, enlarge the entire channel leading into said Des Plaines or Illinois rivers from said district to a sufficient size and capacity to produce and maintain a continuous flow throughout the same of not less than 600,000 cubic feet per minute, with a current of not more than 3 miles per hour, and such channel shall be constructed upon such grade as to be capable of producing a depth of water not less than 180 feet throughout said channel, and shall have a width of not less than 160 feet at the bottom.

Under this act the drainage canal becomes a navigable channel, and may be used as such, providing the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers are improved to an extent capable of receiving a flow of 600,000 cubic feet of water per minute. avail ourselves of the use of this canal we must make the lower extension of sufficient capacity to take care of at least 600,000 cubic feet per minute, and we must save harmless the sanitary district from all liability for damages which any extra flow above 300,000 cubic feet of water per minute may cause.

Now, we have been told by gentlemen representing the sanitary district that it is absolutely necessary for drainage and sanitary purposes that they shall have permission to flow 600,000 cubic feet per minute from Lake Michigan into this canal. They demand the right to increase that to 840,000 cubic feet per minute as the sanitary necessity increases.

In a hearing had before the Rivers and Harbors Committee on the Niagara Falls bill, Mr. Robert R. McCormick, president of the sanitary district of Chicago, said:

Ten thousand cubic feet per second (which means 600,000 cubic feet per minute) is not enough to preserve the health of Chicago. The drainage canal, which has been built at a cost already of $50,000,000, is the only means by which Chicago can be drained and the drinking water kept clean. It is planned to have an eventual flow of 14,000 cubic feet per second. * * * There are two or three reasons why 14,000 feet is the minimum. One is that we have to reverse the flow of the Chicago River and the Calumet River. It takes about 6,000 cubic feet a second to reverse the Chicago River and it will take 4,000 cubic feet a second to reverse the Calumet River. That makes the 10,000 cubic feet that the committee of engineers has spoken of. To carry off other sewage from different parts of the city and to connect up the sewerage system will take an additional 4,000, making 14,000 feet a second.

Mr. Isham Randolph, chief engineer of the Sanitary District, at the same hearing, said:

The capacity of the Chicago River for flow was 150,000 cubic feet of water per minute. We have been engaged for some years in deepening and widening that river. We are widening it to about 200 feet. We are deepening it to 26 feet. This gives a volume of flow through the river at a limit of a mile and a quarter per hour of 480,000 cubic feet of water per minute. The Thirty-ninth street conduit will discharge into the south branch of the Chicago River 120,000 cubic feet of water per minute. This will give us 600,000 cubic feet of water through our main drainage canal. * * * There is growing up to the south of us within the city limits a district which is going to be very populous. This district is all discharging now into the Calumet River, which flows directly into Lake Michigan. It is necessary for the proper protection of Chicago that the Calumet River should be reversed. We will require for that project 4,000 cubic feet of water per second, making the total of 14,000 cubic feet of water per second we ask. which we ask.

These gentlemen, authorized to speak for the Sanitary District have told us that 10,000 cubic feet per second or 600,000 cubic feet per minute must flow through the drainage canal as a present necessity, and that with the reversal of the Calumet River 4,000 cubic feet additional will be required, making in all 14,000 cubic feet per second, or 840,000 cubic feet per minute.

When the report of the board of engineers who investigated this project was submitted but 250,000 cubic feet per minute was being discharged. On account of this discharge and as a result thereof 224 lawsuits have been brought against the trustees of the Sanitary District of Chicago for flowage damages, the claims aggregating $4,409,180. If this is a result of discharging 250,000 cubic feet per minute, who can measure the damage to all the property lying in the valley of the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers when 600,000 cubic feet per minute has been turned through the drainage canal, and still more, who can measure the damages which will result from the flow of $40,000 cubic feet per minute, and who will pay these damages? The Government of the United States.

The act of the Illinois legislature which I have quoted says that the Government must hold the sanitary district free from liability for all damage in excess of 300,000 cubic feet per min-The president and the chief engineer of the sanitary district say that for sanitary purposes alone they must have now 600,000 cubic feet per minute. If that means anything, it means that the moment, by Congressional action, the improvement of the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers is made possible, and the drainage canal becomes a navigable channel, the Government of the United States pays damages caused by the flow which is absolutely necessary for sanitary purposes, and which must be paid for by the sanitary district if the Government does not make that improvement. Is it any wonder, therefore, that we find these gentlemen from Illinois so ardently supporting this proposition, under the terms of which they propose to unload onto the General Government the liability for paying flowage damages, the extent and amount of which is beyond our possible calculation or comprehension, in order that Chicago may be relieved from anying what is absolutely necessary to care for the sewage of the city?

Talk about this canal coming to the Government free of cost-I say to the Members of this House that if you vote the amendment proposed onto this bill, you saddle onto the General Government an expenditure which will run so far into the millions that the original cost of the waterway itself will appear won-derfully insignificant. If 250,000 cubic feet per minute has resulted in the bringing of 224 lawsuits, with damages aggregating nearly $4,500,000, what will 600,000 cubic feet per minute, now claimed to be necessary, and what will $40,000 cubic feet per minute, which it is claimed will be necessary in a few years, bring in the way of Jawsuits and claims against the Government? I warn you, gentlemen, not to vote this proposition into law until you have some assurance that the General Government will not be made liable for flowage damages which the city of Chicago ought in all honor to pay.

But there is another, and to me a most important reason, why this project should not be adopted at this time. The 600,000 or 840,000 cubic feet of water per minute which it is proposed to divert through this canal and waterway must come from Lake Michigan. Lakes Michigan and Huron are practically of the same height. The water area of Lake Michigan is 22,400 square miles, and that of Lake Huron 23,200 square miles. The mean surface level of Lake Michigan is 581.35 feet above mean tide at New York, and the level of Lake Huron is 581.04 feet, a difference of only five one-hundredths of a foot between the level two lakes. These lakes being practically at the same of the two lakes. These lakes being practically at the same level they form a pool, the natural outlet of which is the St. Clair and Detroit rivers. The level of these two lakes being above that of Lake Erie, any additional outlet which takes water from this pool must necessarily affect its level and in time also affect the flow through the natural outlet. The possible effect on the level of this pool by a diversion of water through the drainage canal has been the subject of considerable scientific investigation, and many valuable reports have been submitted thereon. That it will affect the level of the Lakes there seems to be no doubt. Those engineers of the United States Army who have investigated this subject, without exception, report that the level of Lakes Michigan and Huron will be affected, and Mr. Randolph, the engineer for the Sanitary District, in answer to a question which I asked him at the hearing, before referred to, said that while he had never done any individual work upon the proposition, he had heard engineers who had stated that the diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second would lower Lake Michigan 6 inches. In answer to a question, he said:

If you lower the surface of those lakes you would diminish the depth of the rivers which flow out of them, and consequently the volume of flow which passes through that cross section. You diminish the cross section by diminishing the level of the lake.

What he meant by that was that the lowering of Lakes Huron and Michigan would lessen the flow through the St. Clair and Detroit rivers, and thus affect the level of Lake Erie.

On that hearing I asked Mr. Randolph this question:

Mr. Davidson. As a matter of fact, then, the drawing of water through the drainage canal would affect the level of Lake Huron as well as the level of Lake Michigan?

Mr. Randolph. Certainly. These two lakes being practically one pool, they would be affected by it.

Mr. Burgess. Lake Huron would be lowered 6 inches, too.

Mr. Randolph. Probably.

I quote from that hearing for the purpose of showing that Mr. Randolph corroborates the opinion of the Government engineers in the effect which the diversion through the drainage canal will have on Lakes Michigan and Huron and the rivers which drain those lakes.

Col. W. H. Bixby, of the United States Corps of Engineers, in a paper prepared in connection with the act for the preservation of Niagara Falls, said:

From the point of view of the lake-survey discussion upon this subject, I affirm positively that any continuous permanent diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Mississippi River basin through the sanitary district drainage canal or other waterways must necessarily effect a permanent lowering of the average water level of Lakes Michigan and Huron if the effect be considered as measured below the levels which would exist in these lakes if no such diversion were allowed. The only question at issue is, therefore, whether such lowering will be appreciable and serious.

From the lake-survey discussion, above referred to, it will be evident that—

One year's steady flowage in cubic feet—		Will equal a volume equivalent to that of—
Per second.	Per minute.
4,167 6,000 8,000 10,000 12,000 14,000 20,000 30,000	250,000 360,000 480,000 600,000 720,000 840,000 1,200,000 1,800,000	1.3 inches depth 2.4 inches depth 3.0 inches depth 4.1 inches depth 4.1 inches depth 5.9 inches depth 8.9 inches depth	Over the entire water surface (45,314 square miles) of Lakes Michigan and Huron combined.

It is evident that a long-continued diversion of the above volumes of water must produce serious cumulative effects, not necessarily specially observable in the first few years, but sure and certain in its final effects upon the average level after several years; and the consequent permanent lowering will continue until the time comes when the water surface of the head of St. Clair River (natural outlet of Lakes Michigan and Huron) shall have lowered enough to cause the loss of water flow through St. Clair River to equal the newly developed water flow through St. Clair River to equal the newly developed water flow through the new diversion outlets. Were it not that the volume of outflow of Lake Huron diminishes slightly as the surface level drops, the surface level of combined Lakes Michigan and Huron would be lowered each year by an amount equal to that of the last column of the above table.

As it has been found by reliable observations of the United States lake survey (see 1904 annual report, above quoted) that a fall of 1 foot in Lake Huron level corresponds to a loss of 19,238 cubic feet per second in the flow discharge through St. Clair River, it becomes evident that the final permanent lowering of Lakes Michigan and Huron levels will be a little more than twice as much as the depths given in the above table as corresponding to the actual volume of a single year's flow. The lake survey formulæ lead to actual results approximately as follows:

These effects may be one-twentieth more during years of low lake stages or one-seventh less during years of high lake stages.

The effect on Lake Erie will be very closely four-fifths of the above and will in like manner amount to approximately as follows:

In another part of the same papers Colonel Bixby said:

In another part of the same papers Colonel Bixby said:

In 1879-80 the water level of Lakes Michigan and Huron was at about a medium stage, after which the annual average gradually rose about 0.3 foot on an average each year until 1886, when it reached as high as at any time since 1860, after which it fell about 0.3 foot per year until 1895-96, when it was lower than any prior period, after which it again started upward, its average rise for the past nine years being, however, only 0.12 foot per year, leaving the water level of 1904-5 at a standstill and at an exceedingly low stage, where a downward tendency of level would seriously damage the interests of navigation and lead to great expense to the Federal Government for extensive redredging in all the harbors of Lakes Michigan, Huron, and Erie, and in the adjoining waterways of St. Marys River from Lake Huron upward to the foot of the Soo locks, and in the St. Clair River and Lake, and Detroit River from Lake Huron downward to Lake Erie.

Again the Colonel says:

Again the Colonel says:

That 10,000 cubic feet per second (or 600,000 cubic feet per minute) will eventually and permanently lower the levels of Lakes Michigan and Huron by about 0.5 foot and Lake Erie by about 0.4 foot, and 14,000 cubic feet per second, or 840,000 cubic feet per minute, will make these depths 0.7 and 0.6, respectively, which will be quite costly in future results.

Again, he says, after referring to the possibility of other demands being made at Chicago and near-by points for diversion of water from Lake Michigan for sanitary and other purposes:

Consequently any question as to the volume of diversion of Lake Michigan waters into the Mississippi River basin must look forward to demands for a much greater diversion than the 10,000 cubic feet per second now needed by the Sanitary Drainage District, and greater even than the 14,000 cubic feet per second now requested by them for present and future use. In my opinion, the War Department must look forward to a future not unreasonable demand for from 20,000 to 30,000 cubic feet per second for navigation and sanitary purposes.

A diversion of 30,000 cubic feet per second would lower the levels of Lake Michigan and Lake Huron 19 inches, and the level of Lake Erie 16 inches, as appears from the table to which It must be apparent, therefore, that these I have referred. diversions will make absolutely necessary the redredging of the harbors and the connecting channels of Lakes Michigan, Huron, and Erie. This dredging is done by the Federal Government in part and part by the local communities. The burden is a burden which must be borne in part by the General Government and in part by the local communities. The harbors of the east shore of Wisconsin, the State which in part I have the honor to here represent, will be affected by this diversion, and I would be false to the interests of the people of that State if I did not direct attention to the danger for them which lurks in this deepwaterway project, and whether, for the sake of its construction, these cities will at their own expense redredge the harbors, which are of such vital interest to the commerce of those cities, and to the commerce of that State. The only way to avoid extra dredging would be by holding up the water level of these lakes by dams and other controlling works across the Detroit River and the Niagara River. These would be not only expensive, but could not be constructed without international agree-Whether such an agreement could be obtained I do not know, but if it could, such controlling works would be to some extent an obstruction to the tremendous commerce which annually passes through those channels, and, as such, a tax on that commerce, which the public must pay. The cost, therefore, to the Federal Government of taking on this project and accepting the drainage canal as a navigable waterway will be not only the cost of constructing the deep waterway but of paying the flowage damages to which I have referred, and to redredge the harbors and the connecting channels of the Great Lakes

For this reason I am opposed to tacking this deep-waterway project onto this bill. I want to know more about the possible effect of this diversion from Lake Michigan on the level of that lake before I vote in favor of this proposition. But in what I have said on this subject I do not want it understood that I am opposed in principle to this deep waterway. I am a firm believer in waterway development and in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. I believe the people generally are substantially benefited every time the Government expends money for the deepening of a harbor or the improvement of a river. I want to see the Ohio River improved so that it will have at least a 9-foot stage from Pittsburg to Cairo. I want to see the Mississippi River improved so that it will have at least a 6-foot stage from Minneapolis to St. Louis. I shall be glad if the appropriation recommended in this bill produces substantial results in the way of navigation on the Missouri River, and at some future time, when we have obtained more information and when we can intelligently understand this great project, I may be ready and willing to support it, but for the present, at least, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from

In voting on this amendment there is one point to which I desire to direct the attention of the Members of this House. The report of the board of engineers for this deep waterway shows that a 14-foot waterway can be constructed for $30,097,-462, but if the miter sills of the locks are put down to a depth of 20 feet it will cost in addition $1,376,000, so that the total cost of the project will be $31,463,000. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois proposes to expend $31,000,000, or practically the full amount necessary to complete the 14-foot waterway, and to put the miter sills to a depth of 20 feet. It is evident from this that the promoters of this project intend at some future time to insist upon a 20-foot waterway, and that means a much greater diversion and a much greater lowering of the levels of the Lakes. It means that larger amounts must be expended by the General Government and by the localities interested in redredging the harbors and the connecting channels of the Great Lakes

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. LORIMER. I want to ask the gentleman if he realizes that whether a 14-foot channel is constructed from Joliet to the Mississippi River or hot there will still flow through the drainage canal and the Illinois River from 10,000 to 14,000 cubic feet a minute? It matters not whether the water is utilized for the waterway or not, it would still pass through the channel, and the effect on the levels of the Great Lakes would be just the same as if it were used for a waterway.

Mr. DAVIDSON. That is true, in a measure, but the amount of water that the Chicago Sanitary District can take for purposes of sanitation is in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and in considering what amount he shall permit the Sanitary District to use for that purpose he has a right to take into consideration the effect of such diversion on the level of the Lakes and the commerce which may be affected thereby. The moment you make the drainage canal and its lower connections a navigable channel, that moment you take from the Secretary of War the power of discretion, and the diversion, being made for the purposes of navigation, is unlimited, no matter what might be its effect on the Lake harbors.

Mr. LORIMER. Will the gentleman permit one more question? Does the gentleman know that in order to construct a 14-foot channel between Chicago and the Mississippi River, it being practically slack-water navigation all the way, it does not make any difference for purposes of navigation whether we have 4,000 cubic feet a second or 14,000 a second?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Four thousand feet per second might be sufficient to fill the pools, but it would not be sufficient to meet the requirements of the sanitary district, and it is immaterial whether the water be actually used for purposes of navigation or for purposes of sanitation; the fact is that being a navigable channel the waters would be permitted to flow.

would flow in sufficient quantities to neutralize the sewerage of Chicago, and a quantity sufficient for that purpose will effect the levels of the Lakes.

If Chicago needs 10,000 cubic feet per second for sanitary purposes, and if this amount can be given without serious injury to the commercial interests of the Lakes, I for one would not object, as I consider it of prime importance that the health of that great city be preserved; but as every other municipal corporation takes upon itself the burden of caring for its water and sewage, so let Chicago, and whatever damages come from the flowage necessary to maintain the health of the city be paid by the city, and not attempt to unload it onto the General Government.

In the Congressional Record, page 2105, as a part of the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], there appears a map which is intended to show the Great Lakes, the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and canals constructed and proposed in connection therewith.

I want to call the attention of the committee to what appears on this map as a prospective canal from Cleveland to Pittsburg. This is intended to represent a canal to be built by a corporation authorized by Congress at its last session, and known as the "Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company." This map is absolutely wrong, and whoever prepared it must have known that the proposed canal did not touch either Cleveland or Pittsburg. Evidently it was not intended to let such a little matter as the truth stand in the way of laying foundation for an argument. This map was first published by a St. Louis newspaper, and in connection with it the charge was made that the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee had opposed the improvement of the Mississippi River and the deep waterway project because he was interested in the construction of the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal, and desired to favor that in order to benefit his home city of Cleveland.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman five minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The bill to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company was not reported from the River and Harbor Committee. It was reported from the Committee of Railways and Canals, of which committee I happen to be chairman.

It is proposed to construct this canal from a point at Lake Erie, near Ashtabula and 54 miles from Cleveland, to a point on the Ohio River at Beaver, about 30 miles from Pittsburg; and I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], now that his attention has been called to this matter, will have the map corrected in accordance with the facts.

Newspapers, waterway improvement associations, and even some State legislatures have, through misrepresentation and because certain projects were not included in this bill, been induced to impugn the motives of the committee, and especially its chairman, and in some instances they have indulged in extreme personal abuse. Perhaps it may not be out of place for me to say that the Rivers and Harbors Committee, as at present constituted, will not be driven to recommend unworthy projects for fear of personal abuse of its members. There has been something said about the domination of the Rivers and Harbors Committee by its chairman. I want to say that if there is any such domination it is a domination to which the members of the committee do not object. If there is any such domination of the Rivers and Harbors Committee by its distinguished chairman, it is a domination which makes for equity, for justice, and for honest expenditure of the public money. It is the domination of a man that has given years of service in this House to the study of waterway development; a man who has traveled at his own expense through foreign countries and studied the system of waterway develop-ment in those countries in order that he might be fully informed and give the benefit of that knowledge to his own country. It is the domination of a gentleman who is never influenced by fear or favor, but insists that every project shall be disposed of on its merits and in the interests of the general public, and who takes his position either for or against it as he believes is right and fair and just. [Applause.] Under his administration the question of appropriating money for waterway improvement has been lifted up to a plane of respectability which it did not occupy when it was characterized as a distri-bution of "pork" for the benefit of favored Members.

To-day the river and harbor bill commands the respect of the people of the United States. To-day it is known everywhere that appropriations for waterway improvement are not recommended because of the influence of some one Member or a combination of Members; neither is it because of the population of a State or the fact that there may be located in that State a revenue district through which large amounts of money are paid into the Treasury of the United States.

To-day, by reason of the ability, character, and influence of the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the people generally believe and know that projects recommended in the river and harbor bill are meritorious, and that the money expended thereon will be expended in the interests of the general public and for the benefit of the commerce of the country. [Great applause.]

In the bill now pending appropriations amounting to about $27,000,000 are recommended for the completion of certain projects. These projects include Boston, New York, Baltimore, the Delaware River, Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, and the Columbia River. These great projects were taken on in the bill of 1902. In the bill of 1905 appropriations were made to continue the work, but in this bill the appropriations are to complete these projects. In two of the largest items, which affect the Great Lakes, viz, the alternate channel in the Detroit River and the new lock at the Soo, each costing about $6,000,000, the full amount necessary to complete the work is provided for.

Hereafter these great harbors and waterways to which I have just referred will only require a small amount for maintenance. With these out of the way I have faith to believe that the next River and Harbor Committee—no matter how it may be constituted, but I pray heaven that the gentleman from Ohio may still be its chairman [great applause]—will be able to make more liberal appropriation for some of the great projects of the country than we have been able to make in this bill.

I should be glad to see the Ohio River, the upper Mississippi River, and some other of the pending projects receive larger appropriations in order that they might be carried to completion at an earlier date to the benefit of the commerce of the country. It was not possible in this bill, large as it is—and it is the largest by several millions ever reported for this purpose—to include larger appropriations for all of these great projects. We tried to go at it in a businesslike way, and knowing that in many instances no benefit comes from the money expended until the total expenditure is made and the improvement completed, we have provided for the completion of a number of these great projects. That has been the policy of the committee, and, under the guidance of the able and honorable gentleman, the chairman of that committee, we have prepared and reported this bill for your consideration and your action. [Great applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the best river and harbor bill ever reported to this House. [Applause.] There are more worthy projects more liberally cared for and fewer unworthy projects cared for at all than in any of its predecessors, and I believe if I should endanger its passage by directly opposing it or should put it in jeopardy here or elsewhere by supporting amendments that are offered to it, I would be risking as it were upon the hazard of a die the material interests of that particular section of this country which I directly represent. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is a strange fact that the harshest criticism of this bill both on this floor and in the press of the country comes from the Mississippi Valley. Yet I assert without fear of contradiction that this great valley is treated in this bill with more intelligent generosity than in any bill reported heretofore to this House. When we recall this and the further fact that the cry that has rung through that great empire for the past twelve months for an appropriation of fifty millions annually for rivers and harbors has been answered in this bill by an appropriation of more than eighty-three millions, and when we further reflect that the criticism of the bill comes from those who are fighting under a banner that bears the very ominous motto, "Amend the bill or kill it"—I say, when we recall these facts, it should give us pause before we desert those who have framed the bill and who are fighting on this floor to-day, as I believe, for its life.

The statement is made that we have abandoned the 14-foot project from the Lakes to the Gulf. I want to deny that. I say in fact, Mr. Chairman, so far from abandoning that project, we have taken the first, and in my opinion necessarily the first, step toward putting that great project on the bill, with a view ultimately to having it provided for with proper appropriations. Gentlemen have grown almost hysterical in their criticism of the bill, because we fail to make provision for that project now. I yield to no man on this floor in my advocacy of this project, and with me it is no new conversion to the faith.

The first time I ran for Congress I advocated the ratification of the treaty of Paris, which gave the Philippine Islands to us—or perhaps I should, in the light of later events, say which gave us to the Philippine Islands. [Laughter.] I favored that then, and I might add, Mr. Chairman, that I was younger then than

Mr. SIMS. Bryan did also; so you had good company.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I believed that the reten-tion of those islands would make an isthmian canal a necessity, a military necessity, if you please, and I never doubted that the people of this country would indulge the luxury of a military necessity whenever the opportunity presented. According to the figures compiled by Edward Atkinson at that time, as I now recall them—I have not examined them since—there were some 600,000,000 people who could be reached by the Pacific Ocean whose annual purchases from us amounted to less than 10 cents each. I prophesied then that whenever that canal was constructed the people along the Great Lakes would begin to clamor for this project to connect the Lakes with the Gulf, and that the Mississippi River would then find friends it had never known before. When I saw the great convention at St. Louis last fall I had the supreme satisfaction of saying, "I told you so." The improvement of the Mississippi River is now and has for twenty yours been the subject sippi River is now and has for twenty years been the subject of paramount importance in the district I represent. It borders my district for more than 300 miles, and sometimes, unfortunately, instead of running by it it runs over it.

It would cost me my seat in this House if my people believed I had abandoned this great river or its best interests. favor, heartily in favor, of a 14-foot channel from Chicago to New Orleans; but I can not vote for an amendment to put a part of that channel onto this bill as a separate project. are ever to have a liberal policy in this country for river and harbor appropriations, it will be when we are backed by an intelligent public sentiment. Can we ever hope to attain that if we adopt a precedent such as the one proposed in this amend-We must first have this project examined by men competent to make the examination, men learned in their profession, men skilled in the science of engineering, men who will examine and report to us, first, whether it can be done; second, how it should be done, if it can be done at all; third, what it will cost to do it, and fourth, what it will cost to maintain the channel after it is obtained. There is not a man on the face of this earth to-day who can answer one of these questions. Now, can we, in the face of that fact, Mr. Chairman, put upon this bill a proposition that carries with it no man knows how much without an investigation by the engineers? Can we successfully appeal to the judgment of the people for indorsement if we adopt such a precedent? I believe that the project is feasible, and I have no doubt that it can be had and maintained well within the limits of cost that its great importance justifies; but I do not know that fact, and no other man does. So far from abandoning that project, we have provided in this bill for a most thorough and comprehensive survey. It provides that from St. Louis to New Orleans the river shall be surveyed by It provides that a board of engineers who are the equal of any engineers on the face of the earth. That board shall be composed of five men, three out of the five to be taken from the Mississippi River Commission. That being true, can any man say that the survey will not be made by its friends? Mr. Chairman, when we, after the adjournment of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress last December, all went over to the White House and joined with the President in singing the battle cry of this Lakes-to-the-Gulf scheme, the refrain was not 14 feet from Chicago to St. Louis, it was not 14 feet into the valley, but it was 14 feet through the valley. No speech that has been made upon this floor in advocacy of the amendment has failed to predicate the claims of this project upon the advantages that would flow to the country from a 14-foot channel from Chicago to the Gulf.

No man has advocated, no man has advanced the proposition or the argument, that it would be advantageous to this country to construct a canal simply from Chicago to St. Louis, and so we provide that the engineers, when they make this survey from St. Louis to New Orleans to ascertain the cost of securing 14 feet in that reach of the river, shall, in making up their judgment as to its advisability, always keep in mind its relation to and connection with the section from Chicago to St. Louis, and so pass judgment on the project as a whole, or, in other words, as a Lakes-tothe Gulf project. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, we have failed to adopt as a separate proposition the Chicago-St. Louis section, and I hope when the amendment which has that end in view is proposed it will be voted down. This board will report before the next river and harbor bill is made up, and we will then be ready to take up this proposition with the information at hand necessary to a proper and intelligent understanding of the whole subject. This occurs to me to be the only justifiable, the only defensible, position to take. We have the data for the section from St. Louis to Chicago, although they come to us with an adverse report from the engineers. This is not an insurmountable obstacle. I can understand how the engineers might well report against either or both sections of the project when called upon to consider them separately, when the same board could with perfect consistency recommend favorably both sections and provide for a 14-foot channel all the way through the valley when considered as one project.

We on this side of the Chamber hear it stated frequently at home—all of us are familiar with the statement—that the South does not get its proportion of river and harbor appropriations. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to some items which go into this bill for the Southern States, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that the South is more generously treated in this bill than in any of its predecessors. Maryland gets $2,362,510. ginia gets $1,667,154, and we hear the criticism offered, too, that the coast from Delaware to Florida is unrepresented on this committee, and therefore those States are not getting their just proportion of these appropriations. I would like to call the attention of gentlemen who indulge in that criticism to these figures: Virginia gets $1,667,154; North Carolina, $535,563; South Carolina, $320,290; Georgia, $1,944,650; Florida, $1,368,610; Alabama, $3,000,063; Mississippi, $670,500; Louisiana, $882,792; Texas, $3,699,829; Arkansas, $611,280; Tennessee, $1,440,595, and you will note I do not include in this list among the Southern States either West Virginia or Missouri.

Mr. SIMS. What does Kentucky get?

gets an appropriation of $9,190,000; at the Passes, $2,600,000; so that the Southern States in this bill get an aggregate of $30,504,763, more, Mr. Chairman, than they ever got in any bill heretofore passed. I say, gentlemen, it would be a calamity to that particular section of the country if this bill should

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly. Mr. ELLIS. I do not want to disturb the order of his dis-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. With pleasure.
Mr. ELLIS. Before you get further from your proposition that the Mississippi Valley has been generously treated in this bill, I want to make the observation, for I believe you will indorse it, that that great area over which St. Louis-that splendid commercial metropolis, now the storm center of opposition to this bill—dominates has been more liberally and more gen-erously treated in this bill than in any other previous bill ever reported to this House.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is the absolute fact. The rivers leading to St. Louis have in this bill appropriations amounting to more than $20,000,000, and so far as the Mississippi Valley is concerned, it gets a third of the appropriation carried by the bill for the whole country. It is a serious mat-ter, Mr. Chairman, for this House to undertake to put on this bill by amendment one or more projects which may endanger its final passage. This country, in my opinion, is fully alive to the necessity for liberal appropriations for our rivers and harbors. The people have been awakened as never before to the tremendous influence which our waterways have upon the regulation of railroad rates. The question of transportation is a serious one and one that demands immediate attention. The productive capacity of our people, the industrial development, the growth in material products have been phenomenal, and the railroads of this country are utterly unable to handle the traffic. The people are looking to this bill as the longest step forward that has ever been taken by the National Government toward enabling them to make use of our national waterways in the solution of this tremendous problem of transportation which now confronts us, and I repeat that we are playing with fire, we are tempting fate, if we join forces in this House with those who are attempting to so amend this bill as possibly to prevent its enactment into law. Remember that this House can not write this bill upon the statute books. It must find sanction elsewhere before it becomes the law. Let me ask gentlemen on this side of the Chamber if they feel warranted in taking any chances in view of the provisions I have just men-ment this fact, we may denounce it, we may condemn it, but we can not deny it. The Southern States have entered the race, and they are producing more, they are selling more, they are buying more than ever before in the history of the country. If we are to compete with the balance of the world with the products of our people, we must not go into the markets of the world handicapped or hampered by unjust or extortionate trans-We are the busiest people in the world. portation charges. Three years ago-I have not been able to get the figures for a later date—the aggregated international commerce of the world was $22,000,000,000 in value. That same year the inland traffic of the United States amounted to the same tremendous figures. Think of that! The inland trade of the United States equaled in value the aggregate international commerce of the world! Now, what are we going to do about that, Mr. Chairman? railroads of this country can not haul the products of the people to the seacoast. In our productive capacity we have outstripped the carrying capacity of the railroads, and unless we so improve the waterways of the country that the farmers, the men who produce the products which make up our foreign exports and turn the balance of trade in our favor, can get their products to the seacoast at a minimum of cost we have handicapped them.

This is a commercial age, Mr. Chairman. The spirit of commercialism has taken possession of the country.

In this connection let me quote from a statement made to our committee three years ago by Mr. J. J. Hill:

Ten years ago the cars in the United States—the average car—moved in twenty-four hours about 32 miles. These are all official figures made to Congress. Last year the average car moved less than 20 miles in twenty-four hours. A freight train moves 10 miles an hour, and you can only move your cars two hours out of every twenty-four, or a distance of 20 miles. It is a dreadful tax to say that your facilities shall only be used two hours out of twenty-four, because they run day and night

Again he says:

Within three weeks mills in Minneapolis have had to close down because they could not get their flour moved East, shipping flour to the cities in Europe, and each ship giving them thirty days within which to get their flour from Minneapolis to New York alongside the ship. And there is not a railroad that would give them a contract or a bill of lading to do it. The baker has had to order two cars of flour instead of one, thinking he would get a better chance of getting what he wanted by ordering twice as much as he needed. That is the situation to-day, and it is a situation that can not be remedied in a short time.

My friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Law-RENCE] in his speech the other day showed how the improvement of the harbor at Boston lowered the ocean freight on grain 5 cents a bushel. It is true of other harbors on the coast. Think what that means to the man who produces that grain, though he live a thousand miles inland from that harbor! There is another fact, Mr. Chairman, that those most interested in our harbors sometimes overlook, and that is that the farmers of this country who produce the products that are to be exported do not live on the banks of these harbors. They must have the waterways improved so that they can use them, and it matters not, Mr. Chairman, whether the products are floated on the bosom of the rivers or not, so that the rivers are there and capable of bearing commerce.

It is a fact that can not be too often repeated that it is not the actual tonnage borne on any river which measures its value to the people, but it is the capacity of the river to bear tonnage. Mr. Pillsbury, the great flour man, in a statement before the Senate committee in 1897, made some very interesting observations on this subject, which I take the liberty of reading:

We consider the presence of the Mississippi River and the fact that it is kept in a navigable condition the great regulator of railroad rates; that the benefits should not be measured by the tonnage as much as by the possibility of sending the freight by water.

And again:

The amount of flour shipped out of Minneapolis is something enormous—13,000,000 barrels. A great deal of this would go by the Mississippi River unless the railroads maintained the cheapest rate known in this country almost.

in this country almost.

Mr. Nelson. And the Mississippi being there keeps the rates down?

Mr. Pillsbury. The fact of the Mississippi being there prevents them from making any combination to maintain excessive rates.

* * The necessity is not so much the amount carried by the steamers as the amount that can be carried.

I say it is immaterial whether the tonnage is actually floated on the river or not. Now, to illustrate: It is the same distance from St. Louis to three Mississippi towns—Greenville, Greenwood, and Winona. Greenville is on the Mississippi River, and the rail rate from St. Louis on first-class freight is 90 cents per hundred pounds; to Greenwood, on the Yazoo River, it is 96 cents, and to Winona, which is an inland town with no river competition, the rate is $1.14. Whether the merchants of Greenwood get their freight over the Yazoo River or by rail the river is nevertheless performing its function as a freight regulator. Perhaps a more glaring illustration of the effect of river competition on railroad rates is shown in the differential in favor of the little towns of Friars Point and Rosedale, on the Mississippi River, as against their neighbors of Clarksdale and Cleveland, which are a few miles inland.

I am sorry that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT] is not here. He indulged in a very unjust criticism of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the other day, and I had hoped he would be present when I replied to it. He said, Mr. Chairman, that we were frittering away the people's money in this bill on rivulets and creeks with a keen eye, not for the business of rivers, but to the business of distributing the appropriations so as to get votes for this bill. That, Mr. Chairman, is not an unfamiliar criticism, but it is a criticism that never proceeds from any except those who are unfamiliar with the facts. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not the fault of this committee and it should not be the misfortune of our streams that prominent gentlemen are ignorant of the geography of their country. The greatest agency for the promotion of river and harbor interests that has ever been organized in this country is the National River and Harbor Congress, so ably directed by my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. Ransdell]. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, the most serious obstacle that this great organization has to combat is the opinion prevalent among the people that we are frittering away their money on rivuand creeks, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT] and some of the newspapers of his city, and others similarly uninformed, are doing more by the assaults they have made on this bill and by their reckless, inaccurate, and indiscriminate statements to thwart the best interests of river and harbor improvement than all other agencies combined. Because gentlemen have never heard of the Withlacoochee they think the bill ought to be condemned because that stream is carried on it for appropriation. And yet the Withlacoochee River last year bore 250,000 tons of commerce.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Did the gentleman mention the Withlacoochee? I was not present when he concluded his remarks.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The reason I referred to it is this: In 1902 the Withlacoochee, the Big Sunflower, and a number of other streams were attacked because they were insignificant; that is, because at that time they bore tonnage of less than a hundred thousand, yet to-day both of these streams have passed far beyond the one hundred thousand mark. I wanted the gentleman, and, in his absence, I want any other gentlemen here who criticised this bill for that same reason, to point out the streams that are unworthy and tell us any that ought to be taken out.

I say that they can not point them out, and if they can not substantiate the criticism that we are frittering away the people's money on unworthy rivulets and creeks it is due to themselves and it is due to this House and it is due to the river and harbor interests of this country that they should retract the The Towne and Weymouth were criticised in 1902. statement. They had less than a hundred thousand tons. Last year they 328,000. The Austrian Government has a tonnage of spent a hundred million dollars on its rivers in the past sixty years. The principal one of those rivers is the Danube. year the Danube bore a tonnage of a little over 2,000,000. This bill carries an appropriation of $20,000 for Newtown Creek, at the sight of which our critics frequently throw a fit. Newtown Creek, however, bore a tonnage last year of 2,675,000, more, in fact, than the blue Danube. There breathes no man with soul so dead who would complain of the money we spend way down on the Suwanee River. That river last year bore a tonnage of 7,600 tons. But that same critic objects most strennously when he observes the fact that we appropriate for Cooper Creek. Cooper Creek, in spite of its name, however, bore a tonnage in that same year of 414,000. I have made a list of streams that in 1902 bore less than 100,000 tons and which were criticised then as unworthy.

I call the attention of all gentlemen inclined to criticise this bill for carrying insignificant streams to this list of so-called "insignificant streams" which were criticised five years ago as unworthy of any appropriation, and ask them to compare the tonnage then and the tonnage now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see my time has about expired. to close, as I began, with the declaration that this is the best river and harbor bill ever reported to this House. It is the result of the patient, painstaking, and most discriminating labor of this committee. We have the best interests of the waterways of his country at heart, and we are caring for them intelligently and as generously as the funds at our command will permit. We can not put everybody's project in the bill, and the day will never come when we can adopt a policy so liberal as to make possible that consummation so devoutly to be wished, until there is an end to such assaults on the bill as we have heard here in the last few days, and until prominent men and influential journals cease ill-advised criticism and speak with knowledge. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Will my distinguished colleague yield to me before he takes his seat?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. With great pleasure.

Mr. CANDLER. I agree with you that the country is demanding greater appropriations for rivers and harbors, and I believe that those appropriations ought to be made. The greatest criticism of this bill is that it failed to make a large enough appropriation to include the Tombigbee. I have gotten letters from all over the United States expressing an interest in the improvement of the Tombigbee. I hold in my hand now a letter from a gentleman in New York, and the writer says, "I am for the Tombigbee; send me a copy of your speech." [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It showed him to be a

man of discriminating judgment.

Mr. CANDLER. If at the proper time you will include the Tombigbee, together with other projects that the distinguished chairman and the members of your committee may include in the bill, your bill will be perfect and the country will applaud your patriotism and good judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I heartily agree with that, and I will say to the gentleman that all of us here who are together with the facts are greed that although that great familiar with the facts are agreed that, although that great river was left off the bill this time, it was certainly not his fault, and as we lay him to rest, as it were, to-day with the project of his heart's desire, it is in the full hope of an early resurrection, and by unanimous consent we will vote him the cowboy's epitaph:

He done his damnedest; Angels could do no more.

[Laughter.]

MESSAGE, FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Cappon having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8080. An act for the relief of S. Kate Fisher.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 46.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 1160) entitled "An act to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack."

Senate concurrent resolution 6.

Senate concurrent resolution 6.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the concurrent resolutions passed February 9, 1901, and May 10, 1902, providing for the publication of the Documentary History of the Constitution and the Bulletins of the Bureau of Rolls and Library of the Department of State are hereby continued in force and excepted from the limitation of one year, as provided in section 80 of the act of January 12, 1895, for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The message also announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. Pettus and Mr. Gallinger members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, early in the first session of the present Congress, realizing the great necessity of water transportation and the consequent reduction of freight rates to the people whom I have the honor to represent, I introduced the following bills, which have been duly considered by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the bill and report now under consideration by this committee, which I ask may be read and copied into the RECORD:

The Clerk read as follows:

bill (H. R. 9750) appropriating the sum of $50,000 for locking and damming and otherwise improving Richland River, between Dayton, Tenn., and where it empties into the Tennessee River.

Tenn., and where it empties into the Tennessee River.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, for the purpose of building a lock and dam across Richland River at or near its mouth, and for the purpose of cleaning out, straightening, dredging, and otherwise improving the channels of the same from Dayton, Tenn., to where it empties into the Tennessee River.

SEC. 2. That such money shall be expended and said improvements made under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War or his duly authorized representatives.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be of full force and effect on and after its passage.

A bill (H. R. 9751) for the improvement of Cumberland River, in the State of Tennessee, above Nashville, Tenn.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $500,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended by the Secretary of War for the maintenance and completion of locks and dams on the Cumberland River, in the State of Tennessee, above Nashville, Tenn.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 13, 1906.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions I have the honor to send herewith for transmission to Congress report of February 26, 1906, by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, en project for improvement of Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky, said report having been called for by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives. A copy of this report was furnished the Committee on Rivers and Harbors under date of March 3, 1906.

Very respectfully,

A. MACKENZIE, Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

REPORT ON PROJECT FOR IMPROVEMENT OF CUMBERLAND RIVER, TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKY.

THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS, Washington, D. C., February 26, 1906.

GENERAL: The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has the honor to submit the following report on the project for improving the Cumberland River, which was referred to it by indorsement of July 17, 1905, on a resolution adopted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress, requiring among other subjects a report on "Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky, with a view to ascertaining whether improvements should at present be undertaken in addition to those for which appropriations have already been made." In connection with its investigations on this subject, the Board held a duly advertised public hearing on February 2, 1906, at Nashville, Tenn., at which all those who desired were given an opportunity to present their views.

At the request of the Board the district officer has furnished information relative to the existing condition of the Cumberland River, the cost of completing the works proposed under the present project, the commerce involved, and the resources of the Cumberland Valley, including a valuable report on the resources of the Cumberland River Basin prepared by the Cumberland River Commission and Nashville Chamber of Commerce.

Work for the improvement of the Cumberland River has been done under two projects, one for the portion of river below Nashville and one for that above. These projects provide for the canalization of the river so as to secure a minimum depth of 6 feet from the Rockcastle River, 32 miles above Burnside, Ky., to the Ohio River, a distance of 550 miles. This is to be accomplished mainly by an extensive system of locks and dams of which there are to be seven in the project below Nashville (193 miles from the mouth), twenty-two in the project between Nashville and Burnside (518 miles from the mouth), and six above Burnside.

The estimated cost of the work was $10,464,500, of which $1,964,500 was required below Nashville. Appropriations have been made under these projects amounting to $2,459,000, of which there had been expended to September 30, 1905, $1,820,035.42 above Nashville and $509,694.29 below. With these funds there had been constructed Lock and Dam A of the series below Nashville, Lock and Dam 1 of the series above Nashville, the masonry of the lock walls and abutments of Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and sites have been acquired for Nos. 21 and 22 and for abutment of No. 8. There is now under construction, to be completed with the funds available, Dam No. 2 and Lock and Dam No. 21. The river and harbor act of March 3, 1905, authorized the Cumberland River Improvement Company to improve the river above Burnside and to use the water power resulting from the construction of the locks and dams.

Assuming that the section above Burnside will be improved by private capital, the district engineer estimates, in addition to the amount already appropriated, that there will be required to complete the work $7,150,000, which is divided as follows:

Below Nashville:
Building 6 locks and dams, B to G, inclusive————
Above Nashville:
Completion of locks and building of dams at Nos. 3, 4, .____ $2, 400, 000

5. 6, and 7
Building 14 locks and dams, Nos. 8 to 20, inclusive, and No. 22

Competition of locks and building of dams at Nos. 3, 4, 50, 60 and No. 22. 4, 200, 600

The work already provided for will put four locks and dams in operation, and their annual cost of maintenance is estimated at $20,000. The annual cost of maintenance of the entire system of locks and dams from Burnside to the Ohio is estimated at $11,600, and the annual cost of maintenance of the entire system of locks and dams from Burnside to the Ohio is estimated at $11,600, and the annual cost of maintenance of the entire system of locks and dams from Burnside to the Ohio is estimated at $18,000. The commerce would increase to 1,000,000 tons. This, however, would be but a small part of the freight movement that would be affected by the improvement. According to the census of 1990, in the twenty-one counties of Tennessee and Kentucky which abut on the ment, there was a population of 440,146, an area of 8,775 source miles, with farms covering 4,479,738 acres, of which 2,331,855 acres were improved. The total value of the farm property and products for 1899 was $31,822,014, of which $13,875,217 represented live stock and $17,262,272 products and for the olive stock. The capital invested in manufactured and the stock and $17,262,272 products and for olive stock. The capital invested in manufactured and the stock and $17,262,272 products and for olive stock. similar navigation for from 30 to 40 miles below Burnside, at which place an outlet for the products of this region is provided by the Queen and Crescent Railroad. This will afford some relief to one-half the remaining counties abutting on the Cumberland River and to over 60 per cent of their population and farm products. From data before the board it appears that in 1902 the true valuation of the real estate and improvements of the counties unaffected by the improvement suggested above was $5.048,114, and the assessed valuation of personal property $1,133,789. Their population in 1900 was 30,807, of which about 1,000 lived near post-offices along the river. The board does not consider their existing commerce sufficient to justify the expenditure of $4,200,000, which will be required to canalize the river from Carthage to Burnside, nor that a large development of commerce in coal or other mineral resources over this section of the river is reasonably prospective.

The Queen and Crescent Railroad crosses the Cumberland River at Burnside, and the Board has given careful consideration to the claim of its representatives that if the river improvement were to begin at Burnside and be extended down the river, substantial relief would be afforded to the Cumberland Valley by the outlet this railroad provides. The published schedule of rates by this route to river towns was submitted to the Board and was found to largely exceed the rate to Nash-ville from Louisville, Cincinnati, and Lexington on most farm products in carload lots. Even on the unimproved river the railroad is now able to ship freight for long distances at the same rates it charges to the nearest landing to Burnside, and the Board is of the opinion that a further extension of navigation from Burnside down the river will cause little reduction in these rates, unless this improvement were continued through to Nashville, and thus open up a competing route. But, as already stated, the Board is of the opinion that the extension of the improvement above Carthage is not advisable at the present time.

From the above the Board is of the opinion that the regulation of the river and the construction of the six locks and dams of the system below Nashville, and the completion of Locks and Dams 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 above Nashville, so as to carry the improvement of the river from its mouth to Carthage, Tenn., is worthy of being continued by the United States, but that the construction of the locks and dams proposed between Carthage and Burnside, except No. 21, now under contract, is not at present justified by the commerce involved.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee. There are 24 counties in Tennessee and Kentucky that abut on the Cumberland below Burnside, 7 of which are in the district I represent. The Cumberland is navigable for steamboats from Nashville to Burnside from three to six months in the year under present conditions, and with the project of completing the locks and dams 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 above Nashville, the masonry of the lock walls and abutments of which are already completed, will make it navigable the year round as far up as Carthage, Tenn., and Caney Fork, and when Congress makes the necessary appropriations and the project of locking and damming above Carthage, to Burnside, which I trust will be done in the near future, it will provide a permanent channel for navigation from Nashville to Burnside. The Cumberland is a splendid and a beautiful river. It is a stream that bears many tons of commerce on its bosom and contributes much to the advantage of a half million people who live on its banks, a large portion of whom must rely on it alone as a means of transportation for their products, their live stock, their minerals, and timber, with which they are so bountifully blessed, and this volume of tonnage will be increased largely by the dredging and cleaning out of Caney Fork, for which purpose my colleague [Mr. Houston]

The commerce on this river between Nashville and Burnside alone for the year 1905 was 382,807 tons, valued at $10,509,789, and the passengers were 23,298.

It is estimated by the district officer that when the project of locking and damming is completed the commerce will increase to 1,000,000 tons, and I would add that with the certainty of permanent navigation the people who must depend upon it as a means of transportation would be so stimulated they would diversify and increase their crops until that commerce would gradually increase to much more than this amount. As it is there is not half the farm products raised along its borders as that rich and fertile valley is capable of producing, and much of what is produced goes to waste for want of transportation.

By reference to the map it will be seen that the Queen and Crescent Railroad crosses the Cumberland at Burnside, while the Southern Railroad taps it at Carthage. Between Carthage and Burnside, a distance of some 200 miles, the people have no transportation for their products, except such as is afforded by the river; and therefore they come pleading to this Congress for relief, asking you to give them an outlet for their products to the markets of the world.

The United States have exclusive jurisdiction over navigable streams in this country.

There is only one source to which we can look for the appropriations necessary to secure those improvements, and that is to the Congress of the United States.

The Committee on Appropriations have been reasonably liberal in their recommendations for this project, and I trust that this committee and the House will concur in those recommendations; and that gentlemen who shall be here in succeeding Congresses will remember the necessities of the people along the Cumberland River Valley and see to it that such appropriations will be made as will relieve them and open up this great artery of commerce.

Richland River is a small stream that empties into the Tennessee near Dayton, Tenn., and the construction of a lock and dam near its mouth would give those people at Dayton perpetual water transportation, and would greatly reduce the freight rates they are now having to pay for transportation over the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, which now has a complete monopoly.

The committee has very generously directed the Secretary of War to cause preliminary examinations and surveys for said river, looking to the improvements asked for; and I trust that the recommendations of the Rivers and Harbors Committee will be concurred in by this committee and the House.

I have here a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers reporting on project for improvement of Cumberland River, and ask that same be copied in

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized. How much time does he request?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for twentyfive minutes.

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I am gratified at what seems to be the state of public opinion with reference to internal improvements. I am pleased to know that in our portion of this great domain there is an aroused public sentiment. The river and harbor bill is receiving encouragement that it has never re-ceived in the history of this Congress. There are those assert-ing themselves in favor of river and harbor improvements who have never heretofore manifested concern in such improve-ments. Personally I am very much interested in the improvement of the great waterway of the United States—the Missis-sippi River. I am especially concerned in the development of that portion of the river north of the mouth of the Missouri. am interested in every portion of that great stream, because the upper portion of the river would be of less value if the whole stream were not properly cared for. It is a little surprising, however, to me that persons who have had occasion within the last three months to see the importance of river improvement should undertake when this bill is brought before the committee to censure the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and to censure the committee itself because there are not sufficient appropriations for their particular portion of the country.

I suppose that the River and Harbor Committee would bear me out in the statement that they never heard seriously from the city of St. Louis until within the last three months. Other people along the Mississippi River have been concerned in its welfare and development and have been fighting for its recognition for long years past, but within the last few months the great city of St. Louis seems to be aroused as it never has been on any local question with reference to the improvement of certain waterways. I am greatly pleased to see this interest. I am not in sympathy, however, with the criticisms that have been made upon the worthy chairman of this great committee of the House. I am not in sympathy with the criticisms which have been leveled by the press of the city of St. Louis against the members of this committee as a body. My own conviction is that there is not a committee in this House of more honorable and upright men than are the men who compose the River and Harbor Committee. I am very sure that there is no chairman of a committee who knows more of the work assigned to him than does the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Applause.]

The leading papers of the city of St. Louis have had very much to say in the last three weeks about the character of men and the kind of committee that has reported the pending bill. They have complained, and seriously complained, that this committee has been unfair to the great Mississippi Valley. It is amusing to read some of the statements that have been made with reference to that committee and its work. For example, one statement is to the effect that the Mississippi Valley has onehalf of the population of the United States, and having one-half of that population, it ought to have one-half of the appropriations. In order to count a Mississippi Valley and have within It a population of one-half of the United States, it must necessarily include the State of Ohio, and that would give it the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burron]. If you call the Mississippi Valley that portion of the country which lies between the mountain ranges, then within that region there are ten members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. There are There are along its fringe three other members, making thirteen out of eighteen members who are interested in the Mississippi Valley.

Some of the leading papers in Missouri have been severe in their criticism of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for its alleged parsimony in making appropriations about St. Louis and its failure to make appropriation for the work of the deep-water canal between St. Louis and Chicago. They have singled out the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burton] and have charged him with prejudice against St. Louis and the deep waterway and have intimated that he had sinister designs in caring for the Ohio River rather than the St. Louis-Chicago enterprise. The St. Louis Republic, in an editorial on this subject, says:

It is a blow aimed directly at the commerce of St. Louis and the great sections whose commerce center in St. Louis. It is a blow at Illinois, Missouri, and the Southwest. It is a blow at the Northwest, because improvements in the upper river are robbed of half their value if the traffic from St. Paul southward can not find deep water from the mouth of the Missouri down.

This editorial writer failed to tell his readers that there was an urgent appeal for a 6-foot waterway north of the mouth of the Missouri River; that such a waterway would probably cost $20,000,000, and that when it had been made it would then not have as deep water as St. Louis has south to the mouth of the Ohio. Why does not St. Louis turn its energies toward the upper river and help us to secure a channel somewhat as good as that which now exists between the mouth of the Missouri and Cairo? The engineers of the Government re-port the existence of an 8-foot channel south of St. Louis. The Post-Dispatch, at St. Louis, in its editorial comment on the pending bill, says:

The Business Men's League of this city declared war on the opposi-tion to the fair treatment of the Mississippi River between St. Louis and Cairo and the deep waterway from the Gulf by resolutions re-questing the St. Louis Congressmen to introduce two amendments to the river and harbor bill, as reported by Chairman Burrox. One amendment provides for an appropriation of $1,000,000 a year for four years for the permanent improvement of the river between St. Louis and Cairo. The second amendment provides for an appropriation of $3,000,000 to begin the work on the deep waterway between the Lakes and the Gulf.

It will be observed again that not one word is said about the upper Mississippi River. There is no suggestion of its needs, notwithstanding its surveys and estimates are ready so that the Government might properly begin at once to give the upper river a similar depth of channel to the lower. Its demand is that the deep-waterway scheme should be immediately provided for and the amendment to be offered shows that it is to be for a waterway between St. Louis and Chicago. Why should this great paper turn its back upon the upper river?

Again the same paper explained the cause of its demands. It

This step has been made necessary by the intolerable situation in the House, where two men—Chairman Burron, backed by Speaker Cannon—assume to decide arbitrarily, without regard to the sentiment of the other members of Burron's committee, or of the Members of the House, that river improvement of vital importance to an enormous section of the country shall practically be ignored. In view of this tyrannical attitude on the part of these two men there is nothing left for the people of the valley and their Representatives in Congress but to fight for their rights and interests.

Here it may well be observed that no wail of protest goes up because the River and Harbor Committee refused to begin the work of deepening the channel of the upper Mississippi River and to make reasonable appropriation therefor.

That reliable Republican organ, the St. Louis Globe-Demo-

Encouraged by the demands of their constituents and the pressure for deep-waterway improvement from every State in the Mississippi Valley, an organization is being perfected in the House to force Representative Burron, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, to accept an amendment to give substantial recognition.

To-day an insurgent organization is being formed by Representatives Bartholdt, Madden, Rodenberg, Rainey, and others interested in the proposal.

I suppose as a result of this insurrection the pending amendment providing for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of the deep-waterway canal between St. Louis and Chicago and the authorization of $26,000,000 more to complete the project is the result. You will observe that again the upper river is not taken into the account. This is especially strange since the headlines in the same article say: "BARTHOLDT leads strong clique to unhorse BURTON." This would lead us to believe that my worthy colleague from St. Louis had likewise forgotten the demands of the upper Mississippi River, in which every St. Louis business man should have concern.

Against whom is the insurrection? A further statement from the same paper may give an idea:

Although Speaker Cannon is taking no hand in the movement, it is understood that he is not convinced of the desirability of embarking on the project now and sympathizes with the position taken by BURTON.

Is it possible that my colleague [Mr. Bartholdt] is leading a revolt against the Speaker? Would be stand against the regulars? There is certainly some mistake about his being an insurgent, especially since it is admitted that the Speaker is in sympathy with the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burron].

Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT], in his able address on this bill, indulges in reflections and charges against the Rivers and Harbors Committee and its chairman which plainly show he would like to lead an insurgent movement.

He charges that the Rivers and Harbors Committee has entered into a combination against the Mississippi, that the chairman has led the committee to support a scheme for a private canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio at Pittsburg, and that this is to serve as an outlet for the Great Lakes through the Ohio River and lower Mississippi to the Gulf. How much more harm would this be, how much more selfish and sectional, than to use a private canal at Chicago as an outlet to a deep waterway through the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers to the Missis-sippi at St. Louis? Why should such sinister motive be attributed to the Rivers and Harbors Committee if it has never been thought of in connection with the canal between St. Louis and Of course there is no selfish motive in the Chicago enterprise. My colleague says he voted for the questionable Pitts-burg canal. There are several Missourians who voted against it, and I am one of that number.

My colleague [Mr. Bartholdt] complains that the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee has looked out for his own locality in the appropriations in the pending bill. Is he not the last man to make such a charge? He knows that the chair-man of a committee must take care of the needs of the district which he represents, and should not be censured for it. also, could be explain why, as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, he allowed at the last session an appropriation of $1,115,000 for the city of St. Louis and less than $375,000 for the rest of the State of Missouri, and more than was appropriated in several States combined? I commend him for caring for St. Louis, but why should he now condemn Chairman Burron for taking care of Cleveland Harbor?
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make a statement here? Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Of the six great projects which were under consideration in the Rivers and Harbors Comfnittee, the one at Cleveland is the only one that this bill did not provide to complete.

Mr. LLOYD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to hear that statement just in this connection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the statement of my colleague on the committee is not quite complete. It ought to be said in addition that the work there would have been completed if the committee could have had its own way and it was only because the chairman insisted that the full amount should not be appropriated.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, that reveals a state of facts that will be found in no other committee in this House. Where is there a chairman who refuses to make an appropriation simply because he is chairman of a committee?

My colleague says the movement for river improvement began in the Mississippi Valley and culminated in the first great meeting in St. Louis in November last. It is true that St. Louis has recently become much interested in river improvement, and especially the deep-waterway scheme, but he is mistaken if he thinks there have not been numerous meetings in the interests of river and harbor improvement for years back in various parts of the United States. He might have attended in October, at Minneapolis, a monster meeting, being the fifth annual meeting of the upper Mississippi River convention.

On the upper river we were interested enough in river improvement that we secured an order for a survey for a 6foot channel in the last river and harbor bill, and if others had been equally alert it would not be necessary to wait another year until the lower Mississippi River can ascertain the feasibility of a deep waterway and the surveys and estimates there-

If gentlemen had turned their faces toward Hannibal, Quincy, Burlington, and St. Paul and had given us on the upper river the benefit of their great influence, there might have been incorporated in this bill a substantial sum for the deepening of the channel of this great river north of the mouth of the Missouri River.

Mr. Chairman, there is one occurrence which I greatly regret. There was introduced in the lower house of the Missouri legislature, by Hon. Frank H. Sosey, and in the senate by Hon. E. A. Dowell, a resolution of censure against Chairman Burton. These gentlemen are my constituents. There are no more honorable and fair-minded men in that legislative body than these men. They are careful, cautious, conscientious men, and would not intentionally wrong another. They are not personally acquainted with Mr. Burron, I am sure. What they wrote in their resolutions must have been hearsay, but they believed they have been written.

Had they known of the honorable life, the superior ability, the unsurpassed knowledge of river and harbor matters which the gentleman from Ohio possesses they would never have been parties to such an action.

If they had known of the integrity, ability, and standing of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee they would not have charged the chairman with being wholly responsible for the pending bill. I feel that it is due these worthy gentlemen that I make this statement, although neither Mr. Sosey nor Mr. Dowell have asked it.

Will the gentleman permit an observation at Mr. ELLIS.

this point?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS. I am very happy to say that I am advised by one of my home papers, the Kansas City Star, that very few votes were cast upon the proposition. Only a few members of the legislature took any interest in it or voted upon it

Mr. LLOYD. I am gratified to learn that the Rivers and Harbors Committee are friendly to our deep-waterway scheme. am pleased that they have recommended the survey south of St. Louis, so as to determine its feasibility and probable cost. It is no use to conceal our demands. The people of the Mississippi Valley wish to secure a deeper channel from New Orleans to the Falls of St. Anthony. They are anxious that the Missouri River shall have the treatment its importance as a stream demands. There are those who insist that the as a stream demands. There are those who insist that the $20,000,000 already estimated on the upper Mississippi shall be provided; that the Lakes to St. Louis, surveyed and estimated, will take to complete the project $31,000,000. No one knows the probable cost of a 14-foot channel south of St. Louis, but certainly not less than $50,000,000, and possibly twice that sum. It is claimed that there should be expended on the Missouri River at least $40,000,000. So that the total demands for completion of the proposed work would be more than the original estimates of the cost of the Panama Canal.

Is it unreasonable that the Government should say we must have the report of trained engineers as to the feasibility and cost of this gigantic enterprise before it is begun? Hence they have provided a survey, which is one important step toward the improvement, for which I am grateful. I can not understand why anyone should complain at the Rivers and Harbors Committee for refusing to begin the work on this gigantic public improvement until they have secured the report of the feasibility and cost of the whole scheme. The misfortune should be laid at the door of those who had apparently slept until after the last river and harbor bill had passed.

There is only one reasonable step toward permanent improvement of the Mississippi River, and that is to make provision for the beginning of the work of making the 6-foot channel for the upper river; but, realizing that such an attempt is futile at this time, we must content ourselves with appropriations sufficient to meet the imperative needs in maintenance and protection of the present channel. For this purpose I would appropriate much more than is contemplated by the committee for the Missouri River; but my colleague [Mr. Ellis] on the committee and on the river has asked and secured only $300,000 for the river between Sioux City and the mouth and, as I am informed, will ask no greater sum.

Between St. Louis and Cairo the committee have recommended $1,000,000, $250,000 of which to be immediately available. The engineer in charge of that part of the river estimates that there should be appropriated $659,000 per annum. While it is true they expended less than $250,000 last year, I think it would be wise to make the appropriation as large at least as the engineer's estimate.

On the upper river it was estimated that $400,000 per annum would be needed for the necessary expense of maintenance of present channel. The committee, on careful investigation of the needs, were induced to increase the sum to $500,000 per annum, or $2,000,000, for which I am especially grateful. If there is to be no permanent improvement work. I am hopeful that this appropriation is sufficient.

Before concluding I wish to assure the committee that the Mississippi River still has its source in Lake Itasca and that it still flows over the Falls of St. Anthony, passes Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Hannibal. That is a beautiful dream that would have you believe that its sunken bed would lead you from Chicago directly to St. Louis. It is equally absurd to claim that it passes the Gasconade and Osage, and that the traveler on its bosom could find himself in the Rocky Mountains. This wonderful stream, with its tributaries extending from mountain range to mountain range, supplies a valley whose inhabitants are not surpassed even in the intellectual atmosphere of Massa-hand to the bitteria Vinging on the galden phones of the chusetts, the historic Virginia, or the golden shores of the Pacific. We request at the hands of Congress a proper recognition of this important stream that it may yet become a great highway of commerce.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LLOYD.

Is my colleague from Missouri satisfied Mr. BARTHOLDT. with the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River between St. Louis and St. Paul? We are not. That shows that we are more interested than the gentleman in his own stretch of river.

I am as much interested in the Mississippi River as any individual on the floor of this House. Certainly as much so as my colleague from St. Louis. I am concerned in that river from St. Paul to New Orleans. My interest in it does not cease when you reach the city of St. Louis.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is the gentleman satisfied with the appropriation made in this bill? That is the question.

Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied. Mr. LLOYD.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then vote with us to increase it.

There are very few men who are satisfied with Mr. LLOYD. all conditions that present themselves. I am not complaining of the committee. On the other hand, the gentleman, my colleague, is censuring the committee. But what happened as far as we are concerned? The Missouri River has a representative from my State, my colleague from Kansas City [Mr. Ellis]. He asked for an appropriation for the Missouri River of $300,000. My own conviction is that that appropriation is nothing like so large as it ought to be. If I had my way about it I would largely increase it. But the committee gave him, as I understand it, what he asked. For the Mississippi River between St. Louis and Cairo there has been appropriated by this committee $250,000 directly and $750,000 authorized. I will vote with my colleague from St. Louis to increase that to $4,000,000. [Applause.]

I am anxious to get every dollar that may be obtained for the upper Mississippi River, and I want to call attention to a fact that seems to have escaped the attention of some people. There has already been a survey made for the 6-foot waterway between St. Paul and St. Louis. The estimates are here. But when we have secured the 6-foot waterway from St. Paul to St. Louis we can have no deeper water than there is now from St. Louis to the sea. Why does not St. Louis turn its face up St. Louis to the sea. Why does not St. Louis turn its face up the river and ask this Congress that there may be an appro-priation made for the permanent deepening of that upper river? The gentleman was authorized by the Business Men's League of that city to introduce two resolutions, one to increase the appropriation south of the city of St. Louis and the other to intro duce a resolution providing for an appropriation between St. Louis and Chicago. But the Business Men's League has authorized no man, as far as I have any knowledge, to introduce a resolution for that portion of the river in which they ought to be concerned, between St. Louis and St. Paul. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. I would like to have five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gar The Chair would say to the gentleman that any extension of his time would take away from that of other gentlemen.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire to state to the gentleman that the time is not under my control.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, if every appropriation bill introduced in this Congress were passed tomorrow, the United States Treasury would became bankrupt at once, the Secretary of the Treasury would die of grief, and the President of the United States would renew his waning determination not to accept the nomination for another term. The sun of American prosperity that by the providence of God shines so brightly, and by the misgovernment of the Republican party so partially, would set, and our merriment be turned to mourning. In the consideration of measures carrying large omnibus appropriations we are sometimes prone to forget that there is no magic fountain from which our Treasury is supplied; that every dollar in its vaults comes from the energy of toiling hands, willing, though wearied with the mighty achievements they perform; that whether our revenues are derived from tributes levied on imported goods or otherwise obtained, they are none the less the products of taxation, to be honestly distributed in fair, impartial, necessary government. The varied forms in which requests for appropriations come, the purposes for which they are sought, the rapid growth of industries and institutions, make imperative some method of carefully determining the relative merit and importance of projects sought to be inaugurated. They also make imperative that some will be chosen and many disapproved.

This Congress will consider few more important questions than those relating to the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States. When we contemplate the natural resources of our country, the varied industries in which our people toil and prosper, the undeveloped territory belonging to the United States, the commercial advantages we enjoy over other peoples, and the industrial possibilities that smile upon our future, we are astounded at the mercies of God and the genius of man.

Our shores are washed by oceans whose bosoms are bold enough and strong enough to uphold the commerce of all the seas. The mighty arm of American enterprise, guided by lofty intelligence and masterful skill, is breaking the narrow neck of anama to mingle the waters of the Pacific with those of the Atlantic, to shorten the trail of American freighters to eastern We are beckoning with kindly hands the messengers of South American commerce, while the strange flags of oriental traders flutter above the placid waters of our Pacific harbors and bring to American markets the rich prizes of China and Japan. Equally promising of profit and happiness to our people are the benefits which may be derived from the improvements of our internal trade. Our many great rivers furnish cheap means of interchange of commodities among the States, and if their channels are kept open the progress of the last half century, marvelous beyond the dreams of the Republic's founders, is but a partial indication of the future glory that awaits us. from this internal trade that we derive our greatest profit.

THE CONGESTED CONDITION OF FREIGHT TRAFFIC

which now prevails throughout the country emphasizes the importance of maintaining open-river channels as well as safe har-Interstate transportation on the great railroad lines in the United States is overcrowded-choked. The railroads admit their inability to promptly move freights tendered them for shipment. They confess lack of sufficient equipage to keep pace with the ever-increasing demand for transportation. It is claimed that cars, locomotives, and railroad tracks can not be built fast enough to transport the products of American fields, forests, mines, mills, and factories.

The situation as the railroads see it is frankly stated by Mr. James J. Hill. In a letter to the governor of Minnesota, published a few weeks ago, he said:

The pressure of traffic increases in a constant progression. It has reached its greatest severity just at the time when railroad construction is at the lowest ebb. Take the last five years, within which business has been flourishing everywhere. The rise of new industries and the expansion of old ones, the development of the country as measured by the increased business of the Postal Department, all indicate the volume of the burden placed upon the railroads. The following figures, compiled from Poor's Manual of Railroads, show the intense activity of the last five years as compared with the decline in railroad construction:

	1900.	1905.	Increase.
Miles of railroad operated	191, 861 16, 313, 284, 471 141, 162, 109, 413	215, 506 23, 906, 420, 668 187, 375, 621, 587	Per cent. 12.3 46.5 32.7

The number of passenger miles traveled in this country for each mile of railroad in it, according to these figures, has increased 30 per cent in the five years, and the number of ton-miles for each mile of track has grown 18 per cent. As these percentages are calculated on the actual number of miles of road existing at the beginning and the end of the period, respectively, they measure the additional burden on every foot of track. It is no wonder that, with this extra work to do per mile, a work not equally distributed, but in some sections rising to a far higher ratio, the limit of effective operation has been reached. The highest direction and the best economy is to have trackage, equipment, and other facilities properly adjusted to the volume of business and then keep moving it in a harmonious and useful way. To any such system, by which alone present distress can be relieved and future disaster averted, more trackage is the first and most indispensable condition.

The problem and the necessity are enormous. At 140 tons to the mile, it would require 2,000,000 tons of steel rails every year to furnish the 15,000 miles of track required. This is nearly two-thirds of the product of all the rolling mills in the United States. It would call for the labor of 200,000 men in grading, besides track layers, bridge builders, and others. Labor even for such ordinary extensions and improvements as are now being made is not to be had in sufficient quantities on any terms. And it demands, as has been seen, the investment in permanent railroad plant of $1,100,000,000 a year for five years to provide the railroad of the country with means to handle properly the business already in sight, not allowing for future growth. This is the real railroad problem of the United States; and it is one which people have been singularly slow to perceive and refuctant to realize, although it is written on every page of industrial statistics and calls to the passer-by from every signal tower, every siding, and every railroad yard from the Atlantic to the Pacific. To all appearances the commerce of the country has touched a barrier which is almost insurmountable.

The farmer in the North and West has seen his wheat and corn rot in the fields for lack of cars to ship in; the cotton farmer has paid interest on debts and dreaded foreclosure of mortgages while impatiently waiting for the railroads to haul the fruits of his soil to market. Hundreds of thousands of our people have suffered from cold because of the failure of the railroads to carry from the mines a sufficient supply of coal for Every portion of the United States has suffered from this condition. Our great railroad organizations have heretofore looked with disfavor upon waterways because they constitute effective means of competition in the transportation of freights. But now when the Interstate Commerce Commission is burdened with complaints from every part of the country of car shortage and delayed shipments the railroads are beginning to join in the general demand for effective improvement of waterways.

But, sir, the chief reason for extending our work in river and harbor improvement does not lie in the convenience of the railroads. It springs from our duty as patriotic Representatives to conserve the public interest and relieve the present situation, to make impossible its recurrence.

Whatever may have been their positions in the past, both the Republican and the Democratic parties are now committed to a general policy of providing more effective means for water transportation. The debate on this bill indicates the fixed The debate on this bill indicates the fixed sentiment of the country as to the policy to be pursued.

THIS POLICY MUST BE NONSECTIONAL, NONPOLITICAL.

The bill under consideration has been severely criticised. It has been characterized as partial, unfair, and discriminatory. Some gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber have said that this measure is an intentional discrimination against their localities, while other gentlemen on the Republican side of this Chamber have complained that it ignores projects of great general importance and recognizes schemes of trivial and questionable merit. I am not the chosen champion of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and shall not assume to act as its defender. I learned a long time ago that the foundation of the Republican party is discrimination and its capstone favoritism. But while gentlemen are complaining that their particular localities are not properly provided for in the bill under consideration I hope they will feel some sympathy for the wandering "Bill Bailies" of political disfavor, who have so long stood outside in the cold, with the door of the Treasury slammed in their faces, the rain falling, and the wind howling.

The proposition to provide and maintain a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf has long been dreamed of, and may well be hoped for. It addresses itself to me as most feasible and desirable if begun at the Gulf and extended to the Lakes. No man can measure its importance to the commerce of the great Mississippi Valley. It is sure to come when its feasibility is determined and its cost ascertained. So great is its importance that it should not be indifferently delayed. Yet it is not to be commenced until its practicability is ascertained, for it will require the expenditure of $30,000,000, possibly $40,-

If the extravagance of the Republican party has so drained our Treasury that the immediate assumption of this great project has been made impracticable, may we not all join in demanding a new policy of administration under a different political control?

Talk of discrimination! Talk of favoritism in river improve-Heretofore the navigation interests of the great State of Arkansas have not been properly regarded. A spirit of narrowness or sectional prejudice has caused Congress to disregard the fact that this State has, including the Mississippi, which touches her eastern border, the greatest mileage of navigable rivers of any State.

Throughout her history the State has suffered from lack of transportation facilities. Her people in a spirit of progress have been liberal in their treatment of railroads in order to induce capital to construct them in her vast areas inaccessible to markets. Land grants, bonuses, and liberal franchises have been bountifully awarded. But, while railroads have been rapidly constructed within and across the State, her transportation facilities have been monopolized, and her people in many instances are still deprived of the benefits of markets for their products.

We need badly open river channels, and the Arkansas delegation in Congress are determined to secure them if possible.

Some of the provisions of the bill under consideration relating to navigation interests in Arkansas are as follows:

to navigation interests in Arkansas are as follows:

For improving the Arkansas River, Arkansas: Maintenance, about $115,000. The Secretary of War may appoint a board to make an examination of said river to Muscogee, Ind. T., with a view to ascertaining whether any feasible or desirable plan can be devised for the further improvement of the whole of said river to Muscogee or any portion thereof. The said board may, upon the order of the Secretary of War, also make a similar examination of that portion of the Red River which lies between Fulton, Ark., and the mouth of the Washita River, Indian Territory, and the expense of such examination shall be apportioned between the funds appropriated for said rivers in such a manner as the Secretary of War may deem equitable, and the said board shall also report upon the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff and the White River at Augusta Narrows, to ascertain and report whether the protection of the banks or rectification of the river at the points named is directly and necessarily required in the interests of navigation, and in case a report shall be made to the effect that such rectification is so required in the interest of navigation, the sum of $100,000, which is hereby conditionally appropriated, shall be expended for improvements at the places named, or either of them.

Improving St. Francis and L'Anguille rivers, Arkansas: For maintenance, $12,000.

The latest report of the engineer in charge shows a balance of $49,000 available for dredging experiments unexpended. desired that two dredge boats be built and placed in operation, and that this sum, together with such additional amount as might be necessary to maintain them, be expended in dredging experiments at the shoals below Pine Bluff. The estimate made by Captain Connor, who appeared in person before the River and Harbor Committee, was that about six dredge boats would be required for the lower stretch of the river below Pine Bluff and that one boat or even two would do little good; that these six boats would cost about $670,000, and about $150,000 per annum would be required to maintain them. The committee refused to provide for a dredge boat after deliberating over the matter for several days; so this sum of $49,000 is made available for general improvement—that is, for maintenance. Our delegation have in no sense abandoned the idea of securing dredge boats for the river. On the contrary a survey is ordered, on the initiative of Mr. Reid, of the river from its mouth to Muscogee, and if any feasible plan is found the systematic and permanent improvement of the river will be pressed as speedily as possible. Our delegation are united on this proposition.

The $30,000 heretofore appropriated to revet Red Fork Bend being unexpended because the engineer claims that its expendifor the purpose authorized is not beneficial to navigation, is likewise made available for general maintenance and improvements. An earnest effort was made to secure a removal of the limitation fixed by law on this expenditure. I felt, and some of my colleagues concurred in the view, that the necessity for the early completion of the works in that vicinity is imminent. But the engineer, in his testimony before the committee, affirmed that the navigation interests did not warrant the expenditure, and while many gentlemen on the committee, including the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the gentle man from Mississippi [Mr. Humphreys], urged the removal of the limitation and the authorization of the work, it was insisted by others that the precedent would entail additional expenses to the Government of the same kind, costing many million dollars, and in spite of all our efforts this view prevailed.

That portion of the engineer's report relating to the Arkansas River and its improvement is published herewith. It contains a brief history of what has been done by Congress for this great stream, and it sustains the assertion that proper attention has not been given this important work.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

1. Arkansas River, Arkansas.—In its original condition the channel of the river was greatly obstructed by shifting sand bars and numerous snags in its lower reaches, and by gravel and rock shoals and some snags in its upper reaches. Navigation was difficult and uncertain at medium and low stages, and during periods of extreme low water was im-dium and low stages, and during periods of extreme low water possible.

Prior to act of Congress approved June 13, 1902, the work on this river was carried on under two general projects—one entitled "Removing obstructions in Arkansas River, Arkansas and Kansas," the other "Improving Arkansas River, Arkansas."

The original project for "Removing obstructions in Arkansas River, Arkansas and Kansas" (act July 3, 1832), was to remove snags and wrecks. Subsequently this project was enlarged to include removing bars by wing dams, and many of the appropriations were made for this work in combination with other rivers. By act of March 3, 1879, Congress adopted an additional project—that of improving the river between Fort Smith, Ark., and Wichita, Kans., by removing the snags and rocks and constructing dams at some of the worst shoals. Later these projects were merged into one, making the project extend from the mouth of the river to Wichita. Under these projects there was expended to June 30, 1902, $968,256.81.

The original projects for "Improving Arkansas River, Arkansas," were local and had in view the permanent improvement of the river at Fort Smith, Van Buren, Dardanelle, and Pine Bluff. By act of August 11, 1888, Congress adopted a general project, namely: "That the Secretary of War shall expend the appropriation under this head with reference to the inal improvement of this river as contemplated in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year ending July 1, 1885, and as authorized in the act for the improvement of rivers and harbors approved August 5, 1886, and in House Executive Document No. 90, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, said methods to be applied as the Secretary of War may direct at such points between Wichita, Kans.; and the navigable mouth of the Arkansas River at its junction with the Mississippi River as he may deem for the best interest of commerce." The "said methods" referred to in the act were "to remove rock and gravel reefs by blasting and dredging, to contract the channel by dikes and dams, permeable or solid, of such construction as the local conditions require, and to hold the channel so obtained by reverment where necessary." The improvement authorized by the act covers 771 miles, while estimates have been rendered for 708 miles, thus making the estimated cost of the improvement authorized by the act covers (Removing obstructions in Arkansas River, Arkansas and Kansas," To the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, there had been expended under the general project for improving Arkansas River, Arkansas, 8903,311.93 for original construction, $314,119.14 for maintenance, and $63,307.32 for operating snag boats, making the total amount $1,280,828.39.

Act of Congress approved June 13, 1902, merged these two general projects into one, which makes the existing project in substance. "The improvement impro for permanent improvement, and $334,589.14 for maintenance of those works.

The works erected for the permanent improvement of the stream were of no material benefit to navigation, they having been built in disconnected reaches. The snagging operations, which must be repeated each year, give immediate relief, but the benefits derived from them are in a large measure lost during the high-water seasons following the periods when the work is done. This is due to the continual caving of the banks and the consequent shifting of the channels. Fort Gibson, on Grand River, 2 miles above its mouth and 463 miles from the mouth of the Arkansas River, is the head of steamboat navigation. The duration of the navigable periods of the river vary greatly in different years. Occasionally there are periods of very low water when navigation will be suspended throughout the length of river and then there will be times when it is possible to maintain 3-foot navigation through to Fort Gibson all the year. The navigation periods are of about the following averages:

	Months a year for 4- foot draft.	Months a year for 2- foot draft.
Mouth to Swan Lake (80 miles)	5½ 5 4	10 91 8

The range between extreme high water and extreme low water at Fort Smith, Ark., is 35.5 feet; at Little Rock, Ark., 28.5 feet, and at the mouth of the river where the stages are controlled by those of the Mississippi the extreme range is 53.7 feet.

The operations on this river this fiscal year were confined to the usual snagging operations. By the combined operations of the snag boats C. B. Recse and Arkansas, working between Poverty Point, 8 miles above the mouth of the river, and Little Rock, 174 miles above the mouth of the river, and Little Rock, 174 miles above the mouth of the river, and Little Rock, 174 miles above the mouth of the river, and lattle Rock, 174 miles above the mouth of the river, 1,166 snags were removed from the channel, 28,088 trees cut on caving banks, and one drift broken up. Active operations ceased the latter part of December and no further operations with the snag boats are contemplated until another river and harbor bill becomes a law.

The river was at comparatively good boating stage all this fiscal year. Of the balance available July 1, 1906, $49,530 is being held to make some experimental dredging in the river; $30,000 is an appropriation made by act of March 3, 1905, for reverting Red Fork bend, provided such revertment is required in the interests of navigation, and $7,625,23 is available for maintenance of snag boats. The district officer reported that the revetting of Red Fork bend would not be of any benefit to navigation and he was authorized to withhold project for the expenditure of the money appropriated for that work.

The amount estimated as being needed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, is for the operation, and maintenance of snag boats.

It is reported that the improvement has secured for shippers at Pine Bluff a rate of about 50 per cent of the railroad rate on freight.

THE ONE GREAT IMPEDIMENT TO OUR DEVELOPMENT IS LACK OF TRANS-PORTATION FACILITIES.

While Arkansas has encouraged railroad building in every possible way, granted them liberal franchises, vast areas of public lands, and for the greater part of the time collected only nominal taxes from them, yet, notwithstanding this liberality toward them, the railroads have failed to keep pace with the growth of industry, the development of enterprise, and the increase of commerce within her borders. Our hills in the northwest contain great deposits of coal now practically inaccessible With an open channel in the Arkansas River to markets. throughout the year this product would easily reach the cities to the farther south. Our mountains are abundantly stored with zinc and marble, now practically undeveloped because of exces sive freight rates or great distance from railroads. With the White River properly improved we could send to market, at great profit, marble as beautiful and enduring as that produced in Vermont quarries.

Our progress, in spite of this lack of transportation facilities, has been remarkable during the last thirty years. Property has increased in assessed value from a little over $200,000,000 in 1900 to about $325,000,000 in 1906. Our population is approaching 2,000,000. Thirty years ago there were only 60,000 pupils in the public schools of the State. To-day we enroll almost in the public schools of the State. To-day we enroll almost 600,000. Industries have diversified amazingly. We have no problem of "the unemployed." We have more labor than we can obtain laborers to perform. We face the difficulties of the future with confidence. We sincerely believe that open rivers mean more profitable returns for labor. It means cheaper transportation for freights, closer approach to markets, faster and surer development in the future than has marked the past. We ask, and in good faith expect, more liberal treatment, fairer consideration of our people's needs than have been accorded us. As a part of the broad policy of waterway improvement we will ask that a project of permanently improving our principal rivers be considered and adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bank-Head] is recognized for the balance of the time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have been and am a very warm and enthusiastic supporter of the project of a 14-foot channel from the Lakes to the Gulf. But as it was presented to me it was a channel "from the Lakes to the Gulf." I have written several letters and I have made several talks in favor of that project. It was not, as presented to me, a project of 14 feet of water from Chicago to St. Louis, nor from the Lakes to St. Louis. The very object, or the main object, of the project was to have prepared for factories and farms of the great valley of the Mississippi way to the sea whenever the Isthmian Canal was finished.

Now, a channel, Mr. Chairman, is just as deep and no deeper than the shallowest point in it on the way to the sea. I was very much astonished, therefore, to learn that gentlemen were going to begin the 14-foot channel at the wrong end. Instead of begining at the sea and carrying the 14 feet up with them, they seem to want to begin at the Lakes and carry 14 feet down, and then, probably, as these are great cities with a great deal of influence, after they had gotten the 14 feet from Chicago as far as St. Louis, they will leave us unassisted to get the other 14 feet from St. Louis to the Gulf the best that we know how.

My own idea is that all this work ought to be done upon the principle upon which a plantation ditch is dug. You begin with the water at the outlet and carry it with your spades back to the tilled land, and then you know you have got the channel you want. Besides that, if you begin and provide a 14-foot channel down to St. Louis, leaving only a 9-foot channel from St. Louis to the Gulf, you have done a useless work to a very large extent. This is a silt-bearing stream, and it fills up its bottom wherever it can. It is obviously a fact that it would not be long before that part of the river which had been made 14 feet would assume, by filling, the depth of that part of it below, which is only 9 feet. The way it can be kept open is by getting the velocity of the current to scour out the channel and to keep it scoured out, and the only way that that can be done is to give the opportunity of rapid outlet at the mouth. may be said that by digging it 14 feet deep in the upper reaches first you could reach the sea through the Lakes and the St. Lawrence, or up in that way somehow. But I think the people in my part of the country have a right to demand that the General Government shall not interfere for the purpose of making the Mississippi River and Valley commerce float up-It is at least natural that it should float downstream. The main object in this is to prepare the great valley to take its part in the immense commerce which will accrue upon the completion of the isthmian canal, when, as my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi] said this morning, the Mississippi will begin, to all commercial intents and purposes, to empty itself into the Pacific Ocean.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope to see the day when we will get the 14 feet from the Gulf to the Lakes. I am going to do everything that I can with that end in view. I am satisfied from what I am told by my colleague [Mr. Humphreys of Mississippi], by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Ransdell], by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of this committee, in whose absolute rectitude of character, honesty of purpose, fairness, and sound judgment I have the utmost confidence [applause], that the object of this bill is to secure the necessary survey in the lower reaches of the river as a prerequisite, so that when the work is done it shall be done from the right end. And then the great commerce of the great valley can flow downstream "unvexed and unfretted" to the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything during the debate on this bill, and would not do so now but for the unfair and unjust criticisms which have been passed upon it and the members of the committee who framed it. I believe, sir, that it is the best river and harbor bill that has ever been presented to this House. I know that it is the result of the most careful investigation. We began the preparation of this bill, Mr. Chairman, with the purpose in view of completing a large number of the great projects in this country that were inaugurated several years ago, believing that it was in the interests of commerce, believing that it was the very best policy to be pursued in order that the country and its increasing commerce might have the benefit of some completed project. There was Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cleveland, and other great ports that were under improvement, and we have provided in this bill, according to the plans adopted when its preparation was begun, for the completion of all these great works, with one single exception, that being the port of Cleve-land, the home of the chairman of this committee, who has been so unjustly criticised upon the floor of the House.

I had the honor of serving upon the subcommittee which considered the projects in the State of Ohio, and when we reached Cleveland in the process of framing the bill, I insisted that it should be treated as all these other great projects had been and that an appropriation sufficient to carry it to completion should be placed in the bill. I was met with that determination which has always characterized the actions of the gentleman from Cleveland, and he resisted to the uttermost, and successfully resisted, a provision to complete his own port. When I asked him to give the reason for his action he replied: "I would rather have it said on the floor and in the country that my home port had been discriminated against than to have it said it had been more liberally treated than other ports in the country." Therefore that port, the home of the chairman, has been discriminated against to the extent of more than a million and a half dollars.

It has been said on the floor here by a number of gentlemen that the chairman dominates the committee. Well, sir, if he does it is because of his superior knowledge of the work in hand. If he dominates the committee, Mr. Chairman, it is because he is honest and just, because he is fair, because he sees the whole country alike. The State of Maine and the States of Texas, Alabama, or Ohio all look alike to him when it comes to providing for projects for those several States. [Loud applause.] I have served on that committee with the distinguished gentleman from Ohio for ten years, and if I had to judge, Mr. Chairman, of his politics by his conduct, by his words, by his actions in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I would to-day be unable to say to which party he belongs. [Applause.] If he dominates the committee, Mr. Chairman, it is because of the reasons I have given. It is because he knows more about the river and harbor improvements of this country than any living man in it; it is because he has always been just, because he has always been fair, and if anything can be said of him it can be truthfully said that when he comes to deal with projects in which he is supposed to be personally interested he always leans back a little.

Why these criticisms? Where do they come from? Has not every section of this great country been as fairly dealt with in this measure as conditions would allow? What do our good friends from the great Mississippi Valley have to complain about in this bill? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] paraded a map here the other day while he was addressing the House that is so misleading, that is so far from expressing the facts, that it is not worthy to be considered. He carefully concealed the fact that $3,000,000 was carried in this bill for the upper reaches of the Mississippi River, from Cairo to St. Paul. No reference has ever been made to that. It is always that you have not treated the great Mississippi River Valley with fairness and justice.

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I am in favor of a 14-foot waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, and that I would have been delighted if that project could have gone into this bill; but how could we, as sensible, practical business men, acting for the Government, have put a proposition in here for the expenditure of from thirty-five to fifty millions of dollars, and nobody could say how many more, to complete this project from the Lakes to St. Louis, and leave that stretch of the river below St. Louis unprovided for, without even a reasonable guess having been made as to what its cost is to be? We have a provision in here for a survey, for a thorough examination of that project, and when the next Congress meets at least that report will be here, and we will be able to act intelligently upon the question. We will have expert knowledge, we will have at least a guess as to what it will cost and whether or not it is practicable, feasible, and desirable.

So I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the great Mississippi Valley has been not only fairly but generously treated in this bill. The Mississippi River, without counting the $3,000,000 that has been allowed and which has been so carefully concealed by all these gentlemen, has $15,000,000 in this bill, to say nothing of the appropriations made in the interest of those States on the Lakes which are also Mississippi River States. What do you gentlemen want? Do you want the world? Would you like to have everything in the bill given to that particular section of the country? Why, Mr. Chairman, the purpose and object of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is to take into consideration the whole country; take into consideration the projects which are presented, to weigh them well; to investigate and to accept, in the main, the reports and the recommendations of the engineers, whose business and duty it is to make investigations and to pass upon the practicability and the cost of such projects.

I want to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I sincerely hope the amendments that are to be proposed to this bill will be voted down and voted down promptly, and when the time comes to consider this project from the Lakes to St. Louis intelligently, as I am sure it will, then we will be agreed that it ought to be provided for, and I have no doubt it will. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the House for general debate on this bill has expired, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

Improving harbor at Cape Porpoise, Maine: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 191, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, $46,000.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested, and I have no doubt the other Members of the House were also, in the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, based on the general idea of enlarging the size of and making annual the appropriations for the rivers and harbors of the United States. In that connection I introduced on the 11th of January of this year a resolution which is, I think, the first attempt ever made to put in concrete form legislation on this subject, and which I would like to have read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[H. J. Res. 216, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 11, 1907.

Mr. MORRELL introduced the following joint resolution; which was ferred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be Joint resolution providing for the manner of consideration of the rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

Whereas the enormous development in late years of the natural resources of the United States and the consequent increase in the production of articles for home consumption and for export has rendered the transportation facilities of the country, especially those by water, entirely inadequate to supply the demand made upon them, and to accommodate the various types of vessels which modern skill has constructed to handle these products; and

Whereas, further, it is the general belief that the immediate improvement on a large scale of the waterways and harbors of the country would do much to regulate the charges of rallroads: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the sense and desire of this Congress that the appropriation bill for rivers and harbors shall be given the same consideration and shall be on the same scale as those for the Army and Navy and other large annual appropriation bills, and constant large appropriations being necessary to enable the United States to keep pace with the other nations of the world, and being for the good of the country at large, that this appropriation shall hereafter be an annual one.

Mr. MORRELL, Mr. Chairman, no one appreciates more

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, no one appreciates more than I do the difficulties, many and great, with which the members and the chairman of this committee have to cope in the preparation of the river and harbor bill. Bills are introduced and propositions presented for the enlarging of harbors and for the deepening of approaches to harbors and for inland rivers, all deserving of consideration at the hands of the Federal Government, all meritorious, particularly so in the eyes of the Member or Members of the House who happen to represent the particular district in which the desired improvement is located. It is impossible and always will be impossible in view of the policy heretofore followed out of appropriating but compara-tively small sums for the great rivers and harbors of our country, and only then every two years, for the present River and Harbor Committee or any other committee, no matter how able may be those who constitute its membership, to satisfy not merely the demands of this, that, or the other Representative in Congress, but, what is more to the point, the outcry of the country at large for better water facilities.

I have listened attentively to the speeches which have been made during general debate on the bill at present before the House, and the burden of the song, either in the direct presentment of the case, as in the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana and others, or in the replies made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to questions as to why this, that, or the other meritorious measure had been omitted from the bill, has been on the line that there was not a sufficient amount of money to do all that was desired.

The time has come, to my mind, Mr. Chairman, when the present policy of the Government toward these great factors in our industrial development should be changed, or at least that this body, representing all sections of the country, should put their seal of protest against its continuance on such narrow lines.

It is unfair to the members of this great committee, who are charged with the policy of the proper development of the waterways and harbors of the country; it is unfair to the Representatives who come to Congress, and who are expected to obtain for their districts and States improvements for which there is universal and just demand, that there should not be a policy adopted broad enough to warrant appropriation bills to be passed annually carrying amounts which would insure our rivers and harbors keeping pace with our railroad and industrial development.

The recent difficulties in the Northwestern States emphasize the need of the procedure outlined in my resolution. In that region there was a complete breaking down of efficiency in the business of railroad transportation as to fuel and other supplies, making a case of either very bad management on the part of the roads or inability to make the extensions and improvements demanded by the wonderful growth of the business of the United States. This great country for the last decade has been maturing its agricultural and industrial life, and its domestic commerce has increased in volume and value to gigantic proportions. The railroads have not kept pace with the volume growth of our commerce, which has demanded a new series of well-graded roadbeds, heavy double tracks, permanent bridges, and ample terminal facilities. Commerce has advanced with far greater strides than the facilities for its handling by the transportation companies have advanced.

In 1880 the wealth of the United States was $42,642,000,000; in 1900 it was $94,300,000,000. In 1880 there were 93,267 miles of railroads in operation. In 1900 there were 194,262 miles, which had increased in 1904 to 212,349. The wealth of the country increased about 125 per cent in two decades, while the railroad mileage increased not quite 110 per cent. The production of coal rose from 63,000,000 tons in 1880 to 226,000,000 tons in 1890. or more than 300 per cent. Petroleum rose from 1,104,000,000 gallons in 1880 to 2,661,000,000 in 1900, and to 4,916,000,000 in 1904. Pig iron stood at 3,800,000 tons in 1880; in 1905 it had increased nearly 800 per cent. Steel in 1880 represented 1,000,000 tons; in 1904 it had risen to 14,000,000 tons. Copper in 1880 was 27,000 tons, which in 1904 had risen to 363,000 tons. Our entire mineral wealth in 1880 had a value of something more than $369,000,000; in 1900 this had risen to something more than $1,000,000,000, and in 1904 to $1,289,000,000. It will thus be seen that the commercial activity of the country as represented by these heavier articles of merchandise has increased during the last twenty-five years at from 200 to 500 per cent, while railroad facilities have advanced but 110 per cent.

It has been intimated by one great railroad man that the railroads of a country can by no possibility keep pace with the commerce of the country. Transportation by rail has its limitations, and we have been warned by the great congestion of the past few months, as well as by the language of Mr. Hill, that these limitations have been reached in the United States.

The limitations of railroads were foreseen by German and French transportation authorities years ago, and these limitations have begun to impress the English mind as nothing has ever done before

A royal British commission of sixteen persons is now investigating the canals of England with a view to their improvement. their attention being drawn to this problem by the part German inland waterways are playing in the transportation problem of that country. A German railway car, it is said, costs $62.50 per ton of load room, whereas the Rhine iron barges cost but $12.50.

The water courses of Germany and France, natural and artificial, have for many years been recognized as concomitant factors with railroads in the transportation of the commerce of these countries. There the heavy goods go by water, while lighter, more valuable, and perishable commodities go by rail. This division relieves the railroads without destroying their earning power, while distributing the commerce of the country far more efficiently than it is distributed here. Heretofore the railroads of the United States have looked upon their water rivals as enemies and have attacked every systematic movement for the improvement of our waterways. This policy, we are happy to say, is now breaking down. Railroads are becoming alive to the truth that the waterways are a relief to the colossal demands made upon them—demands which they can by no means fully meet and demands requiring the united activities of both railroads and waterways.

Spasmodic efforts are made by Congress to improve our waterways and harbors, but in no way commensurate with the demands of the commerce of the country. We have been alert in every other department of governmental activity, but have been parsimonious in the treatment of rivers and harbors.

With the hope of awakening the same alertness as to rivers and harbors that obtains in the Army and Navy and other governmental appropriations, I have submitted this resolution, and in its consideration I desire to call attention to a few statistical facts and economical conclusions.

In No. 276 of our consular reports for September, 1903, the conclusion is reached that in nearly all of the commercial countries of Europe the canal is regaining its long-lost prestige. We are told that Germany expended during the last ten years hundreds of millions of marks for the construction of artificial water courses, and that Austria will expend during the next nine years about $65,000,000 for a like purpose. Italy, with but 2,112 miles of inland water courses, voted in 1903 to expend $23,000,000 for their improvement. Since 1880, according to the special consular report entitled "Highways of Commerce," France has expended, up to 1899, $155,000,000 for the improvement of its From 1802 to 1900 the United States expended ports alone. upon all of her rivers and harbors a total of $370,411,000. France has expended in nineteen years on her harbors alone almost one-half the money expended by the United States on its rivers and harbors together in ninety-eight years.

Between 1880 and 1899 France spent $87,000,000 on her 3,500 miles of internal rivers and canals. A canal connecting Marseille with the Rhone River received $15,000,000, and one from Paris to Rouen $11,600,000. Since 1899 France has been extending these canals and developing her minor rivers to a most remarkable extent. The improvements made on the Loire and its tributaries have opened inland navigation to one-fourth of all France. The increased tonnage created by these improve-ments necessitated deep water for the canal at Nantes, and they are now preparing a 26-foot depth of water at that place, so that Nantes may become a first-class seaport and keep pace with the opening of the upper Loire to navigation.

One hundred and ten million tons of merchandise are transported into France each year by railroad, and 33,000,000 tons by water. The growth of the water transportation is one of the remarkable incidents of the French transportation problem. A regular weekly service of automobile canal barges run between Paris and Dunkirk, and another from Paris to Valenciennes. The speed of the automobile barges compares favorably with that of slow freight trains and the transportation is much cheaper.

In the volume entitled "Highways of Commerce" we find the following language:

Millions and millions of dollars have been spent and are still being spent by Germany, France, and Holland to bring their products to market. No sacrifice seems to be too great for them, and, indeed, the seaports, as we have seen, are not the only reciplents of this bounty. They understand that the heart can not be in good order without healthy veins and arteries. Hamburg, Bremen, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Antwerp, Dunkirk, Calais, and Havre are centers whence the great arteries of trade and commerce radiate; but every one of these ports depends in turn upon the thorough and complete organization of its tributary system of railways and canals.

The opening of the Oder-Spree Canal caused the traffic between upper Silesia and Hamburg to go forward by leaps and bounds. Every deepening of the river Oder has been answered by a corresponding increase of tonnage. But recently the Prussian House of Lords has authorized the deepening of the waterway between Stettin and Berlin, so that vessels of 600 tons may ply between the cities, limiting the cost of this single enterprise to $71,400,000. This was done with the hope that the single city of Stettin might regain the lost trade that went to Hamburg and Lubeck by reason of their excellent water connections with Berlin and that the national trade might witness a corresponding increase. The latest developments of mechanical power by the application of electric power to the propulsion of canal boats and barges have been adopted by German transportation authorities.

While Germany and France have been thus keenly alive to the appropriate development of both forms of transportation, rail and water, we, on the contrary, have apparently centered our activity upon the development of transportation by rail. We have expended seemingly vast sums of money upon our rivers and harbors, but really insignificant sums when compared with the really great expenditures lavished upon the Army and Navy and other departments of our governmental activity.

There is really but a small amount carried in the bill before the House, only $34,000 in cash for this year and $48,000 in continuing contracts.

Let us consider for a moment what has been done in the way of river and harbor appropriations up to the present day.

On April 6, 1802, Congress made its first appropriation for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States, amounting to $30,000; between that and March 3, 1825, thirteen other appropriations were made, no one of them amounting to $100,000; on that date Congress appropriated $300,000; on May 24, 1828, the $1,000,000 mark was reached; from that until March 3, 1837, it dropped back to lower figures, when it reached $1,666,000; dropping back again through forty-four different appropriations, it pushed forward on August 30, 1852, to $2,099,000; on June 23, 1866, it rose to $3,698,000, and on August 11, 1888, to $22,235,883, and on September 19, 1890, reached the highest mark of the century, $25,036,611.

The entire amount appropriated from April 6, 1802, to September 19, 1900, was $370,411,124, or an average of $3,700,000 a

Fiscal					200-
Fiscal					010
Fiscal	year	1907	6,	589,	866

From the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ended June 30, 1906, the expenditures for that year alone were $736,717,582—that is to say, the Government expends nearly twice as much in a single year for other purposes as have been expended on rivers and harbors for one hundred and five years.

The average expenditure upon rivers and harbors for each year since 1802 is about $4,300,000, or about what is paid for an ordinary battle ship.

Comparison of river and harbor appropriations with other appropriations:

Average annual appropriation for rivers and harbors	$4, 300, 000
Appropriation in 1906 for civil establishment	149, 600, 000
For the military establishment	117, 946, 000
For the naval establishment	110, 474, 000
For the Indian Service	12, 746, 000
For pensions	141, 034, 000
For interest on the public debt	24, 308, 000
Deficiencies in postal revenues	12, 673, 000

Every four years we spend more for war than we have spent for rivers and harbors in one hundred and five years. Every four years we spend as much on the Navy as we have spent on rivers and harbors in one hundred and five years.

Every year we spend three times as much on the Indians as we have expended on the average each year on-rivers and harbors.

We have appropriated for the Isthmian Canal for the year ending June 30, 1997, $25,456,415, and can well afford to expend $50,000,000 per annum upon the development of our rivers and harbors, the basis of that trade which is to make the Isthmian Canal a profitable venture.

The expenditures for rivers and harbors from 1800 to June 30, 1905, were $406,199,296. The expenditures for the Navy Department for the same period were $1,668,000,000, or four times as much. Total expenditures for war for the same period $5,495,000,000, or more than thirteen times as much. The total expenditures for the War and Navy have been $7,163,000,000, or nearly eighteen fold.

Without disparaging the necessity for these appropriations, and without attacking their wisdom in any way, I maintain that annual appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors should be placed upon an equal footing with these other great and annual appropriations.

Through the harbors of the country must pass in and out the merchandise which goes to make our $3,000,000,000 foreign trade, and which, from that part denominated imports, furnishes the largest part of the money which is expended upon all governmental affairs.

Through our custom-houses there comes each year $261,798,-857 as duties paid upon goods entering this country through our various ports of entry. Our total ordinary net revenue in 1905 was $544,274,000, showing that our revenue from customs alone—a revenue depending almost entirely upon our rivers and harbors—is very nearly one-half of the entire revenue of the country. The revenue from the internal-revenue department was $234,095,000 in 1905—a revenue very largely dependent for its magnitude upon the transportation facilities of the country. Thus out of our total ordinary net revenue of $544,274,000, the sum of $496,893,000 is derived from customs and internal revenue. Ten-elevenths of our revenue is entirely dependent upon the commerce of the country, and in the entire history of the Government a less amount has been expended upon all our rivers and harbors than was collected in 1905 from internal revenue and customs. That this is an unfair and unwise method of procedure is apparent, and my contention that the method of procedure should be changed is certainly entitled to the highest degree of consideration.

Of the money expended from June, 1802, to September, 1900, $206,899,183 went to our rivers; $127,713,856 to our harbors; $30,245,387 to our canals; $5,552,696 for surveys, examinations, etc. The magnitude of these harbors will be seen by an examination of the tonnage entered at and cleared from the following seaports of the United States from and to foreign countries in 1905:

Seaport.	Entered.	Cleared.
Passamaquoddy, Me Portland, Me Boston, Mass. New York. Philadelphia Baltimore. Newport News. Norfolk and Portsmouth Charleston, S. C. Brunswick, Ga. Savannah, Ga. Pensacola, Fla. Mobile, Ala. Thus there passes in and out through these seaports, representing the great harbors of the country and depending upon the great rivers of the country to a very large degree, a grand total of 49,813,119 tons per annum, or about 100,000,000,000 pounds of merchandise. Such magnificent wealth getters as these certainly demand a better treatment than they have received, an average annual appropriation during one hundred and five years of $4,300,000, about equally divided between the rivers and the harbors.

The following is the showing of total appropriations made to each of these seaports from April, 1802, to September, 1900:

Grand total, all States _ 234, 187, 976 None of the other States pays as much as $5,000,000 per annum.

It will thus be seen that these eleven States, most vitally connected with river and harbor improvement, furnish productions which yield the Government very nearly four-fifths of all its revenue as collected through the Internal-Revenue Department. Whether considered from a standpoint of revenue from the customs department or of revenue from the Internal-Revenue Department, it will be seen that of the $544,000,000 collected each year the sections containing these harbors and rivers yield the very largest proportion. If, therefore, the revenue is commercial it should be distributed more nearly in consonance with the dignity of commerce. An appropriation should be made annually for the development of these great commercial feeders and that appropriation should be large enough to equal that of any appropriation made for any other department of the Government.

A consideration of all these facts and arguments, together with many others that will suggest themselves most obviously to anyone honestly investigating the question, leads me to be lieve that the resolution should pass, and that with its passage will come a larger development of our commercial activity, an activity that will repay a hundredfold the small annual investment demanded thereby. Our country is wonderful as to its area; wonderful as to its population; wonderful as to its resources, natural and otherwise, and most wonderful as to the mighty length of its navigable waterways and the mighty area of its scaports and harbors. No country upon the globe equals it in any one of these particulars, and in the last it dwarfs into insignificance every country upon the globe. These waterways drain regions of the most wonderful wealth, and their development is a duty which as rational men we have no right to avoid. It will require millions to do the work, but these millions will simply yield other and added millions, and we are able to expend all the millions that will be required.

In the resolution which has just been read, the first at-tempted piece of legislation which has been introduced in Congress looking to large and annual appropriations for rivers and harbors, I have endeavored to crystallize the outcry which seems to come from all parts of the country for a prompt improvement of our waterways and harbors.

At the proper place in the reading of the bill I shall introduce this resolution as an amendment, and I trust that each and every Member of the House who feels the necessity for an increased and an annual appropriation, advocated as it has been by so many eminent Members, will put his stamp of approval upon the policy to which it gives voice by giving the amendment a unanimous vote.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the My colleague from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], in his remarks which he just concluded, referred to the action of the legislature of the State of Missouri criticising the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I have been advised of this action by the newspapers, as I suppose my colleague has been, but as I read the resolution passed by the legislature, they did not in any wise reflect upon the honesty, the integrity, or the superior judgment in matters of this kind of the distinguished chairman of that committee. If they had, Mr. Chairman, I would have joined my colleague, Mr. Lloyd, and my colleague, Mr. Shackleford, in trying to induce the legislature to rescind or repeal its action. The legislature by its resolution severely criticised, as I understand, the official action of the chairman disregarding the just demands of the people of the Mississippi Valley, and that, in my judgment, they had a perfect right to do. As to the upper Mississippi River, I desire to say that as far as the people of St. Louis are concerned they are certainly just as much interested in the improvement of the upper Mississippi as they are in the improvement of the stretch between St. Louis and Cairo, and if my colleague will translate his words into actions, being a representative of the upper stretch of the river, and will introduce an amendment ere in favor of increasing the appropriation of $500,000 for that stretch of the river, I, for one, will certainly be most happy to vote for it, expressing, as I know I shall do, the sentiment of the people of St. Louis. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to criticise the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. How could I do so when Alabama has had such generous treatment at its

The bill under consideration carries more than $4,000,000 for my State, and this amount will no doubt almost push to completion the most of the large projects now in course of construction in Alabama.

Alabama has been especially favored by having on that committee, as the ranking Democratic member, one whose life has been consecrated to the upbuilding of our splendid Commonwealth. The long service in Congress and on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Mr. BANKHEAD, the dean of our delegation, has enabled him during every year of that service to erect for himself some new monument to his loyalty and devotion to Alabama, and now, as he is about to retire to private life, I desire to thus publicly express the gratitude which the people of our State feel to their distinguished son. [Loud applause.] In fact, Mr. Chairman, their gratitude has already een spoken at the polls. [Applause.]

Last August, when the people were called on to select a successor to one of our distinguished Senators, should the hand of death be laid upon either, they said in tones not to be mistaken that no one of her sons was more worthy of wearing the toga of Morgan or Pettus than Mr. Bankhead. [Great applause.] The splendid vote by which they emphasized this choice showed that the toiling masses of Alabama believed that the wisdom, the experience, and the integrity of Bankhead should not be lost to Alabama and to the country. [Applause.]

During the time he has served on that committee he has secured for Alabama rivers and harbors over $10,000,000, to say nothing of the large appropriations he has secured for us as a member of the Public Buildings Committee. Alabama has had much at the hands of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and she has deserved it all and even more.

Within her borders flow more miles of river susceptible to navigation than within the borders of perhaps any other State

Most of these streams have been provided for, at least for the present, but one, and that the noblest of them all, has yet scarcely been touched. [Applause.] At Rome, Ga., the Oostanaula and the Etowah come together and form the Coosa.

This magnificent stream soon leaves the borders of Georgia and flows into Alabama. Beside its banks, Mr. Chairman, I first saw God's sunlight, and near its limpid waters I have lived to this good hour. Since I became a Member of this House I have toiled in season and out of season to secure for it that recognition which I believe its importance demands. But the committee thought that other projects which were further advanced merited all that Congress could give to our State. to the wisdom of that view I now have no complaint to make. This bill gives us the best recognition that we have had in many years, and I hope that recognition is prophetic of better things

But what of the Coosa? In the first place, Mr. Chairman, there is already an inland navigation of nearly 200 unbroken miles upon this river. Going from Rome southward, steamers ply its bosom every month in the year for that distance to Lock 4.

Three locks and dams have already been completed and the dam at the fourth is nearly so.

The original project called for thirty-one locks and 4-foot navigation. This was thought to be impracticable for successful and profitable navigation, and we secured another survey. This survey showed that a better project would be to increase the height of the locks and dams and thus decrease the number to about twenty-one and give a 6-foot channel. With this work completed, the river would afford an unbroken navigation of over 800 miles—from Rome, Ga., to the Gulf at Mobile—at all seasons of the year. This will be a longer distance of continuous navigation than is afforded by any other river in the South which empties into deep water except the Mississippi.

The length of the obstructions is about 85 miles-from Lock 4 to Wetumpka-and with these removed we reach the Alabama River near Montgomery, and thence to the Gulf. In magnitude this river has but few equals. It is a deep, bold stream, with sufficient water for boats drawing 6 feet to navigate at all seasons of the year if that water were properly concentrated over the shoals and rapids between Lock 4 and Wetumpka. Permit me here to read, as part of my remarks, an extract from a memorial to Congress prepared by Capt. W. P. Lay, the president of the Coosa River Improvement Association, in regard to the Coosa River. He says:

To give a more correct idea of the magnitude of the river and its possibilities, we quote from the report of Charles Frith, United States assistant engineer, in his report of November 24, 1888, in which he says: "Velocity observations taken at Lock 4 show a discharge of 3,921 cubic feet, with a velocity of 1.33 feet per second, at a stage of 1.8 feet above low water. Similar observations at Wetumpka, at low water, show a discharge of 5,796 cubic feet, with a velocity of 0.9 feet per second."

Figure 2. The annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1879, page 1203, the low-water discharge of the Mississippi River at St. Paul is given at 5,800 cubic feet per second. In the report for 1880, page 482, the low-water discharge of the Hudson River between Troy and Albany is given as about 2,000 cubic feet per second; and in the report for 1881, page 1929, the low-water discharge of the Ohio River at Pittsburg is given as 1,666 cubic feet at zero of the gauge, and as 5,810 cubic feet per second at 9 inches of the gauge.

Comparing these discharges with that of the Coosa at Wetumpka, it appears that the volume of water flowing in the Coosa at low water is about equal to that of the Mississippi at St. Paul, about 2.8 times greater than that in the Hudson at Albany, and about 3.5 times greater than that in the Ohio at Pittsburg.

The country through which it flows abounds in coal, iron, limestone, baryte, and other minerals, and in timber of all kinds. Along its banks and tributary to it is an agricultural country unexcelled in all the South.

At its head sits Rome, that rich and splendid Georgia city, the fires from whose furnaces turn darkness into day and the hum of whose spindles reverberate along its banks. [Applause.]

About 70 miles below is the Round Mountain iron furnace and the Dirt Cellar red ore mines, the quantity of which is inexhaustible and the quality of which is from 55 to 60 per cent metallic iron. In regard to the iron ores in this valley, Charles D. Walcott, Director of the Geological Survey, says of the red iron ores

'It is known to exist more or less continuously throughout the entire Appalachian belt, but it reaches its greatest development, both in quality and quantity, in Alabama. It supplies the furnaces at Rome, Round Mountain, Gadsden, and Attalla, all on the Coosa River, besides a very large number of furnaces in the Birmingham district, only 30 miles distant. The supply of this red ore in sight is sufficient to meet a demand much larger than the present for many years."

He also says of brown hematite ore:

A belt of these deposits extend from the vicinity of Rome southward more than 100 miles along the eastern margin of the Coosa Valley. It is probable that this belt contains more brown iron ore than all the rest of the Appalachian provinces combined, and it is nowhere more than 15 or 20 miles from the Coosa River. It supplies ore to the furnaces at Rome, Cedartown, Ætna, Rockrun, Tecumsel, Anniston, Ironaton, and Taliadega, and besides furnishes a large amount of ore for shipment to the Birmingham district and elsewhere.

About 150 miles below Rome is Gadsden, the queen city of the Coosa, whose commercial and industrial growth has been the wonder and the pride of all who love Alabama. [Applause. 1

This splendid city sits on her throne of iron upon the banks of this river, with historic Lookout as her background, the Coosa washing her feet, bestudded with black diamonds, and the sparks from her furnaces forming the dazzling jewels which encircle her head. [Great applause.]

A few years ago she was only a village of 4,000 souls, but now 12,000 busy people throng her streets, and the hum of honest industry is heard on every hand.

In her factory 1,000 happy laborers draw out the fleecy staple into clothing for Orientals; in her steel plant another thousand well-paid men transform her ores into billets of steel; in her furnaces another thousand convert the crude iron ore into pig, and a score of other industries give the toiling masses steady, wellpaid work. Within the past two years more than 500 houses have been built, and still the people call for more. Not a vacan't residence or business house can be found in the city, and every day a new one is started. Three immense sawmills running all the time can not fill the demand for lumber. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this is no boom town, but a city backed by generous nature and thrifty people to make it great. Iron, coal, limestone, and timber are at our doors, and soil and climate combine to pour a constant horn of plenty into her lap. Two excellent daily newspapers are growing day by day. A beautiful new Carnegie library, with well-filled shelves, caters to those who wish to read. Five railroads run in ten different directions to and from our town, and urban and interurban electric cars speed through our streets. But, Mr. Chairman, I could recount our industries and attractions and advantages for another hour and then exclaim, with Sheba's queen, "The half has not been [Great applause.] told."

Then why should we not prosper? Indeed, we are prospering, and all we need to make our happiness complete is the opening of the Coosa to the Gulf. [Applause.]

The navigation of this stream now extends about 50 miles below Gadsden. At Greensport, 30 miles below, barite is being mined and six barges are plying the river from that place to Gadsden to bring that mineral to railroad transportation. Coal of the best quality and in large quantities is being mined at Ragland and Coal City, near the banks of the Coosa, and at Ragland a large cement plant is being constructed, which will make 2,000 barrels of high-grade Portland cement per day. Even the completion of Lock and Dam 5 will carry us far into the Coosa coal fields and open up to navigation millions of tons of this valuable mineral. What is known as "Black Ankle Coal Basin" is near Pell City, at Lock 5. In this basin there are three workable seams of coal—one of 34 inches thickness, one of 42, and one of 64. The completion of Lock and Dam 5 would open transportation down to this valuable coal property and at the same time make the river navigable below where the Southern Railroad crosses the river at Riverside, and thus give competition with the railroad. At Riverside an immerse sawmill plant is being operated, turning out millions of feet of fine lumber every year. Near Lock 5 is Pell City, where one of the largest cotton factories of the State is being operated, and where other industrial plants are springing up. This is one of the most beautiful little cities on the Coosa, and its growth and prosperity are assured.

Anniston, Talladega, Childersburg, Wetumpka, and a dozen other thriving cities are in the Coosa Valley and will furnish thousands of tons of freight for its steamers when it is opened.

There are nine counties in Alabama lying immediately upon the Coosa River and cut off from all water communication with the Alabama River, to wit: Cherokee, Etowah, Calhoun, St. Clair, Talladega, Shelby, Coosa, Chilton, and Elmore. are three counties in Georgia that are immediately tributary to this river, and nine in Alabama. The area of these Alabama counties is about 3,566,272 acres, of which more than 700,000 is in a high state of cultivation and the remainder covered with virgin forest. The assessed value of the property of these nine counties is about $65,000,000.

The population of these nine counties is about 200,000 souls. They produce annually about 150,000 bales of cotton, 3,500,000 bushels of corn, 750,000 bushels of oats, 500,000 bushels of wheat, and other farm products, including stock, in proportion.

I have told you something of the fine mines of iron ore, but these are even excelled by the rich deposits of coal in the Coosa coal fields, through which our river runs.

This rich coal field, so appropriately named after the beautiful Coosa River and valley in which it is found, lies in Shelby and St. Clair counties, Ala., with a small portion extending about a mile and a half into Calhoun County east of the Coosa River at "Ten Islands" (the archipelago of the Coosa). It extends entirely through St. Clair County, a distance of about 34 miles, and 24 miles into Shelby County, making the whole length of the field approximate 60 miles, running up and down the Coosa River, and is estimated to contain 350 square

Professor McCalley, in his estimate of the extent of the Coosa coal fields, reaches the conclusion that with an output of 10,000 tons per day the coal in this region would last 165 years.

As for the quality and character of the Coosa coals, I quote from the report of Eugene A. Smith, Ph. D., Alabama State Geologist, in his report of the Coosa coal fields, 1895:

While different seams of coal show special differences in the structure and composition in this, as in all other coal fields, yet there are general features of similarity that distinguish these coals, as a class, from other coals. They are highly bituminous—free burning—yet rich in fixed carbon. Soft, easy to mine, free from bone or slate structure and also from combined sulphur or pyrite, generally called sulphur flakes, and often and fervently maledicted by the miners in other fields. They long sustain combustion and leave but little ash or cinder and no clinker, and are hence well adapted for raising steam, for forge work, and for all other purposes of fuel.

The most important characteristic of these coals is in their superior coking qualities. They will rank among the first class of coking coals.

The lime interest of the Coosa Valley demands more than a passing thought, when we take into consideration that the lime deposits of this valley are probably the richest and most extensive to be found anywhere in the United States, and the further fact that the greatest market for lime is found in the sugar refineries in Louisiana and the West Indies, and this market begins where the waters of the Coosa River—the object of this memorial-empty into the Gulf of Mexico.

These lime deposits are found in great cliffs of pure lime-stone, assaying 98 to 100 per cent pure lime, towering up over the river and valley hundreds of feet high. They are similar to the cliff limestone region of the Ohio Valley.

Mr. Chairman, we find in this favored valley iron, coal, and limestone in closer proximity and in greater quantities and of finer quality than any region beneath the sun.

I have merely skimmed over a few of our advantages, but these show something of the importance of the river and its splendid valley. With only an inland navigation the tonnage on the river last year was more than 83,000 tons, valued at nearly $3,000,000, and the tonnage in the valley was over 10,- 000,000 tons. Gadsden alone handled over 2,160,000 tons and Rome, Ga., over two and one-half million tons.

But I must desist. We believe that in the near future a just committee and a just and generous Congress will give to this river at least a moiety of what it deserves, and that from the mountains of north Georgia to the Gulf of Mexico the gleam of electricity will shoot out from its immense water powers; the hum of honest industry will echo from the mountains and float out upon its bosom; the shouts of myriads of happy children will ring out from the schoolhouses along its banks; the shrick of a hundred steamboat whistles will announce the steady march of commerce from the mountains to the sea. Then gentlemen from the North and gentlemen from the South will all join in one grand refrain of "Hail Columbia, happy land," and all the country will say Amen! [Loud applause.]

Mr. TYNDALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpos of detaining the House for any great length of time, nor to add very much to what has been said in reference to the bill now pending, but, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations on this bill, which is, as I take it, the most important bill which we have had or will have before us at this session of Congress. When I say the most important I mean the most important to the country in general. It seems to me it were now time that we pass some legislation in favor of the common people. We have increased our own salaries and that of the Chief Executive and the Senate. Don't you believe, gentlemen, that it is now time to do something for the people at home?

The Rivers and Harbors Committee, who have had under consideration this bill, have brought out here a bill which is in many respects the best one we have ever had reported on the subject of river improvement, yet it is defective in many instances. The bill carries with it, in the aggregate, an authorized appropriation of $83,816,138. Of this sum, $12,145,000 is authorized to be expended in the improvement of the Mississippi River. Mark you, there is only about one-half of this amount actually appropriated. It is left to the discretion of the Secre tary of War to contract for work and improvements to the amount of one-half of this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we ought to appropriate at least fifty millions for the improvement of the Mississippi River, the Father of Waters, the great natural spinal column of American commerce. It seems to me that the wise thing for us to do is to build the foundation of this waterway's navigation first. You know, Mr. Chairman, that the Mississippi is the great trunk navigation highway. Why should we begin building and improving the branches first? Do men build the side rooms and porches before they do the main body of the house? In the development of the railroad industry in this country the main trunk lines were built first and after that the branch lines. This bill carries with it about eight times as much appropria-tion for the smaller inlets and bays as it does for the Mississippi. For instance, there is appropriated for the improve-ment of Cold Spring Inlet, New Jersey, more than a million dol-lars—a project unheard of until a few days ago. It seems that the Cape May Real Estate Company are to be the greatest beneficiaries of this project, and are now, in contemplation that this appropriation will pass, extensively advertising their lands adjacent to this inlet and upon which the harbor is to be erected.

For more than a century, Mr. Chairman, we have been expending our money in improving the gulfs and bays along the Atlantic seaboard. Those engaged in manufacturing and foreign com-merce have grown rich. They have formed monopolies and trusts, and now at this very moment their representatives are here lobbying and bringing everything to bear upon this House which they can for their own personal aggrandizement,

Mr. Chairman, I am getting tired of seeing these eastern trusts and combines get all the ripe side of the peach and give us all the green side, no matter under what political guise it There is no politics in this matter when it comes to may come. spending the people's money in internal improvement. This idea of river improvement is not a new one. It has been studied and discussed long and well. It is well known now that the greatest enterprise upon which this Government could now embark is the improvement of our rivers. Since we are to build the Panama Canal the railroads are building no longer from east to west, but from north to south. Now open up the Mississippi River and we have the cheapest and best method of reaching the canal that could be conceived of. The Mississippi Valley will then become a great funnel through which we can pour all the surplus products of the country. We expect to spend $200,000,000 in building the Panama Canal. Now, if that is a wise thing—and I think it is—give us $50,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the praise of this Congress will continue to be sung throughout the ages yet to come.

During the year 1876 688,755 tons of freight reached St. Louis by river. The following regular lines of packets and freight steamers with barges found profitable employment: The Conrad Line, the Eagle Packet Company, St. Louis and Illinois Packet Company, the Counts Line, the Mississippi Valley Transportation Company, the Missouri and Star Line, the Keokuk and Northern Line, the Anchor Line, the Carroll and Baker Line, and the Babbage Transportation Line. In the neighborhood of 350 steamers and barges; and during this same year over 2,200 steamers and barges arrived at the port of St. Louis.

Owing to the increase of the population of the Middle West, the growth of commerce, manufacture, and business interests demanded the extension of railroad facilities and the building of new lines. The liberality of the people who advocated propositions to vote railroads money and grants to secure rapid transit knew no bounds. The transcontinental railroad convention, which was held in St. Louis in 1875, contained men of prominence from all over the country. Railroad conventions were held all over the Republic, advocating the idea of the Government aiding in the building of railroads by which the country would be threaded from State to State and from ocean to ocean and bound together by ligaments of steel, connecting all parts of America socially, commercially, and politically. The steamboat men and river men generally attended these conventions and by their presence and influence aided very materially in the railroad enterprises. Rapid transit became a reality; unprecedented railroad building took place, and soon long trains of cars filled with the commodities of our farms and our mines and our factories were daily seen traveling to our The Government continued to protect to the market places. greatest extent, encourage and legislate in the interest of railroad corporations and wholly neglecting and disregarding our rivers until the owners of river transportation became discouraged, and the result is we to-day have little or no river transportation. However, we still have our rivers with us, and, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that we are soon to embark on this river-improvement scheme, which will be one of the grandest enterprises in which we as a nation have ever engaged. I hope the time may speedily come, and I hope this committee will by its vote amend this bill so that the Mississippi River will now receive an appropriation of $50,000,000. This would be an investment of money which would affect and redound to the benefit of the whole Republic and not any particular locality.

Open up this great internal waterway system, with its 16,000 miles of navigable waters, and we will witness an era of prosperity beyond our most sanguine expectations.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that any Member of this House who would oppose a good, stout appropriation for the improvement of our rivers is directly interested and concerned in the financial welfare of the railroads of this country to the disregard of the welfare of the great masses of the people. therefore appeal to this House to stand by the great mass of common people who have so strongly and so earnestly petitioned us to give them this very much needed internal improvement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Kennebec River, Maine, from the mouth to Gardiner, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 321, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, $75,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound a question to the committee in the interest of progress and dispatch of business. We have ascertained, those of us who have observed the temper of the House, that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is the best chairman that that committee ever had. [Applause.] I quite agree with that sentiment. Certainly I have learned, or we have learned by responses here, that each and every member of the committee is not only an able man, but is an honest man and is in full accord with the entire bill. We have learned further that that powerful element in the House, backed by the same momentum that has always passed the river and harbor bill, has decided that there shall be no amendment to this bill, and we have been notified on every hand not to propose an amendment. I am not going to propose any amendment. I know better than to propose an amendment to the river and harbor bill. [Laughter.] served eight years on this committee, and I learned a great deal during that time, and one of the things I learned was that when you get a river and harbor bill in the House of Representatives you get run over if you attempt to improve it. [Laughter and applause.] Therefore I suggest whether it would not be wise now, looking forward to the rapidity with which the session is running to its end, to rise and report this bill back without amendments, with the recommendation that it do pass. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Essex River, Massachusetts: For improving said river by the restoration of the channel, $5,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended unless a further amount of $5,000 shall be provided by the State of Massachusetts or other agency, and made subject to the order of the Secretary of War in such manner as he may direct, to be expended upon said project under his direction.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by my colleague [Mr. GAEDNER], who found that he would not be able to be in the House when this item was reached, to offer an amendment which he had prepared to the effect that an unexpended balance of the amount formerly appropriated for this river, amounting to about $3,000, be made available and expended in accordance with the recommendations made by Major Burr, the local engineer in charge; but I have just learned that the Chief of Engineers has ruled that legislation is not necessary, as he now has the authority to so order this expenditure, that the order has already been made, and that the sum will be expended in accordance with the recommendation of the local I would ask the chairman of the committee if that engineer. I would asl information is correct?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that such is the fact. The improvement provided for in the amendment is already ordered to be done, and I would say further that I regard it as objectionable to put on an amendment of the nature proposed, because it throws doubt on other items where there is not a similar provision.

Mr. LAWRENCE. In view of the statement of the chairman of the committee I will not offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor of refuge at Block Island, Rhode Island: For aintenance, $20,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 19, strike out the word "For" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Continuing improvement and for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Continue the channel with the dimensions heretofore authorized for the inner harbor through the shoals at its outer end to deep water in the outer channel."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at New Haven, Conn.: For maintenance, including channel by way of Oyster Point to Kimberly Avenue Bridge on West River, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last Mr. Chairman, the other day the legislature of the State of Missouri and also the legislature of the State of Illinois passed resolutions for the benefit or, rather, the instruction of Congress. The legislature of the State of Illinois passed a resolution calling attention to the fact, in connection with the river and harbor bill, that that bill carried appropriations or authorizations to the amount of over $16,000,000 for the Great Lakes. The purpose of making this comparison in the resolu-tion was a criticism of the bill in the interest of another proposition, which, whether it may be meritorious or not, is not for me to discuss at this time. The legislature of Missouri made the same sort of criticism for the same purpose. sometimes to pause and consider what are the facts in relation to the movement of commerce in the country. The total amount of commerce on the Mississippi River and the Ohio River combined passing the point at Cairo, Ill., where most of it passes, so far as north of Memphis is concerned, amounted to 3,909,117 tons, counting tons as the tonnage of the vessels both arriving and departing, for eleven months ending November 30 of this last year. During the same period of time on the Great Lakes the total amount of trade carried on the Lakes was 70,049,369 tons of receipts and 72,975,297 tons of shipments; and yet the criticism is made by the legislatures in the interest of tonnage on the Mississippi, as against the tonnage on the Great Lakes, when one is less than 4,000,000 and the other more than 70,000,-000 of tons. In this bill is carried an item of about $5,000,000, or possibly exactly, for the improvement of the Detroit River.

For the nine months ending November 30 the commerce on the Detroit River passing through that river amounted to 58,531,519 registered tons. On the Sault Ste. Marie, during the same period, the commerce passing the canals there was over 50,000,000 tons. So that the comparison of the tonnage, which might easily be carried further and to the Atlantic and Gulf ports, shows that if there be any portion of the country which is entitled to improvement it is those two places carried in this bill for the interest of the entire commerce of the country, about $5,000,000 for the Sault Ste. Marie and about $5,000,000 for the Detroit River; and for the State of Illinois, of which Chicago is one of the important places, to say the least-for the legislature of that State to pass a resolution criticising a bill because it carries items which are more for the interest of Chicago's commerce than for any other place in the country, leads me to make these remarks. I think that the legislature of Illinois, if it were attending to the business committed to its care, if it were considering those questions which come within the control of the legislative body of that State, and should give less consideration to those questions which come before Congress, it would do both itself and the country much more good. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr, MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. MANN. M Mr. Chairman, it is not an easy matter, as everyone in the House who ever tries it knows, to make up any kind of an omnibus bill. If the criticisms, whether expressed or implied, by these legislative resolutions had not been made I would not take the trouble to say a word in regard to the chairman of the committee reporting this bill. He needs no defense There is no one who sits at a desk [Applause.] in this Hall who does not take off his hat in profound respect to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.] But in view of the criticisms which have been made of him I desire to say that, in my opinion at least, there never has been in the history of our country a man who has done more good and with more justice in making up the river and harbor bill or any other bill than the gentleman from Ohio who reports this bill. [Applause.]

It is easy to find fault with his action. I take that liberty with him myself when I please. It may be that the bill is not perfect. Of course it is not perfect. There may be items in it that ought to be stricken out. There are very likely items out of it that ought to be put in. That is human nature. But I do not think it lies within the province of either Missouri or Illinois to criticise items which are in this bill, with more than $11,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River and with more than $16,000,000, as stated here, for the improvement of the Great Lakes. These States, with their shipments going both south and north, ought to give praise to the committee which has provided these great amounts without necessarily relaxing an ambition to carry on other improvements [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment may be considered as withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Echo Bay, New York: For removal of Long Rock and for maintenance, $12,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there. I will state that this amendment is made necessary in order to designate the improvement to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9 strike out all after the words "New York," in line 21, and all of line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Completing improvement in accordance with report submitted in House document No. 182, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, and for maintenance, $12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ambrose channel, New York Harbor: The Secretary of War many enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, to an amount not exceeding $1,148,510, exclusive of amounts herein and heretofore appropriated or heretofore authorized, from which amount, or from any amounts heretofore appropriated or authorized for said project, not exceeding $800,000 may be expended for the construction of two suction dredges: Provided, That during the continuance of excavation in the said Ambrose channel the navigation thereof may be restricted by regulations to be issued by the Secretary of War, limiting the use of said channel to daylight navigation by vessels of 29 feet draft or over.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I notice a slight error here, and, while not serious, the phraseology should be corrected. There is nothing appropriated in this paragraph, so the word "herein," in line 18, and the word "and," at the be-ginning of line 19, should be stricken out. I move that those two words be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels in the harbor of New York: The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to modify the project for this improvement by making the depth less than 40 feet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The complaint which most Members make against this bill is that they have failed to get something beneficial to their localities; the complaint of the people of the city of New York is that the bill takes from them something they already

In 1899, in the same act in which the Ambrose channel project was authorized, the project known as the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels improvement was initiated in the following language:

guage:
Improving Bay Ridge channel and Red Hook channel in the harbor of New York: Continuing improvement, $100,000: Provided, That the work shall be begun at the 40-foot curve at the southerly end of Bay Ridge channel and be continued through it along the Brooklyn shore to Twenty-eighth street until the said Bay Ridge channel shall have a uniform depth of 40 feet at low tide and a width of 1,200 feet, and the improvement of the Red Hook channel shall be begun on its southerly end and at its junction with the Bay Ridge channel, and be continued through it to its junction on its northerly end with the Buttermilk channel until said Red Hook channel shall have been made to a depth of 40 feet at low tide and a width of 1,200 feet: And provided further, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the completion of said Bay Ridge channel and Red Hook channel, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,400,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

These channels lie along the east shore of the upper bay better known as the South Brooklyn water front, and with Buttermilk channel form an easterly channel between the Narrows and the East River, and are separated from the main channel by Governors Island and a broad shoal off Gowanus Bay. In 1881 a project was adopted to make these channels 18 feet deep and 200 feet wide, and subsequently it was modified so as to make the depth 26 feet with a width of 800 feet in Bay Ridge channel and 400 feet in Red Hook channel. This project was completed in 1899 at a cost of about $1,090,000. The same year the existing project was authorized.

To July 1, 1906, $1,081,320.20 had been expended under the authorization of the act of 1899, and the appropriations already made aggregate $1,499,000. About 75 per cent of the entire area to be dredged has been excavated to depths from 28 to 40 feet; 11,082,203 cubic yards have been removed, which is about one-half of the entire amount necessary to be removed.

According to the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1906 Bay Ridge channel is available for, and is used by, vessels of 30 feet draft as far as Fortieth street, Brooklyn; and except for few shoals it has 35 feet depth to that point with a width of about 800 feet. Above Fortieth street to Red Hook channel, which commences at Twenty-eighth street, Brooklyn, where Bay Ridge channel ends, there is a depth of 30 feet and a width of 500 feet; toward Gowanus Creek the available depth is about 24 feet. Red Hook channel, which commences at Twenty-eighth street and continues in a northerly direction along the Brooklyn shore until it reaches Buttermilk channel has 35 feet continuous depth throughout its entire length, but there is not yet sufficient width for navigation by vessels requiring so much water. Its available depth is 30 feet for 300 feet width and 26 feet depth for about 800 feet width. The total length of the two channels is 41 miles, and the mean rise of tide is 4½ feet.

The commercial statistics for the calendar year 1905 show that along Bay Ridge channel, from Ninety-second street to Twenty-eighth street, the approximate number of tons of freight received at the docks was 1,110,000, valued at $51,485,000; tons shipped, 630,000, valued at $32,520,000; in all, 1,740,000 tons, valued at $84,005,000. There are no statistics of the freight shipped and received along Red Hook channel, but the local engineer estimates it as one-sixth of that of Bay Ridge channel, In addition 3,000,000 tons of freight pass to and from Gowanus Canal and Creek, and an enormous amount of freight passes through the channel to various destinations of which no attempt is made to keep records.

Such, briefly, was the status of the projects for the improve-ment of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels when the river and harbor bill was reported to the House Saturday, January 26 of this year.

The bill was not in print until the 28th of January, when an examination disclosed the provision for the modification of the project. It was inserted, so far as I am aware, without notice to or consultation with any of the Representatives from the city of New York and without knowledge by them that any such action was contemplated. No opportunity was afforded to discuss the provision in committee by those representing the section to be affected, and I am convinced that the committee acted in ignorance of the facts which I shall now present.

A careful examination of the report of the Chief of Engineers discloses not even an intimation that a modification of this project was contemplated or that it would be suggested. The provision is the result of recommendations made, but not published so as to be available, since the 1st of January of this The recommendation grows out of the abandonment, or at least the temporary suspension, of work under the contracts for the improvement. I am somewhat embarrassed in stating just how the provision was adopted, since I have been unable to obtain all of the correspondence had in relation to this matter. I have some of it. I do not know, however, whether it When the chairman of the committee presented is complete. this bill to the House on Thursday last, January 31, I requested him to furnish me with the correspondence upon which this recommendation was based. I have made several efforts since to obtain it without success. It is not in criticism that I state these facts, since the chairman of the committee frankly informed me that he doubted the advisability, because of important considerations from the standpoint of the United States, to make the correspondence public at this time, but merely to account for my inability to discuss with that thorough knowledge of the transaction which I should prefer to have. It is fair to add, too, that the chairman stated that he would be glad to furnish me with the correspondence for my own information, but not for publication. The information thus obtained, however, would be of no service to me.

From other sources, and in a perfectly legitimate manner, I have obtained copies of official communications which I shall utilize in this discussion. On January 11, 1907, the local engineer in charge of improvements in New York Harbor, Lieut. Col. W. L. Marshall, wrote as follows to the Chief of Engineers:

gineer in charge of improvements in New York Harbor, Lieut. Col. W. L. Marshall, wrote as follows to the Chief of Engineers:

5. The available funds were appropriated under authority of March 3, 1899, providing "that contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the completion of said Bay Ridge channel and Red Hook channel" at a total cost not exceeding $2,500,000. It is impossible now to enter into another contract for completing the projected channels within the authorized limit of cost, and therefore, except in the improbable event of the present contractor's continuing the work, it would seem that action by Congress is needed, either to extend limit of authorized expenditure, or to modify and reduce the extent of the adopted project. The latter plan seems to be preferable for reasons as fellows:

6. The present project for a channel of 40-foot depth and 1,200 feet width throughout Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels is far in excess of any existing demands of navigation in that part of the harbor. I do not know of any ships now built, building, or projected which expect to require 40-foot depth in these channels. For present needs a depth of 25 feet in Bay Ridge channel above Thirty-eighth street, and the same depth throughout Red Hook channel, would be practically sufficient; greater depths would not be used now.

7. An excellent channel, fully meeting the needs of all present shipping and of all that I can learn of for the immediate future, could be made at comparatively small expense by dredging Bay Ridge channel to 35 feet depth and 1,000 feet width below Fifty-fifth street and increasing the width to 1,200 feet, for convenience in turning large ships, between Fifty-fifth and Thirty-eighth streets, and by removing the more prominent shoals in Red Hook channel. It seems probable that this could be done with the balance of previous appropriations now available, about $270,000. If it could not be completed to the full widths stated, it could be to very nearly those widths. It would provide at an ea

Some other matters are referred to in the communication, which I shall withhold for the present. That letter, however, dated January 11, 1907, contains the first suggestion or inti-mation, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels project should be modified. bill was reported with the modification recommended on January 26, 1907. And, so that there may be no quibbling as to whether this item means that the project has been modified or only that it may be modified, I shall only add that the Secretary of War has already approved the recommendations contained in that communication from Colonel Marshall.

Meanwhile what was the actual situation in New York Harbor?

As a result of several decisions of the Secretary of War upon applications made by the city of New York the city is unable to build piers in the North River of sufficient length to accommodate the vessels now built as well as those in contemplation. The only available and undeveloped water front in the city that could be utilized for the increasing demands of commerce and of navigation is the water front on the Bay Ridge channel. With the knowledge that the United States was making, and had been so engaged for more than five years, a channel 1,200 feet wide and 40 feet deep along the South Brooklyn shore, the city took up the question of constructing a system of public docks to accommodate any ships that might possibly enter the harbor when the Ambrose channel is completed and seek adequate docking facilities. Upon examination it was disclosed that private interests had already acquired upon the Bay Ridge channel large tracts and were engaged in developing the property for private docking. The Bush Terminal Company has built six or seven solid concrete piers 1,400 feet long, 150 feet wide, with slips 270 feet wide, that accommodate six steamships at one time. Other piers of a similar character are to be constructed. This company alone moved upon the railroad system established within its limits over 70,000 tons of freight during the month of December, 1906. The total tonnage of vessels docked at its piers during the year 1906 was 1,714,516 tons, the average tonnage of the steamships was 3,000 tons, and their greatest draft, limited by the lack of water, 30 feet.

The Morse Iron Works has two plers, one 70 and the other 80 feet wide, and each 2,000 feet long. Realizing that with the acquisition by the city of the ferry from the foot of Whitehall street in Manhattan to Thirty-ninth street in Brooklyn, on the Bay Ridge channel, and the proposed establishment of another municipal ferry from the same terminal in Manhattan to about Sixty-first street in Brooklyn, with the consequent rapid development of the adjacent territory and the unquestioned enhancement in values, it would be necessary for the city to act quickly if it would continue its policy to own and control the piers and water front for the benefit of commerce, steps were taken to make possible the acquisition rapidly of that territory adjacent to Bay Ridge channel deemed desirable for a system of public

At the session of the legislature in 1906 an amendment to the charter of the city of New York was obtained to expedite proceedings in which property is acquired for wharfage purposes. Work upon plans was immediately commenced, and on January 30 of this year, in the belief that these projects for the improvement of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels would be completed, the commissioner of docks of the city of New York applied to the board of estimate of the city for leave to acquire twelve tracts of land adjacent to the Bay Ridge channel as the first step in the consummation of the plans to develop that water front and in the construction of a system of piers that would be unrivaled in any port in the civilized world. The location of the property sought to be acquired and its assessed valuation, as given by the commissioner, is as follows:

Total assessed valuation_. 1, 431, 000 In his application to the board of estimate the commissioner of docks says:

All this property will be available for trans-Atlantic ships when improved, and plans have been drawn with this end in view. The development of the Pennsylvania Railroad (connecting railroad) and the developments sure to proceed from the fact of the city's operation of the ferry to Thirty-ninth street from Whitehall street, and in connection with the projected or proposed ferry to run from Whitehall street to about the foot of Sixty-first street, South Brooklyn, will in the near future increase the valuation of this property without any doubt.

It is therefore, to my mind, expedient for the city to start proceedings for the acquirement of that portion of it shown on the map at the earliest practicable date.

I have been informed, and I have endeavored to ascertain accurately the facts, although embarrassed by the unexpectedness of this proposed modification and the lack of time to obtain positive information, that the plans contemplate piers of about 2,000 feet length or more, as piers can be built on this channel 2,400 feet long and which will accommodate at one time four of the largest ships in existence. This great improvement is planned in the belief and upon the assumption that the project initiated in 1899 to deepen and widen Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels would be completed. A rough estimate has been made that the expenditure by the city for this improvement will exceed $10,000,000. The property to be taken will undoubtedly cost at least $2,000,000 and the improvements contemplated over $8,000,000 additional.

Colonel Marshall, in the letter already quoted, states that-For present needs a depth in Bay Ridge channel above Thirty-eighth reet * * * would be practically sufficient; greater depth would street * * * not be used now.

It is somewhat startling to find that from Thirty-eighth street to Twenty-eighth street, where it is recommended that the depth of 25 feet will be adequate instead of 40 feet, is where the city contemplates taking 70 per cent of the frontage, as will be seen from an examination of the above statement of the land to be acquired. If this recommendation is to be made, and the Secretary of War has already approved the recommendation, then it would be preposterous for the city to undertake the contemplated improvement. It would be idle to build a system of docks to accommodate vessels that would require a channel 40 feet at mean low water upon a channel the depth of which would only be 25 feet.

In the same letter Colonel Marshall states:

I do not know of any ships now built, building, or projected which expect to require 40 feet depth in these channels.

This statement is hardly accurate. The purpose of the city is to furnish accommodations to the largest vessels along these channels. I have been informed that applications have already been made to the city for leases of the piers now in contemplation. It is desired that ships may sail regardless of tide and not be compelled, as at present, to wait upon the tides. Three ships of the White Star Line now sailing from New York, namely, the Celtic, Cedric, and Baltic, can load to 36 feet, but at present can only load so as to avail themselves of 30 feet draft. The North German Lloyd Steamship Company is reported to be preparing to brild a chip centrally as large.

Of what avail to complete the Ambrose channel and give 40 feet to the sea if the project which will enable vessels to dock is to be abandoned? I know that the chairman of the committee was opposed to this project when it was originated. It was authorized in the Fifty-fifth Congress just prior to my membership in this House. It was charged that it was largely for the benefit of private interests. Conditions, however, are now changed. Whatever may have been the facts when the project was authorized, the truth is now that this project is essential to the commerce of the port of New York. Failure to complete it as originally planned will be a tremendous blow to the development of the port.

It has been suggested that it is unnecessary to deepen these channels to 40 feet, since the Ambrose channel will not have 40 feet until 1911. These projects were authorized in the same Both are about equally advanced. nearer completion, it is the Ambrose channel. Of course there to have a greater depth in these channels than in Ambrose channel, but it is wise and proper and expedient that both projects be continued together, so that when the Ambrose channel is completed these channels will not only have an equal depth, but will reach a system of wharves that will accommodate any ship requiring the great depth of the Ambrose channel. Moreover, the city plans years ahead. Its leases of dock property are usually for long terms. Is it not best to permit the development of the water front to be planned and conducted with the certainty that the greater depth will eventually be provided?

So much misunderstanding exists regarding expenditures made and authorized for the improvement of New York Harbor that I shall briefly review what has actually been done by the United States. It will make more apparent the injustice and the unwisdom of the paragraph to which exception is taken.

Before the United States undertook any improvement of New

Before the United States undertook any improvement of New York Harbor the least depth in mid-channel on the outer bar was 23.7 feet at mean low water and about the same across three other shoals between the bar and deep water in the harbor. A large proportion of the commerce of the port, carried in vessels of greater draft, could cross the shoals only at or near high water.

In 1884 the Secretary of War approved a project for the improvement of Gedney channel, and in 1886 the project was extended to cover the entire main entrance to the harbor. The authorized projects provided for the dredging of a channel 1,000 feet wide and 30 feet deep at mean low water from deep water below the Narrows through Main Ship and Gedney channels to deep water outside the bar. The estimated cost was $1,490,000 for dredging 4,300,000 cubic yards. The actual amount dredged to October, 1891, when the work was approximately completed, was 4,875,079 cubic yards.

In November, 1892, the existing project for the maintenance of channels was approved. The yearly cost of this work varies, but it is estimated to average about $50,000 annually.

On July 1, 1906, the amount expended under these projects amounted to $2,027,317.29, of which $509,292.79 had been applied to the maintenance of the channels during the fourteen years that had elapsed since their completion. These expenditures have resulted in channels with a depth of 30 feet at mean low water and widths of 1,000 feet.

In 1899 a project was adopted for making an entrance to the harbor by way of Ambrose, or, as it was then known, "East channel." A continuing contract was authorized, at a cost not to exceed $4,000,000, to make the channel 2,000 feet wide and 40 feet deep at mean low water. The completion of this project will obviate the long detour now necessary inside Sandy Hook, with its dangerous angle of more than 90°.

This channel is about 7 miles in length, and its original available depth at mean low water was 16 feet. According to the report of the Chief of Engineers there had been expended on this project up to July 1, 1906, $2,359,647.45. With this expenditure two dredges have been built, 21,672,272 cubic yards of sand have been removed, and the channel has been excavated to 40 feet depth or more, with varying widths, for a length of 11,000 feet, and to 35 feet depth for 12,000 feet. A narrow shoal still stands between these two sections. While the channel is not yet open to navigation, yet on June 30, 1906, the maximum draft that could be carried in the channel was 28 feet. Within a very short time the maximum draft that can be accommodated will be 29 feet.

The foreign exports and imports for the port of New York (this expression being used to distinguish the foreign trade from the domestic commerce) during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, were approximately 9,366,000 tons, valued at $1,311,-461,581, an increase over the valuation in 1886, before the improvements were initiated, of $471,184,889. The leading articles of import into the United States at New York in that year were sugar, tea, and coffee, wool, cloths, and dress goods, leather and leather goods, tin, rubber, tobacco, and rope fibers, which, with other miscellaneous imports, aggregated about 4,160,000 tons, valued at $695,166,950. The value of such imports for all other ports of the United States for the same period was The leading articles of export were cotton, bread-$503,479,947. stuffs and other provisions, oils, tobacco, metals, and manufactures, which, with miscellaneous items, amounted to about 5,206,000 tons, valued at $616,294,631. The value of such exports from all other ports of the United States for the same period was $998,361,184.

The entire cost of the improvement of New York Harbor to date is less than 1 per cent of the increase in the value of the port's foreign commerce since the improvement was begun and less than one-third of 1 per cent of the present annual value of the port's foreign commerce.

During 1905, 120 different ships drawing 27 feet or more made 573 trips outward and 104 trips inward. Prior to the improvement none of these ships could have crossed the bar and entered or left the harbor except at full high tide or after lightering.

This provision to which objection is made is unusual in a river and harbor bill. Considering all the circumstances, it is unprecedented in the history of river and harbor legislation. Its retention will be a great injustice to many persons who in good faith have projected improvements in the honest belief that the original project would be completed, and a great public enterprise about to be undertaken by the city of New York for the benefit of the country's commerce will be halted at its inception.

It should not be necessary to plead for the exclusion, or at least the modification, of this provision so as at least to prevent the change in the Bay Ridge channel as recommended. The State of New York has been generous with its treasure to develop its commerce and its highways. It has not endeavored to saddle all of its burdens upon the Federal Treasury. Its people have done something. They have voted to spend $110,000,000 to enlarge the Eric Canal so as to have a waterway 12 feet deep from the Lakes to the sea; they have authorized the expenditure of $50,000,000 for improved roads; they have expended more than $20,000,000 to acquire and preserve their own forests and thus conserve the water supply of themselves and of the people of several of the New England States.

The city of New York is ready to expend more than $10,000,000 to furnish berths for the leviathans of the deep that will carry the products of every section of the country to be sold in every clime. A self-reliant people, ready to utilize their own resources to the fullest extent, should not be hampered or thwarted by the hasty adoption of this provision, recommended without knowledge of the conditions and facts, under a mistaken conception of the results to be accomplished, and with no opportunity given to the officials of the municipality most vitally affected to present the facts that would demonstrate conclusively the unwisdom and the gross impropriety of this provision.

There is no need for haste. The project can as easily be modified in the future as at present, if after full investigation, with knowledge of all the facts, it be deemed advisable then to make the modification now proposed.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a very brief explanation will show that nothing has been taken away from the city of New York; that this paragraph will not be prejudicial; and that the striking out of the paragraph would make it worse than it is now.

In 1899 provision was made by appropriation and authorization of $3,000,000 for deepening the channel to 40 feet in depth along in front of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels. Of that amount $2,000,000 has been appropriated, and there remains about $1,000,000—$1,001,000 to speak exactly—yet to be appropriated and expended upon this project. It has been ascertained now that the dredging of this channel will cost $1,250,000 in excess of the estimates upon which the appropriation and authorization of $3,000,000 was made in 1899. It also appears that a 40-foot channel would, under present conditions, be entirely useless here, because there is not yet a channel of 35 feet in depth, indeed only 32 feet in depth, to the deep sea, and there is no probability that there will be a 40-foot channel until at the earliest 1911.

Now, the contractors who were to do this work have failed, and I may say there is nothing mysterious or important about the situation; but there are some reasons why this correspondence should not be exposed. There is a retained percentage on the amounts they were to receive, and they have given bond. Now, if we were to come here and in express terms pass a statute determining the depth, it is a grave question whether we would not release that retained percentage and also relieve the contractors from their bond. It is sensible, under the circumstances, to give to the Secretary of War discretion to provide such less depth as he may think best. Now, what would be the result if this paragraph were stricken out? Work would be done with a view to 40 feet. Embarrassment would result. In some places the Secretary of War might, if he desired, finish 40 feet and leave the rest 20 or 25. So this is a provision for the benefit rather than to the injury or the detriment of the locality in question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not deny that the recommendation of the local engineers —

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have a telegram to this effect, which I will read .

No objection known to stating to the House that depth proposed is 35 feet.

That telegram is from the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have the letter of Colonel Marshall here, and the local engineer says that 35 feet is proposed to Thirty-eighth street, and from Thirty-eighth to Twenty-eighth, 25 feet; and it is between those two points that the city proposes to acquire seven blocks, and in one other there is a municipal ferry

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman has that letter, but he must be laboring under a misapprehension. Of course the final authority is the Secretary of War, and I think I shall have to rely on the latest information about that. This telegram is from the Chief of Engineers, to the effect that the depth proposed is 35 feet. That can probably be obtained with the money already appropriated and authorized. to provide more when it will be four years and probably five six years before we will have the 40-foot channel to the sea.

Personally I should have no objection to a clause being inserted here to the effect that the depth should be not less than 35 feet instead of 40 feet; but I do not think we had better do that. I think we had better leave that to be worked out by the executive department.

[The time of Mr. Burron of Ohio having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended three minutes.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman also add a provision or limitation upon the power of the Secretary to decrease the width of the channel? It is proposed to narrow the channel.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I take it that it is desirable that the width should be retained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The ships can not turn if it be nar-

Mr. TOWNE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he would object to an amendment in this form: Provided, That the depth in said channel shall not be less than the depth maintained in the outer channel of New York Harbor.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have no objection to an amendment for 35 feet, except that it might interfere with legal proceedings of some importance to the Government. My impression is that we had better leave it alone.

Mr. TOWNE. It seems to me we ought to provide a depth in these channels adequate to the accommodation of vessels coming in through the outer channel, but I do not see why we need it any deeper than that, and so I think a proviso requiring the depth to be the same with the outer channel would be an appropriate one.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman that my understanding is, and it has been stated to me by the en-gineers in New York Harbor, that the plan is to secure 35 feet as soon as they can—they hope at the end of this year—and then secure not an additional 1, 2, or 3 feet, but to go on and secure an additional 5 feet as a part of one indivisible improvement. So that I do not see that the gentleman's amendment would do any good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In that case, I would propose to amend by inserting after the paragraph the words:

Provided, That the depth in these channels shall not be less than 35

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The objection to that is that it interferes or is liable to interfere with rights of the Government in litigation. I want to say that the Department has the most careful regard for this harbor. If there is any one harbor that I think we ought to provide for carefully, it is New York Harbor, because in proportion to its great commerce it has received less than the others; but it seems to me illogical and absurd to be digging the interior channel opposite the wharves to 40 feet, while the channel across the outer bar is to be only 35 feet for some years. I presume the course pursued would be exactly that outlined in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Towne], as far as the money would be sufficient to accomplish it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman not think it desirable that by the time the Ambrose channel is completed there should be water inside to accommodate the vessels that can use the channel? Of what use is it to complete that channel if there is no place where ships can be berthed?

BURTON of Ohio. There is sufficient room on the North River.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think there is sufficient length. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I trust that neither of these amendments will be adopted.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, the dredging of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels is a part of the plan adopted by the War Department on the recommendation of its engineers in 1899, which proposed making a 40-foot channel, 2,000 feet wide, by way of East channel (now known as Ambrose channel) from Sandy Hook bar to the Narrows, and from the Narrows 1,200 feet wide through Bay Ridge channel to Twenty-eighth street, and through Red Hook channel to Buttermilk channel. This plan was adopted in the river and harbor bill of 1899, and continuously since 1899 work has been going on for the deepening of Ambrose channel from Sandy Hook bar to the Narrows, and from the Narrows for the deepening of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channel. I know about these channels. Bay Ridge channel runs along the westerly side of my Congressional district. The deepening of these channels was part of a plan to increase the dock room for large steamships within the city of New York. All the dock room on East River and North River in the city of York is now owned and occupied. Many of the great steamship lines have been unable to obtain dock room, and have been obliged to seek larger and more commodious quarters on the New Jersey shore.

The work has been going on since 1899 for the purpose of making a channel eventually 40 feet deep from the sea, with wharves, docks, and improvements along the line of Bay Ridge channel and along the line of Red Hook channel to give the increased room so greatly needed.

This general plan to make New York Harbor a 40-foot harbor has been prosecuted for seven years. Relying upon this action of Congress and the Federal authorities, a very large scheme of improvement has been undertaken by the city of New York. The city authorities have already under way plans for the con-demnation of seven or eight blocks along the westerly side of my district fronting on Bay Ridge channel, where they expect to expend $10,000,000 in putting in great docks and wharves for the accommodation of the largest vessels that may float.

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that until Ambrose channel is 40 feet deep there is no necessity for having Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels 40 feet deep, or of a greater depth than Ambrose channel. But this has been one plan and continuous improvement, and as Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels have been deepened to connect through the Narrows with Ambrose channel, Ambrose channel also has continuously been deepened out to the sea, so that it is to-day considerably deeper than the channels at Bay Ridge and Red Hook. There is no danger, if this improvement is allowed to continue, that these inside channels will be deepened any faster than the one It has not been done up to the present time. Ambrose channel is to-day, as I understand from the engineers, practically 1,000 feet wide and 35 feet deep from Sandy Hook bar to the mouth of Bay Ridge channel. It is proposed in April, as I understand from the engineers, to throw open Ambrose channel for the use of ships of over 29 feet draft during the daytime, and the deepening of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels should be continued, so that there will be dock room for such ships at the nearest point from the ocean.

Early in this session the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors asked me if I had any suggestions to make for the improvement of New York Harbor. I told him I had no suggestions except to continue those improvements already under way. I do not believe that he intended that I should not be aware of this proposed abandonment of so important a project, but I was not aware of it until the river and harbor bill was printed. I went to him at once and told him that I thought it would be a serious detriment not only to my district but to the city of New York to have any interference with the continuation of this general plan for improvement of the harbor, and that I believed that it ought to be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WALDO. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be postponed until we are through with section 1 of the bill. I am inclined to think that we can get together on this, and I should like to call the engineer here.

Mr. WALDO. Before that motion is put, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the extra five minutes, for I have a few words more I want to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, there remains a large portion of the amount authorized for Bay Ridge and Red Hook chan-nels—something like $1,200,000—still unexpended for this improvement. There is now already appropriated to continue this improvement $270,000, which undoubtedly would be enough to continue it until the next river and harbor bill is passed. So that there is no reason why anything whatever should be The procontained in this bill in regard to this improvement. posed change in the present law ought to be stricken out. There is another reason why I believe it ought to be stricken out that has been suggested to me by the chairman of the com-mittee himself, and also mentioned in his last remarks. It seems to me that the provision here which gives the Secretary of War the right to modify the terms of this improvement as fixed by law will practically release the bond of the present contractor, who has defaulted. We do not desire that he shall We want this contract to go on in some form. It has been let, the engineer states, at a lower price than it can be let again. Certainly we ought not to release him in order to pay him or some other contractor more money to carry out this improvement on a modified plan than under the original one. Perhaps a greater difference than the money now on hand would then be necessarily paid to complete these channels of much less depth and width.

It is for the benefit of the great harbor of New York generally that there should be more room as near as possible to the sea for the great ships to dock, and on these channels only can such room be had. New York City itself intends to expend $10,000, 000 for wharves and docks to improve it. There is no other improvement that I know of mentioned in the bill where the local authorities expect to spend so much in addition and in aid of the Improvement proposed by the National Government. Therefore I most respectfully submit to the committee that this provision of the bill ought to go out. We have had no opportunity to discuss it or even to know about it until the publication of this bill. No mention of it was made in the engineer's report. When I had my conversation with the chairman of the committee I had every reason to believe that everything provided for by existing law and under way for the improvement of New York Harbor would be continued. We are not asking for a cent more money at this time. We are only asking that there shall be expended in continuance of this improvement money that was appropriated two years ago and that is not yet expended. For that reason I respectfully submit that this paragraph shall be stricken out in accordance with the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman will recognize that if no more money is appropriated the amount now available will be absolutely insufficient to finish this 40-foot channel.

I am aware of that; but there is to-day unused and actually appropriated, according to the engineer's report, $270,000, which will probably be sufficient to continue the work up to the time that we have another river and harbor bill. But there is already authorized, in addition to that $270,000, as I understand, something over a million dollars, or about a million dollars. It may be that this will not be quite enough to complete these channels; I do not know whether it will or not. If it does not, it is like many other appropriations for river and harbor improvements, where the amount originally appropriated has not quite completed the improvement. All we ask now is not to repeal or modify the existing law, so that we may have an opportunity to examine this new proposal of the local engineer, see what the people want, and ascertain whether there ought to be any change made in a great plan of improvement that was adopted more than seven years ago and has been continuously under way ever since.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohlo renew his request that this paragraph be passed without prejudice?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes; until we have finished the reading of section

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohlo. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have inserted in the Record at this point a telegram from Congressman GARDNER of New Jersey. I would like to know also if any gentleman desires to discuss this item or desires any explanation

The CHAIRMAN. Apparently not. Nobody has asked for recognition.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think it is just that the telegram should be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. T. E. Burton, Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Washington, D. C.;

Washington, D. C.:

My very ardent desire was to be present in the House and urge the merits of the item in your bill for the improvement of Cold Spring Inlet with what grounds I have, but my physicans assure me that if I make the journey I will be unable to address the House after I arrive. Aside from the commercial importance of the proposed harbor, it is matter of public record that I have said I would gladly exchange all political prospects for a harbor of refuge on the New Jersey coast in the interest of humanity. As I have said to your committee, the lack of one has strewn our coast with dead.

J. J. Gardner.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it appears that part of the improvement is in the State of Pennsylvania, and I ask the adoption of that amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 22, after the word "therein," insert the following words: "below the city of Philadelphia."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 24, after the word "parts," insert the following:
"Less $10,000 of which sum to be set aside by him for a survey to be made of the Delaware River, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, with a view of securing a channel of a depth of not less than 35 feet from Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, to deep water in the Delaware Bay, and to submit plans and estimates of the cost of the same to Congress."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment to this section of the bill is, as I explained the other day, the universal demand of the citizens of Philadelphia, of the State of Pennsylvania, and of the States lying back of Pennsylvania and on both sides of it, that the port of Philadelphia, which is one of the four chief ports of export and import on the Atlantic seacoast, should be placed on an equal footing with the other three. Further, for the reason that in conversation with the engineer in charge he told me that the work of this survey could progress step by step with the completion of the present authorized 30-foot channel. He told me that as the first section was completed a survey of the 35foot channel could be made, and so on until all the sections had been completed, so that they would have the survey for the 35-foot channel finished practically at the same time that the 30-foot channel had been completed. The necessity for that, Mr. Chairman, is this, that unless we have that survey completed at the end of the year 1908 we will have to wait for two years, perhaps, to have the feasibility of the channel demonstrated; we will have to wait two years after the survey is granted, and another two years before an appropriation can be made toward making the channel 35 feet, and perhaps it will be nine years, seven at least, before we can make any considerable progress toward having a 35-foot channel from Philadelphia to deep water, making seven years or, perhaps, nine years for Philadelphia to wait to be placed upon a parity with the other ports upon the coast.

The distinguished chairman of this committee has raised the objection that it is the policy of the committee has raised the shall be undertaken until one project has been completed. This amendment which I have offered does not contemplate the building of a 35-foot channel, but simply asks for information as to whether it is feasible; as to whether a 35-foot channel can be dug in the Delaware River. What we want to know is if it is possible; if it is not possible, I am quite sure that the citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., and the other States are quite willing to bow to the judgment of the engineer officers of the United States and say, "Gentlemen, if it is not possible, then we do not ask Congress to give us the improvement."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge that this amendment be agreed to.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard only briefly on this proposition. It has been argued several times already in the House. I regret that the people of Phila-delphia are not satisfied with the provisions of this bill. They have been quite as generously treated as the people of any locality in the United States—

Mr. MORRELL. May I interrupt the gentleman— Mr. BURTON of Ohio. And while complaints possibly might be expected from other localities it seems hardly just that Philadelphia, with its wide ramifications and large responsibilities as a great city, should complain or ask for more. I want to

Mr. MORRELL. May I interrupt the gentleman?
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In a few moments I will answer. I want to state with the utmost clearness that if even a moderately superficial examination were given to this improvement it would be found that what they require is not a survey for a 35-foot channel, but the completion of a 30-foot channel and the greater width which we have provided for in this bill. We have done what we have done for no other city, we have added to the estimates asked $500,000 to make sure that the funds provided will be perfectly sufficient to provide for completion and for widening at the bends. Now, the arguments against the 35-foot channel are perfectly obvious. It would be an absurd business policy, with the warning from the engineer department that it is very doubtful whether 30 feet can be maintained, or to use more exact language, when it can only be determined by trial whether a 30-foot channel can be maintained except at prohibi-tive cost, to go ahead before the 30-foot channel is finished and survey for a 35-foot channel.

The engineer has estimated that the 30-foot channel can be completed by June 30, 1908. I trust that the remarks that I shall make on the subject will spur him on to finish the improvement by that time, but I do not believe it will be finished by June 30, 1908, and I do not believe a trial can be given it such as will determine whether it can be maintained without prohibitive cost until two or three years from now at the earliest. I stated the other day that I asked a commercial body in Philadelphia to name a single port in the world where there is a channel to the sea, similar to that from Philadelphia to the sea, where there is a greater depth than Philadelphia will have when it has this 30-foot channel. Glasgow has 32-feet at high tide, Hamburg 32 feet at high tide, and so it is. We must observe general principles. They say that they must have 35 feet, because New York is going to have 40 feet. The statement was formerly made at Philadelphia that New York already had 40 feet and was going to have 45 feet, but that is manifestly erroneous, although I do not know that it was ever contradicted or retracted.

We have similar questions arising all over the United States. Shall Portland, Oreg., which now has 22 feet, have its channel down a river or rivers deepened to 40 feet because Seattle and Takoma have 40 feet? Shall Mobile, which has 22 feet, and a commerce three or four times as large as Pensacola, have its channel deepened from 22 feet to 30 feet, the depth at Pensa-Shall Savannah, which has a commerce four times as large as Charleston, have its channel deepened so that it may be as deep as that at Charleston? This is a question which we must settle along general lines, and we can not yield to the insistence of one community. I trust this amendment will be voted down, and I especially hope that those who are behind this agitation will intelligently consider the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman that I have never conversed with a man from Philadelphia who would not in five minutes agree that it was better to widen and complete that channel than it was to have this 35-foot survey. Mr. MAHON. May I ask a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. I notice by the paper that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] will not be chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors again. I hope the gentleman will consent to retain that position and that the Speaker will appoint him. I know that he understands his business. I would like to ask the gentleman, if we can maintain a 30-foot channel successfully for years to come, if he, as chairman of the committee, would give us a survey for 35 feet?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would say that, in whatever capacity I may act, if the 30-foot channel is tried and can be maintained without prohibitive cost, I should not by any means ob-But there will be a seasonable time for ject to a survey for 35.

that, which is not now.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that I voice the sentiments of Philadelphia as far as the appropriation is concerned that appears in this bill for the 30-foot channel. I think we are one and all satisfied with the generosity of the committee and with the very wise provision that they have made as far as the easing of the bends and turns of the river is concerned. But the people of Philadelphia-the people which we represent, the State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia-do not consider, because there is not precedent for an engineering proposition in this country or in Europe, that that is any reason why it should not be undertaken in this instance by American engineers. As I said in my remarks the other day, we are undertaking a proposition in Panama which was surrendered by what was supposed to be the best engineers in the world.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman is making his question rather long. I would say in response that we do not desire to have any more Panamas on our hands. One is enough. I should have said one thing, because there may have been an erroneous impression given to the committee. I should have stated that the tide in Philadelphia is from 5 to 6 feet-approximately 6 feet—so that under the pending project at low tide the depth is to be 30 feet and at high tide 36 feet. That is what they will have with the so-called "30-foot channel." Under leave to print, I wish to add a list of ports where the situation is similar to that at Philadelphia. It is a part of a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The following is the list referred to:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 18, 1905.

Siz: Replying to your letter of the 12th instant, requesting that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives be furnished with information in regard to the depth of water at high and low tide in certain European ports mentioned therein, I have the honor to inform you that the Chief Intelligence Officer, to whom your letter was referred, reports as follows:

The depths of water in feet are given in the following table:

House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] be extended for three minutes, as I would like to ask him one more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] may have his time extended. Is there objection? The Chair

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would state further that under authority which is vested in the Department they have the right to dig 2 feet, and even more if necessary, below the project depth to make stable and secure the amount of depth which is sought, and it is expected that there will be a further depth of 2 feet, and money is provided for it in this bill.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to make the statement that it seems extraordinary

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman is not asking a question. I submit that he speak in his own time.

Mr. MORRELL. Very well, then; I will ask the chairman this question: Why is it that there is such a diversity of opinion between the board of engineers and the engineer in charge of the work? The engineer in charge of the work says repeatedly, time after time, before trade organizations and before people assembled to discuss the Delaware, that, in his judgment, 35 feet is absolutely practicable and feasible.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is the question, I take it.

do not think Congress ought to look with favor on volunteered expressions of that kind by an engineer. I am afraid of a great many expressions in favor of harbor improvements. I am especially distrustful of what speakers say at the close of ban-quets. [Laughter.] All are in favor of 40-foot and even 50foot channels at such a time. [Great laughter.] And I would like to know when this engineer made this expression, whether it was at some banquet or on some other occasion. have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. MORRELL. I will say that these observations have not only been made at the close of banquets and feasts, but they have been made at the close of binducts and feasts, but they have been made in calm, sober earnestness in the office of the engineer. [Great laughter.] The gentleman made a reflection, and I have to reply in kind with the gentleman's language.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is perfectly evident that anyone in the atmosphere of your city would be in favor of a 35-foot exhaunced. It resume that if an arror always are to the control of the state of the control o

Mr. MORRELL. Do you mean to put the engineer in charge of an important work on comparison with an opera singer?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, no; not at all. I think the gentleman indulged in just a little buncombe in asking me that Mr. MORRELL. No; not at all. But one inference led to the other.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I mean to say that the atmosphere is such surrounding your city that a man would naturally say he was in favor of a 35-foot or a 40-foot channel, because if he did not say that he would be unpopular.

Mr. MORRELL. Will not the distinguished chairman, in heaven's name, please come to Philadelphia? [Great laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

Page 19, line 24, after the word "parts," insert the following:

"Less than $10,000 of which sum to be set aside by him for a survey to be made of the Delaware River, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, with a view of securing a channel of a depth of not less than 35 feet from Allegheney avenue, Philadelphia, to deep water in the Delaware Bay, and to submit plans and estimates of the cost of the same to Congress immediately upon the completion of the present authorized depth of channel and the practicability of its maintenance has been established."

Mr. RIPETON of Object Mr. Chairman and the practicability of its maintenance has been established."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, here is a very objectionable proposition. It provides for a survey conditionally. If we adopt such a provision in this case, we would have to adopt it in all.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 24, after the word "parts," Insert the following:
"Also, that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and instructed to make a survey for a 35-foot ship channel in the Delaware River from Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, to deep water in Delaware Bay, whenever the mayor or other legally authorized authorities of the city of Philadelphia shall have deposited with the Treasurer of the United States such sum of money as in the judgment of the Secretary of War will be recessary to make said survey."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, when the trade organization appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors one of the objections that was raised by one of the distinguished members to having the survey made was that perhaps after the survey had been completed it would not be found feasible to increase the depth of the river from 30 to 35 feet. Now, this amendment which I have offered makes the city of Philadelphia responsible for the payment of the necessary sum to complete such a survey. It does not in any way, shape, or form obligate the Congress of the United States to deepen that channel. But what we all want, as I said before, is information as to whether it is possible and feasible to increase the depth from 30 to 35 feet, and it is with that in view that I desire to offer this last amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The absurdity of the proposition will appear very plainly when you consider the precedent that it would establish. It would mean that whenever a community offers to put up the money the engineering force of the United States, already overburdened, must step aside from the work in which they are engaged to do the work of that city. It is as if the skilled force of some industrial establishment could be picked off or called away from their employment whenever anyone outside desired to pay them for their services.

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to that I will say that the engineer in charge has said that that information is almost complete in his hands to-day, and that it could be completed with very little effort as this work progressed. I should like very much indeed, Mr. Chairman, to have this amendment adopted.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption? Mr. MORRELL. Yes. Mr. MAHON. The State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia are willing to do their full share toward this 35-foot channel.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving St. Jones River, Delaware: For maintenance, $3,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in order to get in, I move to strike out. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, with my colleagues from Philadelphia, I feel a little to-day as David must have felt at the beginning of his celebrated conflict with Go-Three amendments have been proposed by my colleague Mr. Morrell which have been intended to reach the righteous judgment of this House. Those amendments have been dejudgment of this House. feated, and Goliath is still supreme.

If I may be permitted to refer to after-dinner banquets, I should like to say that only on Saturday evening last I had the opportunity, in the presence of a distinguished audience of men of my city who are not thoroughly in accord with the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, to speak highly of his work. Notwithstanding his references to banquet sentiments, I now repeat what I then said, that I believe he stands as a bulwark in the interests of this country, protecting the Treasury against improper measures and seeing that the commerce is properly moved on inland streams, in competition with railroad companies, and for the betterment of our interstate relations. I hope you will not call for a vote immediately, because I want to ask the distinguished chairman of this committee one or two questions, and I know he will accord this privilege in justice to the people of the city that I have the honor to represent in part.

We have stated our case; we have endeavored to prove that we should be put on an equality with three rival ports that have deeper channels by reason of Government assistance. The chairman deems it inexpedient to grant us a survey, which at this time will cost the Government nothing. In the amendments which my colleague [Mr. Morrell] has presented we have first asked that out of the appropriation thus far made there shall be provision for a survey; not to expend money, but to ascertain the cost of a needed improvement, and thus give us the benefit of two years that we will otherwise lose in waiting for another session of Congress and for another river and harbor bill. We have asked, secondly, the first amendment being defeated, that $10,000 be appropriated for a survey to be made, not now, but at the completion of the work for which provision has been made. We have ourselves, by this second amendment, proposed to post-pone our opportunity until it is demonstrated that this work at 30 feet will be effective. The second amendment being defeated, we have asked that you permit the city of Philadelphia to pay for the desired survey, not in order that the work may be com menced at once, but that we may be given the information which is so much sought after by the commercial bodies of eastern Pennsylvania. That amendment you have also defeated.

We have asked for these things because the sentiment of a great community demands them. It has been a difficult situation.

great community demands them. It has been a difficult situa-tion for us, knowing and respecting the chairman of this committee as my colleagues upon this floor do, and knowing that we have behind us some who are perhaps not so wise in the matter of legislation as those who come to understand the conditions prevailing here, and who must rub elbows with all sections of the country. It is very much to the prejudice of the great city of Philadelphia, and of this great river, which represents the commerce of three and more States, that there should be any feeling growing out of attacks that have been made in newspapers and elsewhere. For one I can pay my respects to the chairman of this committee and say that these attacks are unfortunate; but even so, they should not stand against a deserved improvement which tends for the betterment of commerce in many States of this Union. I again take the opportunity to say that the chairman of this committee is held in great respect by his colleagues of the Pennsylvania delegation, who believe that he is a man of the utmost integrity, that he stands for the best interests of the country, and that he will in the course of time come to believe as we do-that this artery of commerce shall be opened as we hope it will be.

For these reasons I ask the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to permit me to ask him one question.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the colloquy that ensued Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the colloquy that ensued last Wednesday you were good enough to say that when it was demonstrated that the channel of the Delaware could be successfully maintained at a depth of 30 feet you "would be the last man" to stand in the way of a survey to ascertain the cost of deepening the channel to 35 feet.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is substantially what I said. Of course the element of cost would enter into the question, the cost of maintenance. If the cost is not what is known as prohibitive I think I said, although I don't remember precisely what I did say.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Chairman, if this work is completed at 30 feet before the Rivers and Harbors Committee frames another bill will there be any objection to our asking for a 35-foot survey?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Decidedly; because there are a great many localities waiting for the adoption of their projects, and we are not able to go as fast as may seem desirable and must treat all alike. Now, I wish to call attention to one thing in favor of Philadelphia. You have a differential there as against New York and Boston, have you not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe we have. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That militates to your advantage somewhat'

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe, too, that the port charges are less.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The port charges are less than in New York, are they not? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. So you are not at so great a disadvantage after all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Only that the depth of channel keeps away large ships that go into other ports.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that the difference in depth between Philadelphia, Boston, and New York in all the past years has been as great as it is now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There has been that difference in depth; yes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that under the improvement now pending you are to have an increased depth of 7 feet, and that is a greater increase than is contemplated in any other port in the country in the same length of time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Does the gentleman withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Dam No. 3, Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: For the repair and restoration thereof, $200,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that that item in regard to the Allegheny River be passed until the close of the reading of section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the item be passed without prejudice until the completion of section 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Broad Creek River, Delaware: For maintenance, $1,500.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Dalzell, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. Currier, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24991, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JOHN M'KINNON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 1160) entitled "An act to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack."

The resolution was agreed to.

TAX ON BAY RUM.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a minority report to accompany the bill (H. R. 25122) to impose a tax on bay rum brought from Porto Rico into the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi was reported unanimously from the Ways and Means Committee several days ago. Since then it has been ascertained that the tax mentioned in the bill on bay rum from Porto Rico is also duplicated by a tax assessed locally, and I ask unanimous consent to print a copy of the law in the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to file a minority report to the bill indicated, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an extract from the law referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the extract referred to:

THE BRIG ABBY. "

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House Document 632 and ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

Mr. MANN. What is it?

Mr. MILLER. It is a House document. I simply want to have adopted the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the letter of certification from the Court of Claims relating to the following case: Brig Abby, Harding Williams, master, and that the Clerk of the House be directed to return the said letter to the Court of Claims. And that the Clerk of the House be directed further to withdraw from the files of the House and return to the Court of Claims the letters of certification relating to the schooner Lucy and the sloop Hawk, transmitted to the House during the third session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER programmers. The gentlemen from Kanses asks unanimous consent to have adopted the order which has just been reported by the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER: Mr. Speaker, I might say that this is a matter of the French spoliation claims, and the chief justice of the Court of Claims has requested that the House return them to the Court of Claims for further action, in view of the fact that the attorney for the Government notifies the court that he has some additional evidence that he wants to present to the court.

Mr. MANN. That is a case where they found some new documents?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of the order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order will be considered as agreed to.

S. KATE FISHER.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8080) for the relief of S. Kate Fisher, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us know what the amendment is.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

After line 11 insert:

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rathbun, Beachy & Co., of Webster, S. Dak., the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for loss in sale of cattle illegally placed in quarantine by Government inspector at the stock yards in Chicago, Ill."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is an insertion of a new claim, an entirely new claim?

Mr. MILLER. It is the insertion of an entirely new claim, having no reference whatever to the claims passed by the House of Representatives

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To what bill was that amendment made? Mr. MILLER. To the refunding of $400 to S. Kate Fisher, of Minnesota, for money that was paid by her on a land entry in Minnesota, which was paid on account of fraudulent representations made to her by the Government officer at the time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think this bill ought to go to the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Capron, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Ervin F. Mann (H. R. 10165), Fiftyninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 925) for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the district of Puget Sound; which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Ga., and adjacent waters on the Atlantic coast, at a cost not to exceed

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the construction of four steam vessels for the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States." Mr. FRYE. I was about to move that the Senate concur in the House amendments, but I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] desires to offer an amendment to the amendment of the House. Mr. CULBERSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the House amendment. I will state that a bill substantially the amendment I propose was passed by the Senate Janu-

Mr. FRYE. I now move that the amendments of the House as amended be concurred in.

The amendments as amended were concurred in.

REUBEN A. GEORGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. McCumber, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill H. R. 20928, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Reuben A. George."

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, a copy of the rules and regulations governing the Department of Justice and its various branches. Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that the communication lie on the table until the reports from the other Departments of the Government are before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table, if there be no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the report may be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was my intention in presenting the resolution to the Senate calling for reports as to the rules and regulations in force in the various Departments that when they came to the Senate we would treat them together, and I would ask that they be printed as a Senate document. The report from this Department of the Government will be a part of the general consideration of the subject when all the reports are before the Senate. I see no object in having it referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. NELSON. It relates to the rules governing the Department of Justice, and the subject-matter ought to go to that committee. I have no objection to printing them together, if the Senator insists upon it, by and by, when all of the reports come in, but I think the appropriate course now is to have this communication referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and

Mr. HEYBURN. I would be glad to have a suggestion as to the object of sending this communication to the Judiciary Com-The action contemplated in this matter is of a more mittee. general character than that which could possibly come within the jurisdiction or consideration of that committee. I should like to keep the entire matter before the Senate until we have a report from the other Departments. If we were to distribute the reports from the various Departments, we would have them all in different committees and could get no concerted action in reference to them.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. My purpose in introducing the resolution to which this is a response, which of course became the action of the Senate when it was adopted, was that these reports might be considered as a whole and not separately.

Mr. SPOONER. What was the general scope and purpose of the resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. The purpose of the resolution was to enable the Senate to determine how much of the law of the land is statute law and how much of it are rules and regulations. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's idea is that the reports from

Mr. HEYBURN. The senator's idea is that the reports all the Departments shall go to one committee?

Mr. HEYBURN. That they shall go to one committee.

Mr. SPOONER. To what committee?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not given that sufficient cons I have not given that sufficient consideration to have an ultimate conclusion on the subject. I thought it time enough when they were all in to determine that matter.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's proposition is that this communication shall lie upon the table until they are all in?
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and that then all shall go to the committee appropriate to the consideration of the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota insist upon his motion to refer the communication to the Committee on the Judiciary

Mr. NELSON. I think that is where it ought to go.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Idaho desires to have the communication lie on the table for the time being, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn, and the communication will lie on the table.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, on the 18th of December I introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, intended to amend the existing law with respect to the manufacturing and denaturing of alcohol. It is my purpose this morning to introduce another bill on the subject, but before do ing so I desire to address the Senate for a few moments.

The bill to which I refer contains the following provision:

The bill to which I refer contains the following provision:

That for the convenience of persons engaged in the distillation of alcohol in quantities that would not justify the additional expense of a distillery warehouse or a bonded warehouse for each establishment, and who employ approved apparatus with suitable alcohol tanks attached designed to be locked and sealed by an authorized Government officer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, under rules prescribed by him, arrange for the proper denaturing of any alcohol of the required proof so distilled, such distillation and denaturing to be under all the terms and conditions of this act applicable to such cases.

A few wooks later Mr. President there were several hills in

A few weeks later, Mr. President, there were several bills introduced in the House of Representatives on this subject. Those bills were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and I find that that committee a few days ago agreed to and reported a bill to the House covering the subject. On an examination of the bill I find that section 4 conforms very closely to the bill which I introduced on the 18th of December, and it is my purpose this morning to introduce in the Senate the bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means for reference to the Committee on Finance of the Senate. I do so for the purpose of giving to Senators an opportunity to examine the bill, as it is an important measure and should be enacted into law before we adjourn. I assume, of course, that the House will pass the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and that in due time it will come to the Committee on Finance of the Senate, where, if we have the opportunity, and I hope we shall have the opportunity, it will be given due consideration.

The purpose contained in section 4 of this bill is the same as that contained in the bill which I introduced on the 18th of December, to wit, to give authority to small distillers to manufacture denatured alcohol. This can not be done under the existing law.

I find, on an examination of some statistics recently published, that in the year 1905 in Germany there were manufactured 76,000,000 gallons, of alcohol for denaturing purposes, and of this amount only 150,000 gallons were manufactured by what are known as industrial distillers. In other words, almost all of the 76,000,000 gallons were manufactured by farmers, chiefly for their own use for purposes of light, heat, and power. There are nearly 6,000 small stills now in operation in Germany manufacturing denatured alcohol; and the purpose of section 4 of the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, as well as of the bill which I introduced here, is to admit of the same thing being done in the United States.

I now introduce the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 8330) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $57,000 for the construction and erection of a cavalry drill hall and $16,500 for a band barracks at Fort Meade military post, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURKETT submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to establish from time to time, by proclamation, grazing districts upon the unreserved, unappropriated public lands, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the regulation and control by the Secretary of Agriculture of the grazing upon the unappropriated unreserved lands of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' ROLL OF THE SENATE.

Mr. DICK submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is hereby directed to place on a special roll the names of all messengers now on his list of employees who are employed about the doors, committee rooms, or elevators of the Senate whose Army record, wounds, and disabilities, and service in the Senate justly entitle them to favorable consideration, to be known and designated as "The soldiers' roll of the Senate," and to continue such persons in such positions and employment until cause for their removal shall have been reported to and approved by the Senate and their removal directed.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CLAY. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following:

A statement of the amount of money expended by the United States for equipment, supplies, and military operations in the Philippine Islands each year from July 1, 1902, to the present time. Said statement to include the amount of money paid by the United States for and on account of railway transportation for troops to and from the Philippine Islands since July 1, 1902, and the several railway companies to which it was paid and the sums paid each of them. Said statement to include a full and complete account of all our expenditures in the Philippine Islands since July 1, 1902, up to the present time.

The Secretary is also directed to inform the Senate the number of United States soldiers now stationed in the Philippine Islands, and how long, in his judgment, it will be necessary for the United States to maintain an army in the Philippine Islands, and what number of soldiers will be required to maintain law and order in said islands, and what will probably be our annual expenditures in maintaining such army in said islands.

He is also directed to inform the Senate what progress, if any, has been made by the people of the Philippine Islands in qualifying themselves for self-government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the resolution had better go over

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I gave notice two or three days ago that this morning I would make some remarks on the right of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] to retain his seat in this But the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] is very anxious to get through with the Indian appropriation bill, and I do not wish to interfere with that or any other appropriation bill. I will simply state that when the opportunity offers and no appropriation bill is pending I will then ask to be heard, if the Senate will hear me.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 22580, making appropriations for the Indian

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipu-lations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to call attention to the amendment on page 47, beginning with line 19 and continuing to and including line 2 on page 48. I ask that the Senate amendment be re-jected. I have discovered, in conference with the Commissioners of the Five Civilized Tribes, that it is not necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 47 of the bill, beginning with line 19 and extending down to and including line 2 on page 48, assigning to the several members of the Creeks, Cherokees, Chickasaws, and Choctaws, respectively, who have not heretofore accepted allotments, 160 acres of lands, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 47—— Mr. LONG. Before leaving page 47, the amendment just above the one rejected was passed over on a point of order made by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale]. I ask the Senator whether he insists on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. No; it does not come under the scope of the discussion yesterday. I am satisfied that it is a proper and fitting measure, and I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn.

The amendment will be stated by the Secretary

The Secretary. On page 47, beginning with line 4 and ending at line 18, the amendment relative to the issuance of bonds by McAlester, Ind. T.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. To come in on page 47, after line 18, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 47, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, ending in line 18, it is proposed to insert:

That all restrictions as to the sale and encumbrance of the south-east quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, township 11, range 9 east, in the Indian Territory, the same being the homestead heretofore allotted to Nocus Fixico, Creek allottee No. 603, are hereby removed.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to state, for the benefit of the Senate, that last year we passed this provision, but the name was spelled incorrectly, it being spelled "Nucus" instead of "Nocus," and consequently it was thereby inoperative. The object of this amendment is merely to correct that name, so that the benefits intended to be conferred by the act may be received by Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill what is the purpose of this legislation? It removes, as I understand, the restrictions from the alienation of an Indian homestead. Why should that be done?

This matter is not fresh in my mind; but, as I remember it, last spring we passed a bill with that provision in it, only the name was misspelled. I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] is acquainted with this matter, and perhaps he can explain it.

Mr. CURTIS. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that was merely informed that there had been a mistake in the spelling of the name, which, of course, we ought to correct. I know nothing about the facts in the case.

Mr. SPOONER. We ought to correct the mistake, if the provision ever ought to have been adopted; but I have been told several times here, while opposing the removal of restrictions in a general way upon the power of the Indian to alienate his land, that the homestead was guarded, and that although he might be despoiled by the white man of all the land, the homestead would be saved to the family. This is a proposition, as I heard it read, to remove the restrictions as to a homestead.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, my recollection of it, though I am not clear about it, is a town site a village—sprung up there, and this act was passed to enable this allottee to divide up his allotment and sell it in lots.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator to let the amendment be passed over until it can be looked into.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to suggest a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not want to make a point of order if the provision ought to be adopted; but I think the Senate ought to know accurately, before removing restrictions upon the power to alienate the homestead of an Indian, the reasons for it. If it is necessary to make the point of order, I will make it; but if the matter can come up a little later, I will be satisfied.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not care.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not care.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will be passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 37, after line 12, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and also a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs accompanying it, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

. The Secretary. On page 37, after the amendment already agreed to, ending on line 12, it is proposed to insert the fol-

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such contract as in his judgment seems advisable for the care of orphan Indian children at the Whittaker Home, Pryor Creek, Ind. T.; and for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, February 4, 1907.

To the Secretary of the Interior.

To the Sceretary of the Interior.

Sin: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of to-day, of a bill, H. R. 25183, being a bill to provide for the care of orphan Indian children at the Whittaker Home, Pryor Creek, Ind. T., and reading as follows:

"That the Sceretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such contract as in his judgment seems advisable for the care of orphan Indian children at the Whittaker Home, Pryor Creek, Ind. T., and for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

As directed, I submit the following report:

The Secretary of the Interior has approved a contract for the care, maintenance, etc., of sixty orphan Indian children in this school during the current fiscal year, payable out of the appropriation made therefor.

This contract was recommended by the United States Indian in-therefor.

This contract was recommended by the United States Indian inspector in Indian Territory and the superintendent of schools in Indian Territory, and in view of these recommendations I respectfully suggest that a measure similar to the one under consideration will be for the best interests of these unfortunate children.

The two papers are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

F. E. Leupp, Commissioner

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPPI.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that, I think, completes the Department amendments, but while I have the floor I desire to offer an additional amendment on my own initiative

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 68, after line 11, it is proposed to

That all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation for allotments within the White Earth Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, now or hereafter held by adult mixed-blood Indians, are hereby removed, and the trust deeds heretofore or hereafter executed by the Department for such allotments are hereby declared to pass the title in fee simple; or such mixed bloods, upon application, shall be entitled to receive a patent in fee simple for such allotments; and as to full bloods, said restrictions shall be removed when the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that said adult full-blood Indians are competent to handle their own affairs. And in such case the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to such Indian allottee a patent in fee simple upon application.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, last winter we passed a law which provided that "all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation for allotments within the White Earth Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, now or hereafter held by adult mixed-blood Indians, are hereby removed."

The question has arisen under that act, where an Indian had received an allotment, but had died before the passage of that act, whether it would cover such a case. The Department has proceeded upon the theory that it would, but the difficulty is that it simply throws a question upon the Indian's title and enables him to deal with less advantage than if the question was cleared up. It is for the purpose of clearing it up that I have offered this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before the amendment is acted upon by the Senate, I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota what has been the effect of that act so far as the removal of restrictions is concerned in relation to Indians upon the reserva-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, its success exceeded my most sanguine expectations. I intend, when we reach the question of the removal of restrictions—and it undoubtedly will come up to-day—to somewhat analyze that case with reference to its bearing upon the question of the removal of restrictions.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to inquire how many Indians there are who would be affected by that pro-

Mr. CLAPP. There are probably about from ten to eleven hundred, I think, that would be affected by it.

Mr. LONG. It is impossible to hear the colloquy which has been going on between the Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. I was endeavoring vainly, not so far as the Senator was concerned, but the Senate, to learn the number of Indians on the reservation who would be affected by this legislation. The Senator from Minnesota has informed me that he thinks about 1,100. Now, I should like to inquire how many of the 1,100 are full bloods?

Mr. CLAPP. I am not speaking of full bloods in the 1,100. I think there are about 1,700, all told, on the reservation, and there are somewhere from 900 to 1,100 perhaps of mixed bloods who are affected by this removal of restrictions. When I first replied to the Senator from Wisconsin I misunderstood his inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have been asked to offer the amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Millard], to come in on page 86, after line 20.

The Secretary. On page 86, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Omaha National Bank, of Omaha, Nebr., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $826.24, for and on account of an United States Indian voucher issued to D. J. McCann and cashed by said Omaha National Bank and refused by the United States Government as nonnegotiable and transferred without authority.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is clearly a private claim and has no place on this bill; but as the amount is so small, I will not make the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I supposed the Senator from Nebraska, in whose behalf I offered the amendment, was present.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that claim has been here before.
Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to pages 103 and 104 of the pending bill, where it appears that certain words proposed to be stricken out by the Committee on Indian Affairs were stricken out by the action of the Senate on yesterday, as appears from the Congressional RECORD of February 5,

Mr. CLAPP. I did not so understand.
Mr. ALLISON. It so appears in the Congressional Record, on page 2315, from which I read the following:

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi (treaty)," on page 103, after line 24, to strike out: "For interest on $200,000, at 5 per cent, per second article of treaty of October 21, 1837, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

So that was stricken out. Then there follows:

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 2, to strike out:
"For interest on $800,000, at 5 per cent, per second article of treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000: Provided, That the sum of $1,500 of this amount shall be used for the pay of a physician and for purchase of

The amendment was agreed to.

So it appears that that was also stricken out. Then follows:

So it appears that that was also stricken out. Then follows: The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 8, to insert: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury, to the credit of the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi tribe of Indians, the unappropriated sums of $200,000 due under the second article of the treaty of October 21, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 540), and $800,000 under second article of treaty of October 11, 1842 (7 Stat. L., p. 596); and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the tribe entitled thereto the said sum, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201)."

The amendment was agreed to.

This amendment was reported by the committee. Now, Mr. President, as it appears from the Record, the House provision was stricken out and the Senate committee provision was agreed to. As I understand, it is just the reverse of that which was done.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the Senator will observe, by looking further at the RECORD, that just at the close of the session yesterday I made a motion, which I think effectuated the object, to first reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate committee were adopted, and then striking them out; but, to clear the RECORD, I now move that the Senate reconsider its vote on the amendments beginning on line 25, on pages 103, and extending to and including line 8, page 104.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendments referred to by him were adopted. Without objection, the respective votes are reconsidered.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, I move, Mr. President, that the amendments referred to may be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

The amendments were rejected.

ALLISON. The effect of that is to restore the text of the bill as it came from the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To restore the text of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives,

Mr. CLAPP. Now, I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment, beginning on line 9, page 104, and extending to and including line 24, on the same page, was adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment reported by the committee was disagreed to by the Senate, according to the record of the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Congressional Record shows it was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The record of the Secretary shows It was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I want it to appear in the Record to-day that that amendment was disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. As this is a very important matter, I want to be certain, so far as I can be, that the record is as it ought to be.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has taken the part of the Record that covered the action on the committee amendments earlier in the day; but on page 2327 of the RECORD, I think, he will find that the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CLAPP. Is not that correct, Mr. President? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The RECORD is correct. Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, as I have the floor, in behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. May I be permitted to inquire what became of the amendment that was offered for the payment of $826.24 to the Omaha National Bank, of Omaha, Nebr.?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands no point of order was made against the amendment; and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to be heard against agreeing to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I make the point of order upon the amendment, Mr. President, that it is a private claim. I do that because after looking into the report I am perfectly satisfied that the Government ought not to pay the claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of

Mr. CLAPP. Very well. Now, on behalf of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to inquire if we have finished all the amendments that were passed over?

Mr. CLAPP. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 83, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert H. Raynolds, or his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,290.49, for and on account of two United States Indian vouchers in the amount of $1,382.51 and $907.98, issued on the 26th day of March, 1877, to Dwight J. McCann, an Indian freight contractor, and cashed by the said Albert H. Raynolds, and allowed for payment by the United States Government on the 2d day of May, 1877, and afterwards refused.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. SPOONER. What are the facts about that, Mr. President? It looks as if it might be a twin brother of the amendment upon which the Senate has just acted.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] is here and can explain the amendment.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Certainly. Mr. DICK.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] especially, to the status of the amendments to which I called the attention of the Senate a few minutes ago. On yesterday evening, as appears from the Record, on motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] the amendment on page 104, between lines

9 and 24, was rejected; and it so appears, as I understand, in the Record of yesterday, but that does not quite complete the situation. As a part of that amendment, or as another amendment, certain lines were proposed to be stricken out, and that amendment was agreed to, but, as appears from the Record, the Senator from Minnesota this morning has very properly asked for a reconsideration of the vote on the amendments beginning on line 25, page 103, and ending on line 8, page 104. He has moved to reconsider the vote whereby those words were stricken out; and then, after that reconsideration, the amendments were rejected. So that it now appears by the RECORD, as made to-day, that the original text remains in the bill as it came from the House, which is very important, because it is a provision that appropriates for the annuities. I merely wanted to call attention to the matter in order that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. That is, the provision as it came from the House was restored?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; restored.

Mr. HALE. And the part proposed to be inserted by the committee is stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. The first amendment of the committee is rejected.

Mr. HALE. The amendment of the committee to strike out from line 25, on page 103, to the end of line 8, on page 104 of the bill as it came from the House, was disagreed to, and so those lines are restored; they are in the text of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; they are in the text; exactly.

Mr. HALE. They were proposed to be stricken out by the committee, but they are now left; and the next amendment, to insert from line 9 to line 24, on page 104, was rejected. words have been stricken from the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment on line 25, page 104, and inquires whether the totals are correct, in view of the amendments which have been made?

Mr. CLAPP. No; the committee amendment there should be rejected and the words "fifty-one thousand dollars" should be restored.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the committee striking out "fifty-one thousand," on line 25, page 104, and inserting "one million and one thousand" will be reconsidered; and without objection, the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment should be disagreed to. Therefore the original text will stand as the bill came from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President— Mr. CLAPP. Has the Senate disposed of the amendment which I submitted on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK 1?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for some explanation of the amendment, which I understood was about to be made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, a complete explanation of the reasons for the amendment will be found on page 42 of the Mr. DICK. report made by the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last session, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection, as requested by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows

The Secretary read as follows:

ALBERT H. RAYNOLDS.

The facts pertinent to this claim are, in all important parts, matters of public record, which are supplemented in some unimportant details by affidavits on file with the claim, and are as follows:

Albert H. Raynolds was engaged in the banking business in Sidney, Nebr., in the year 1877. On the 26th day of March, in that year, in the regular course of business, in good faith and for the full face value, he cashed and pald two United States Indian vouchers in the sums, respectively, of $907.98 and $1,382.51, making a total of $2,290.49, issued to Dwight J. McCann, a Government contractor, for and on account of transporting Government supplies from Omaha and Sidney and Schuyler, in the State of Nebraska, to the Red Cloud Indian Agency, in said State, as shown by the receipts vouching for the delivery of the goods and the correctness of the amounts stated, signed by Lieut. A. C. Johnson, United States Army, acting Indian agent at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Indian agencies, in said State of Nebraska.

Thereupon claimant forwarded said vouchers for collection through Nebraska.

Thereupon claimant forwarded said vouchers for collection through the Citizens' National Bank, of Washington, in the District of Columbia. Said vouchers were presented to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for approval and allowance for payment, and the same were, on the 21st day of May, 1877, duly allowed for payment by said Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and were by him referred to the Second Auditor of the Treasury for settlement and charged to the appropriation for the transportation of Indian supplies for the fiscal year 1877. The two vouchers thus approved and allowed for payment were received by the Auditor of the Interior Department in the due course of official business on the 23d day of October, 1879, but they remained in his office for over two years without being reached for settlement and payment. On the 9th day of December, 1881, the vouchers were recalled by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and were, on the 13th day of December, 1881, returned to 1881, the vouchers were recalled by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and were, on the 13th day of December, 1881, returned to on the ground that the said Dwight J. McCann was a defaulting contractor and heavily in debt to the United States, and the said vouchers were applied on the account of said Dwight J. McCann with the United States, to the total loss of the claimant.

To be up to the time of his death, some seventeen years ago, owing the United States large sums of money, and the claimant was never able to recover from him the sums be advanced on said vouchers able to recover from him the sums be advanced on said vouchers the claimant was then engaged in business. He cashed the vouchers in the usual course of his banking business. He cashed the vouchers in the usual course of his banking business, as he had done many times before and as was a common custom with bankers at that time in that could obtain the funds necessary to pay the wages of their teamsters and other expenses. That it was absolutely necessary for some person to make these advances in order that contractors could carry on their business with the United States is proved by the fact that these could obtain the funds necessary to pay the wages of their teamsters and other expenses. That it was absolutely necessary for some person to make these advances in order that contractors could carry on their business with the United States is proved by the fact that these could obtain the funds necessary to pay the wages of their teamsters and other expenses. That it was absolutely necessary for some person to make these advances in order that contractors could carry on their business with the United States is provided to the pro

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that these claims ought not to be in this bill. The Senate ought not to adopt them as amendments to the bill.

McCann was the contractor with the Government on whose account these vouchers were issued. The same thing was true as to the claim which went out on a point of order. read from a letter of the former Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Jones, a very able and very honest official, one statement. It will take but a moment:

It will take but a moment:

Under date of September 29, 1876, a contract was awarded to D. J. McCann for Indian supplies for certain agencies of the Indian Service, and on January 17, 1877, he was awarded a contract for 500,000 pounds of flour for Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies. He used his transportation contract as a means of robbing the Indian Service of large amounts of beans, corn, and other supplies, diverting them from where they were consigned to other points and there disposing of them for his own personal gain. For such acts he was indicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. On his flour contract he defaulted, having furnished about 100,000 pounds thereof, and the Government had to buy the balance in the open market at greatly advanced rates, paying for most of it at $5.25 and $4.25 per hundredweight against McCann's prices of $3.075 for 200,000 pounds and $2.55 for 300,000 pounds, and, in addition thereto, the regular freight rates by wagon on the same.

The Government lost a very large sum of money through the default of McCann and his robberies—you may call them peculations—under the contract. These vouchers were undoubtedly issued and approved by the Indian agent, but they were disapproved by the accounting officers of the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator state why they were disapproved:

Mr. SPOONER. They were disapproved because the man had defaulted on his contract and owed large sums of money to the Government

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand the statement and the record that was read the vouchers remained there some four years before this default.

Mr. SPOONER. Estoppel does not run against the king.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but I understood they were presented, and I want to have the Senator, if he can, state the reason why they were held up for a period of four years.

Mr. SPOONER. That I do not know. Papers are often held in the Departments. But the pivotal fact is that the contractor on whose account the vouchers were issued was largly indebted to the Government for frauds perpetrated upon the Government in the execution of his contract.

Mr. McCUMBER. Was he indebted at the time these vouchers were issued, or were they valid vouchers, and was there any offset to them at the time they reached the Department? That seems to me to be an important feature.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not undertake to give the dates. I do

It is not stated here. not know.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator would agree, I think, that if this sum was due at that time and the vouchers were regular at the time they were presented, and it had been the custom of the Department to pay vouchers as they were presented, and there were no offsets at that time, those two or three vouchers ought not to have been mislaid or held until some default happened.

Mr. SPOONER. As to one of the vouchers, the voucher in the other case, it is stated here that the ground for refusing to pay it was that at the time McCann was in default under his contract.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course that would be an offset Mr. SPOONER. It is very probable that the same thing was true as to this.

But this is a private claim, and it ought to be considered as a private claim and not as a part of an appropriation bill, so that every fact in regard to it can be explored and brought to the attention of the Senate.

It has been decided by the Court of Claims, and it is well set forth in that report, that these vouchers were not negotiable paper, and even if the assignment of them was not in contravention of section 3477, which I am inclined to think it was not, nevertheless they could only be assigned subject to all the rights of the Government against the contractor. So, Mr. President, I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to call attention to an amendment that was under consideration, to be found at the bottom of page 36. I should like the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to the matter. I wish to call attention to the record on this point. The amendment as proposed and reported in the bill was thought to be faulty.

Mr. LODGE. To which amendment does the Senator refer?

My attention was diverted for the moment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The amendment at the bottom of page 36.

Mr. HALE. Beginning in line 20, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not the bill before me. Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator's amendment was adopted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was; but the Senator from Massachusetts thereupon gave notice that he would renew the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. That was before I had examined the amendment. I subsequently examined it at the desk and found that it was entirely satisfactory, and I have no intention of making the point of order,

Mr. HALE. Let us now take up the first amendment which was passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that we now proceed to the consideration of the amendments which were passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 26 of the bill, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following:

That legal and equitable jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, in a certain cause entitled "The White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompalgre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated bands of Ute Indians of Colorado, against The United States," being Congressional, No. 11248, pending in sald court by reference under Senate resolution dated December 11, 1903; and in rendering said judgment the court shall embrace therein the value of all lands whereof disposition has been made for cash, and also for lands which have been withdrawn from the public domain and set apart as public reservations or for forest or timber-land reserves or for other public uses under existing laws or proclamations of the President of the United States, and for all sums due to the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, the complainants in said cause of action, under the terms of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same;" said action shall proceed under its present title and pleadings filed, with right of amendment, and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing in said cause or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear, and the Attorney-General shall continue to appear and represent the United States, and in rendering final judgment the court shall fix the compensation of the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs, not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount of said judgment, which compensation shall be awarded for said attorneys who have rendered actual services in conducting the said cause, upon a quantum meruit, in the name of the attorney of record in said cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and shall be paid to him from the proceeds of said judgment by the Secretary of t

Mr. CLAPP. At the request of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] I submit an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will amendment to the amendment submitted on behalf of the senior Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary. On page 27, line 25, after the word "Treasury," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be reimbursed to the United States from the funds of the Confederate bands of Ute Indians.

Mr. LODGE. I withheld the point of order on the amendment when it was reached in the reading of the bill at the request of the chairman of the committee. I make the point of order without going into it. The amendment comes clearly under the rulings made by the Chair.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to be heard before the point of order is pressed to a decision.

The matter involved in the amendment is one in which my colleague [Mr. Teller], who is now sick, is very much interested. It relates to Indians who were formerly on reservations in Colorado, and has for its object the effectuation of legislation already on the statute books. I hope that the Senator from Massachusetts will not press the point of order for the reasons that I shall state to him.

I discover, Mr. President, that points of order against items in appropriation bills that are subject to points of order are made and pressed as each item or some particular item may strike the judgment of a Senator. No Senator has yet under-taken to enforce the rule as against all items in appropriation bills that are in the nature of general legislation. If that were done, no one could take exception to the exclusion from an appropriation bill upon points of order of everything improperly there. But it does seem to me that such points should only be pressed under the practice that has arisen in this Chamber. when a Senator is convinced that the object of an amendment or a provision in an appropriation bill is not wise or just, and is liable to inflict some wrong or injury upon the Government.

A very good illustration of what I have suggested is in the present bill. Many items that are subject to points of order have been passed by the Senate. No objections have been urged, or if they have been urged they have been withdrawn as a Senator has become convinced that it would be wise or just to allow the provision to remain.

Mr. President, it is upon that proposition that I desire to address the Senate, hoping that the Senator from Massachusetts will give attention to what I may say upon the subject. I must necessarily do so in an imperfect way, because it is a matter with which my colleague is entirely familiar and one in which I have taken no personal interest and would not have taken any if it had not been for his illness and the special request made of me by him.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Mr. LODGE. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if it would be equally agreeable to him to allow this amendment to go over until a somewhat later hour in the afternoon, as I shall have to leave the Senate Chamber in a moment to attend committee meeting.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. If the Senator will indi-

Mr. LODGE. If it is equally convenient to the Senator, I will come back later in the afternoon.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator will indicate at what time, it will be entirely agreeable to me to postpone it, because I want to make my remarks at a time convenient to him.

Mr. LODGE. At 3 o'clock I will be back.

Mr. PATTERSON.

Very well. ENT. The Secretary will report the next The VICE-PRESIDENT. amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to strike out, on page 34, after line 16, the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the previsions of the act approved April 21, 1994, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, $25,000: Provided, That so much as may be necessary may be used in the employment of clerical force in the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. Why is that to be stricken out? That, as I understand it, is to carry out the provisions of the law authorizing an investigation by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of ascertaining in what cases and from what Indians the restrictions as to alienation should be removed. that it?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is evident that the committee intended

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is evident that the committee intended to do away with this clause and to remove all these restrictions. Mr. SPOONER. Absolutely?
Mr. McCUMBER. Absolutely, in the next paragraph. It is on that provision I desire to be heard.
Mr. SPOONER. They go together?
Mr. McCUMBER. They go together.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The remainder of the amendment will be stated.

will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the language proposed to be stricken out it is proposed to insert the following:

On and after July 1, 1907, all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of the lands, except homesteads, of all allottees of Indian blood in the Indian Territory, and all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of all the lands of allottees not of Indian blood are hereby removed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this brings up again the same question that was discussed during the last session, as to the authority of Congress to extend the restrictions and as to whether or not it is provident legislation. I do not think it will be necessary to go over the ground then gone over as to the question of our legal right in the premises. It has been stated here—and I will admit that the Heff case seems to support that statement—that Congress has no power to impose further restrictions upon the alienation of lands granted to Indians. I do not think, though, that whatever has been stated in the Heff case or in the Rickert case can be said to be a precedent in a case involving the right or the authority of Congress to still deal with lands, with property, that has not passed out of the Government of the United States and is still in the hands of certain members of Indian tribes.

Mr. President, one of two things is certainly true. Either we have the power to continue these restrictions, to extend them, or to dispose of them entirely or we have no power to deal with 90 per cent of all of the matters that are contained in this bill. Those who claim that Congress has no further authority in the premises over land belonging to the Indians in the matter of continuing restrictions beyond the period already provided by law base their claim upon the assumption that the Indian is a full-fledged citizen of the United States and that the relation of guardian and ward can no longer exist. They cite in support of this proposition the Heff case, where it was held practically that Congress or the Government can at any time it sees fit release the Indian from this condition of tutelage in which he has been for the last hundred years. It was practically assumed in that case, if I understand it aright, that by granting the right of citizenship, by giving the Indian his land, the Government practically discontinued the relations of guardian and

Mr. President, it was not necessary so to decide in the Heff case, because it could also be sustained upon the proposition that in that particular case the rights which were granted were of a political and civil nature and did not relate to property rights in any way whatever. The court held in that case that having given them all the political rights—the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens of the several States—we could not then consider them as a particular class not having the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States. That was the real basis of the decision, and it seems to me that it was as far as it was necessary to go in deciding that particu-

Otherwise we could no more continue the tribal relations and make them a distinct element in the citizenship of any State than we could have taken this man Heff and declared that he occupied a different civil and political position from other citizens of that particular State.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri? Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Dakota stated that the tribal relations of the Five Civilized Tribes still existed. Whatever may be said of the other tribes, I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the tribal government and conditions of the Seminoles have been abolished?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think not. I think we continued the tribal relations of all of those tribes. I do not understand that any one of the tribal relations has been dissolved. If I am in error, those who are better acquainted with the situation can correct me.

Mr. CURTIS. The tribal relations of all the Five Tribes have been continued until the affairs of the tribe are finally settled by the Dawes Commissioner-

Mr. STONE. By what act? Mr. CURTIS. By the act of Congress of 1906 and by joint resolution which passed the House and the Senate a year ago.

Mr. STONE. But under the operation of a previous act of Congress the time for the absolute dissolution of the Seminole tribal relations was fixed for March 4, 1906.

Mr. CURTIS. That was true as to each of the Five Tribes. but the joint resolution to which I refer was passed before the 4th of March, 1906.

Mr. SPOONER. Was not that done to prevent the attaching of that land grant?

Mr. CURTIS. Of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas grant?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever may have been the purpose, we continued the tribal relations.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; in a technical sense, for the purpose of winding up the business and to prevent the attaching of that land grant. But does the Senator mean to say that the tribal relations continue in the sense that that phrase has been used heretofore? Mr. McCUMBER. It will continue until it has been changed by Congress, because we have continued all the powers, with the exception of certain ones which we took away from them in Mr. SPOONER. That goes to the ownership and management which existed twenty years ago continues?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it does.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think those Indians are wards of the Government?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think they are as much wards of the Government to-day as they ever were.

Mr. CURTIS. And notwithstanding the act of 1901, making them all citizens of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. That is just the position I am arguing now, that the mere act of giving them political and civil rights, and the privileges and the immunities that go with those political rights, does not of itself separate them from the control of the Government over their property rights.

Mr. SPOONER. Heretofore they were restricted in their power of contract. Will they still continue to be?
Mr. McCUMBER. They are restricted.

Mr. CURTIS. They are restricted now as to real estate.
Mr. SPOONER. I know. That is a restriction of alienation.

Mr. CURTIS. Contracts of all kinds are by the agreement declared to be void if made prior to expiration of the limitations fixed by the act.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; for a certain period. not saying that I am planting myself absolutely upon this ground as being unassailable. I concede that the Heff case and the Rickert case may possibly be considered as being in opposition to the view I am taking, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the court seems to have distinguished in cases of this kind, and it does so several times.

Mr. LONG. If the Heff case and the Rickert case are some what against the position the Senator is now contending for, I should like to know what cases sustain the view he now takes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here is the proposition on which the Heff case was decided. I want to show that the courts have made a distinction between the property rights and those which were purely of a civil or political nature, and the parallel I wish to draw is that in these cases nothing but the political rights have been granted, and that the Government has not, according to its own decision, withdrawn all control over the Indians.

If it be true that we have no further control over the Indians, that when they have been granted the right of citizenship and given their allotments they become citizens in every respect, then every line of this bill for expending millions upon millions of dollars for educational purposes must be absolutely void. The Government of the United States has no right to select the blueeyed people of my State and give them an education and keep out the black-eyed. It has no right to take those who have red skin and educate them and to refuse to educate those who have white skin. If this line is to be drawn at all, there is scarcely a sentence in this whole bill that would not be subject to the objection that we were dealing with matters over which we had no control and for which we ought not to appropriate the moneys of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. How does the Senator from North Dakota construe the word "all" in the statute which declares these Indians to be citizens where it says they are entitled to "all the rights, privileges, and immunities of other citizens of the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have construed it to relate simply to civil rights and to political rights. I wish to call attention right here to the decision in the Heff case, which acknowledges that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. LONG. Does the Senator claim that rights of property are not included in the rights of citizens the same as the right come within the inhibition. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have been out of the Chamber and I have not heard all the Senator has said, but I should like to ask him if he has defined in any way what additional rights were conferred by the act making them citizens that they did not already have, if any?

Mr. McCUMBER. The right to hold any political office and the right to vote at elections will be two of them. I could give other rights.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In calling attention to that particular point the Senator will recall, with regard to the Five Civilized Tribes, that none of the rights to hold political office at that time were conferred that they did not already have. There was no right of voting that could be conferred at that time that they did not have. The only right to vote which they then had was the right to vote within their tribes for tribal officers. could confer no right to vote for county officials, because there were no county officials. It could confer no right to vote for members of the Territorial legislature, because there was no Territorial legislature.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was speaking of the law as applied to all, not only in the Indian Territory, but to those outside the Indian Territory, and my answer was directed, of course, to those cases where they have since exercised the right.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. When the Senator reaches the point as to the Indian Territory I should like his view as to whether any rights of any nature were conferred when we conferred citizenship?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can answer now that when we confer the right there may be no occasion for the exercise of that right at that particular time. We might have organized a Territorial form of government there and immediately the natural rights of citizenship would attach. The fact that we granted them the rights and privileges of all citizens would give them the same right as the white man in the matter of the conduct of the affairs of the State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

In the enabling act which provided for the TILLMAN. new State of Oklahoma are not these Indians permitted to vote?

Mr. McCUMBER. They certainly are. Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator is arguing that voters in the State of Oklahoma are still under the guardianship of the United States, and that we must continue perpetually, or for twenty-five years or some other time, to coddle and pet and look after them?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the holding of the Department; it is the holding of the Senate, and it is the holding of the It has been expressed affirmatively time and again in every bill that has passed Congress since the enactment of the law granting them the franchise.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator give me vidual view as to the justice and propriety of it? Will the Senator give me his own indi-

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I certainly will. It is not only just, but certainly it is of the highest degree of propriety. The injustice that has been done has been the injustice of attempting to take away the control of the Government over them. If we had entirely taken it away, then we might as well dispose of this whole Indian appropriation bill, except for the purpose of carrying out the treaties. If we have not taken them away, then we have our duties to perform to protect those Indians; and inasmuch as Congress has declared that it still has the authority and it is still exercising the authority of a guardian, if we exercise it in one direction we certainly ought to exercise it in that direction which best subserves the real interests of the Indian and protects him from the rapacity of the white man.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am just asking for information. Are the Indians upon the reservations in the State from which the Senator comes citizens, and do they vote?

Mr. McCUMBER. They do.
Mr. TILLMAN. Yet their property is held in trust and they have guardians to look after them?

Mr. McCUMBER. Their property is held in trust. They have the guardianship of the Government of the United States. We have been granting them not only annuities but assistance from Congress since that law came into effect. We are taking their children to Carlisle and down here in Virginia and we are educating them. We are doing that on the assumption that they are still wards of the Government, because we would have no authority unless they were.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not a matter of fact that the reason we are holding on to those Indians is because they have got a whole lot of money which we are unwilling to turn over to them and let them "root hog or die?" Is is not because somebody in the Indian Department or somewhere else wants to continue to hold office and draw a salary as being guardians of these

Indiaus5

Mr. McCUMBER. On the contrary, we are holding on to them because we know that the moment we let go of them they will be subject to the rapacity of every white settler, and in why we are holding on to them. We know that in the struggle for existence they are not able and they will not be able to stand side by side with the white man. We know that they will lose and that the white man will gain. It is with that constant fear in our minds and with that absolute knowledge in our hearts that we are attempting to protect them and to continue their rights just as long as we can.

Mr. THLMAN. How long will this approximate and the Mr. THLMAN. How long will this approximate and the Mr. THLMAN. When are we going to get through with it? How long will this abnormal and unnatural

Mr. McCUMBER. We will get through with it when there are no more Indians in the United States, and that will probably be within the next twenty years.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the meantime the white man will use up more than half or two-thirds of the Indian's money in taking care of him.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has answered his own question. Mr. TILLMAN. I am speaking about officials who are required to coddle and pet and watch over them.

Mr. McCUMBER. The proposition amounts simply to this: We allow those Indians to sell their land, to dispose of their property, because it is claimed that that property ought to be subject to taxation. It goes then to the white man, and it becomes subject to taxation. The white settlers have got the Indian's land and they have got the money, and then they have got the paupers to support, if they will support them. It is to protect the Indian against this condition that we are trying to continue this control, if we have not already dispossessed ourselves of the whole Indian question.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, in a little trip through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory I met all classes of men-white men, Indians, mixed bloods, and othersand I was told that there were a large number of Indians down there just as competent, and I saw them and they appeared to me in conversation to be just as competent, to take care of them-selves as anybody else. Yet they are under these very restrictions. They are not allowed to handle their own estates, and we have got a whole lot of parasites, bloodsuckers, hanging around the Indian agencies and absorbing the property and increment from the Indian's land, and the Indian himself is in a state of starvation or semistarvation. Yet we keep up this infernal humbug philanthropy in caring for people who are just as capable of caring for themselves as they will ever be. I think we should get rid of the incubus and the lobbyists we have here every year who get hold of a lot of claims and try to absorb out of the Treasury the remnant of the Indian's property, and the Indian would be better off.

The Senator said in almost his first sen-Mr. McCUMBER. tence that he found these Indians as capable as the rest of the population-

Mr. TILLMAN. Some of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. To take care of property rights. Then he closes by saying he finds them in a comparatively starving condition, because they are being robbed. The two statements are certainly not very consistent with each other.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the discussion that is now proceeding is going to be of great value to the country and to the I agree entirely with the Senator from North Dakota that if the law is so that the Government has no longer a legal right to hold these Indians under its guardianship, 90 per cent of the Indian appropriation bill, so called, would not appear in the bill.

I am very glad that the Senator from North Dakota has taken up this question. I do not consider that the propriety of the Government continuing to be the ward of the Indians is so much to be considered as the legality of it. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he regards the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of The United States against Rickert as being analogous or of any authority in determining the present position of the Government toward the Indians, at least in the Indian Territory?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is and it is not. In a certain sense the case of The United States against Rickert is. That case was one brought in Roberts County, S. Dak., against a member of the Wahpeton and Sisseton bands, or, rather, for the protection of his rights. The county of Roberts had levied taxes upon the real estate and personal property. The limitation had not yet expired upon the real property. In other words, the restriction of the right to sell had not yet expired, and the court held, and very properly held, that this land was granted to that particular Indian and this restriction was attached to the grant for the protection of the Indian himself, and that therefore the State had no authority to destroy any portion of the grant. far as that is concerned, it is not parallel and has no application whatever to the question of guardianship; but I think the court went a little further, and it might be construed into a support of this position when it commenced to deal with the personal property

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 26, Senate resolution No. 214, by Mr. Carter, "that a duly qualified entryman is entitled to a patent for land," etc.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily Without objection, it is so ordered. laid aside.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if the case of the United States against Rickert did not arise solely out of a contractural relation between the Government and the Indian—a provision in the grant itself? Was it not the fact that the Government allowed the Indian to go on the land with an agreement that after twenty-five years the Government would give the Indian a patent to the land, and was not the question in the case whether, pending the vesting of the title in the grantee, the land was taxable or not by the State of South Dakota?

Mr. LONG. Before the expiration of the twenty-five-year period.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was a condition that arose on the land.

There is no question about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator a further question. In that case did the statute of 1901, declaring the Indians to be citizens, come before the court in any way, directly or indirectly, or did the court attempt in any way to construe that statute?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will not be certain as to that. It has been perhaps two years since I have looked at the case; so I do not know. But I want to call attention to the matter so far as it affected the personalty. The man to whom this personal as it affected the personalty. The man to whom this personal property was granted was a citizen of the United States. There was no restriction in the grant. There is no question, of course, but what the intention of the Government was that the Indian would take the horses and cattle and this personal property that came through purchase of the Government and through funds furnished by the Government and would continue to hold them; but there was no provision whatever that he could not sell them. So that did not correspond with the condition which attached to the land. In order to sustain the Government's position with reference to the personal property it considered the relation of guardian and ward again, in a condition of pupilage. as was stated in that particular case, a condition which could not exist except upon the theory that there was a wardship in the case; and with that assumption it held that the State could not take away property granted to that individual for the purpose of civilizing him and bringing him up to good citizenship.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me, I think the taxation of the personal property was defeated upon the proposition that the property in fact belonged to the Government and not to the Indian.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it is stated it was given to the Indian for certain purposes.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to a part of the opinion bearing upon that point:

The personal property in question was purchased with the money of the Government and was furnished to the Indians in order to maintain them on the land allotted during the period of the trust estate and to induce them to adopt the habits of civilized life. It was, in fact, the property of the United States, and was put into the hands of the Indians to be used in execution of the purpose of the Government in reference to them. The assessment and taxation of the personal property would necessarily have the effect to defeat that purpose.

This shows the reason why the court held that the personal property could not be taxed by the State of South Dakota, because it was, in fact, the property of the United States and not the property of the Indian.

Mr. McCUMBER. The court say, on page 437:

If, as is undoubtedly the case, these lands are held by the United States in execution of its plans relating to the Indians, without any right in the Indians to make contracts in reference to them or to do more than to occupy and cultivate them until a regular patent conveying the fee was issued to the several allottees, it would follow that there was no power in the State of South Dakota, for State or municipal purposes, to assess and tax the lands in question until at least the fee was conveyed to the Indians.

That is in reference to the land.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am just reading a part of the whole,

These Indians are yet wards of the nation

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am reading from the decision in the Rickert case:

These Indians are yet wards of the nation, in a condition of pupilage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition.

That is what the court said in that case. That, I admit, was not necessary for the decision in the case; but if that is the view of the court and if the court will stand by that proposition when the question is directly before it, there can be no question but that the mere fact of granting these political rights does not destroy the relation of guardianship.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure. Mr. TILLMAN. Where did the Rickert case arise—in what State?

Mr. McCUMBER. In the State of South Dakota,

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator see no difference between the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians that have been having schools and local self-government and one thing and another for thirty, forty, or fifty years and the blanket Indians out in the State of South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I see no difference in a provision of law which that is clearly held.

that applies to one the same as it does to the other. We will have to give the same construction to the same law.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator see any difference between the patents held by the Indians in the Indian Territory to their lands and the patents held by the Indians in South Dakota under which this decision was rendered?

Mr. McCUMBER. I know nothing that would be antagonistic to this theory.

Mr. LONG. Is it not a fact that under this condition— Mr. McCUMBER. They do not hold exactly the same, but the same principle of law would apply, because if they are wards of the Government, then the Government has authority not only over the person, but over the property. They can not at the same time be wards of the Government and also be free and independent as to their property rights.

Mr. LONG. In the Heff decision did not the court decide that the National Government did not have control over the person of the Indian?

Mr. McCUMBER. It did not decide that. It said that it could release its control. That was the decision. That was not necessary at all to that decision, nor is this mere statement which I read necessary to this decision. I will just finish reading this portion of the decision:

These Indians are yet wards of the nation, in a condition of pupilage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition. They occupy these lands with the consent and authority of the United States, and the holding of them by the United States under the act of 1887 and the agreement of 1889, ratified by the act of 1891, is part of the national policy by which the Indians are to be maintained as well as prepared for assuming the habits of civilized life and ultimately the privileges of citizenship.

While it uses the words "ultimately the privileges of citizenship" it nevertheless calls attention to the law of 1887, which absolutely granted them all the rights, privileges, and immuni-ties of citizens of a State.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Heff case, decided long after the case to which the Senator now refers was decided, it was a disputed point as to whether citizenship of the Indian attached when he took his allotment or at the end of the twenty-five-year period when he was to receive his final patent, and that the Heff case decided that the citizenship attached when he took his allotment and not when the final patent was issued?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question about that. The law itself declared that the citizenship should attach when he took his allotment. They did not have to raise a question of

Mr. LONG. But, Mr. President-

Mr. McCUMBER. Because the law itself expressly so provided. Now on what was it decided?

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will permit me, it may not have been necessary to raise the question, but it was raised in the Heff case by the Government, and it was decided in that case that the citizenship attached when the allotment was taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. That, Mr. President, was not the basis of the decision. The grant was the privileges and the immunities of the citizens of the State, and granting those privileges and immunities the court held that we could not segregate a certain class out of that citizenship and say that one of that class would not have the right to purchase intoxicating liquors and one of the other class could not sell to one of that class intoxicating liquors. It was upon the question of the immunities and the privileges from a single standpoint and not from the standpoint of property rights that the case turned.

Now, I want to call attention to something that was said in the Heff case.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator will permit me.

Mr. McCUMBER. I always will permit the Senator. Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator will again refer to the decision and state why the personal property was held exempt from taxation in the Rickert case.

Mr. McCUMBER. I gave that yesterday, and I think I have given it also to-day. I can repeat it. It was held that it was not subject to taxation upon the proposition that it was given to the Indian for a certain purpose, that of fitting him for citizenship, and a gift having been made for a certain purpose, or property turned over to the Indian for a certain purpose, that purpose could not be defeated by the State of South Dakota by taking away the property under any character of law.

Mr. LONG. And that it was, in fact, the property of the United States

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that was the basis of the decision, although those words were used in the decision itself. I call the Senator's attention to the decision in Mr. LONG.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know.

Mr. LONG. But the Senator did not read the whole of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I read all of it in reference to the taxation of personal property; but I will state again that the decision was based upon the assumption that the property was granted for certain purposes, which purposes could not be defeated by the State. That is what it is in a nutshell.

Now, let us take the Heff case, to which the Senator refers, and we shall get again the sentiment and the view that was taken by the court in that case and which has been taken by the court in all other cases. On page 508 the court uses this language:

. But it is said that the Government has provided that the Indian's title shall not be alienated or encumbered for twenty-five years, and has also stipulated that the grant of citizenship shall not deprive the Indian of his interest in tribal or other property.

Then it goes on to say:

But these are mere property rights and do not affect the civil or political status of the allottee.

I am trying to draw this distinction between the political and civil rights and mere property rights that the court has recognized in the Heff case and in every case where this question of citizenship has arisen. Again, on page 509, Justice Brewer used the following language:

But the fact that property is held subject to a condition against alienation does not affect the civil or political status of the holder of the title.

Just there, showing that at all times they had in mind the distinction between political and civil rights.

In the case of Wiggans v. Connelly, 163 United States, page 56, the court says:

The fact that the patent to this allottee had already been issued did not abridge the right of the United States to add, with the consent of the tribe, a new limitation to the power of the individual Indian in respect to allenation. The land and the allottee were both still under the charge and care of the nation and the tribe, and they could agree for still further protection, a protection which no individual was at liberty to challenge.

Those are pretty broad words, and they are directly to the point. The principal difference is this: They qualify this "with the consent of the tribe." It is an individual right, a right that attaches to the individual; and if his relation as a ward has ceased to exist, then the consent of the tribe would not cure the defect or deficiency.

Again, in the case of Ross v. Eels, 56 Federal Reports, 855, Justice McKenna says:

The opinion of the court is along the line of other cases holding that the citizenship of the Indian did not revoke the control of the Government over his property.

I am not claiming, Mr. President, that these cases are not to some extent antagonistic to some of the others; but what I do claim is that in none of these other cases was the issue directly involved as to whether or not the Government could continue its relation over the property interest of the ward. It seems to me that it will very naturally follow that if the wardship continues-and it has always been regarded as a complete and the guardianship as a complete guardianship, over both the person and the property of the Indian-then, certainly, we can continue to restrict to a greater extent than at the time of the making of the grant. No one else can challenge it; no one but the Government can continue it; no one but the Government can take it away.

This case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was dismissed upon motion of the Government's attorney. No opposition to the motion was offered. So it was practically conceded in that case.

Here is another case where the court held:

The contention in effect ignores the status of the contracting Indians and the relation of dependency they bere and continue to bear toward the Government of the United States. To uphold the claim would be to adjudge that the indirect operation of the treaty was to materially limit and qualify the controlling authority of Congress in respect to the care and protection of the Indians and to deprive Congress in a possible emergency, when the necessity might be urgent for a partition and disposal of the tribal lands, of all power to act if the assent of the Indians could not be obtained.

Mr. Pressident L. can put the same question back to the Sen-

Mr. President, I can put the same question back to the Sentors who are asking these questions, Are these Indians yet the wards of the Government? If they answer in the affirmative, then they are compelled to admit that, notwithstanding any grant that we have made, we have still the right to extend these limitations and also the right to take them away. The fact that they are our wards admits of no other theory than that we have control over both the person and the property, and if the granting them the mere right of citizenship destroys the relation of guardian and ward, then we have no right to pass more than 5 per cent of this entire bill that we are proposing to pass to-day. I think Senators will all agree with me upon that proposition.

Mr. President, assuming that we have a right to enact into law the other provisions of the bill, we have an equal right to enact into law this provision or to continue this provision which we placed in the bill of last year, which continued the limitation for twenty-five years longer.

Is it, then, proper legislation? Is it for the best interest of the Indian himself? I can not recall a single instance in which the right to dispose of his property has been given to a single individual Indian where he has not disposed of it immediately. In most cases where he got the restrictions removed it was done because of his desire to dispose of his property, and it was superinduced by the desire of the white man to get hold of that property. Whether we have taken off the limitation as it applies to the whole community or to a single individual, the result has been exactly the same.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] says that it has worked well as to a certain tribe in his State. I think, however, he will find that it has possibly worked well with the white Indian, but with mighty few of the real Indians. I am not trying to look after those white Indians, those who have one-sixteenth or one thirty-second of Indian blood in their veins. I do not regard them really as Indians, although they may have property and other rights.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if I understand him correctly. Does he claim that the so-called "McCumber amendment," which was added to the appropriation bill last year, if submitted to the Supreme Court, would be sustained by the court?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the utterance of the Supreme Court which I have cited is correct law, then there can be no question but it would be sustained. I have stated to the Senate before that in considering some of these cases there has been a doubt in my mind, and there is a doubt to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. I merely want to call the Senator's attention— it is a matter that he appears to be familiar with—to the fact that the removal of restrictions at White Earth only applied to mixed bloods. It did not apply to the full bloods.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that, and I understand further, Mr. President, that the majority of these mixed bloods have very little Indian blood at all; that they are practically white citizens. I do not care for those at all.

Mr. President, it has been urged here again and again that if we allow those Indians to sell their lands they will then be in a position where they will be forced to take care of themselves, and the only way to civilize them, to make good citizens out of them, is to compel them to make their living, the same as any white man. Many years ago I was of that opinion myself, but the longer I have studied this Indian question and the more I have become acquainted with the Indians, the more certain I have become that my first judgment was incorrect. It is incorrect for a fundamental reason. The Indians are not progressive. If they had been of the progressive type of the white race, does any Senator believe that for thousands upon thousands of years the vast opportunities of this continent would have lain dormant without being used in the slightest degree? Had they inherited the natural progressive inclination of the white race, or almost any other race on the face of the earth, can anyone doubt that these plains would have been burned off year after year and the Indians would not have lived only by hunting and fishing? All of these opportunities were before them; they were before their fathers for thousands of years. None of them ever attempted to utilize them because their inheritance was of that character that they could not and did not know or understand how to go to work and accomplish what the great white race has accomplished.

If we now take away the only safeguard of the Indian-that of holding between the one ocean and the other some little spot that he can still call the red man's land; if we fail to care for him to that extent, then, just as surely as the sun rises to-morrow, we will have made him a pauper the moment we let go of the entire control over his interests. No man can deny that, Mr. President, who is acquainted with the Indian character.

We have two conditions before us. Take away these restrictions and the white man will own the Indian's land; the white man will own his property. Then there is but one alternative, either to submit him to the tender mercies of the State and to the poorhouses of the State or to purchase him a home some-where else. Have we ever taken the land from any Indian that we did not have to purchase him other lands? Have we ever yet bought a single tract and told the Indians to go somewhere else that we were not compelled to find him another home? Only last year we had to gather up the remnants of an old band scattered over the State of California and make provision for buying them a new home at ten times the cost of the original land that we took from them. There is but one avenue left.

Mexico has dealt more intelligently with the Indian problem than has the United States, for the simple reason that Mexico has left them alone while we have tried to make white people They live there pretty well. I believe that we will sooner or later be compelled to find a home for them in some foreign land.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to put in the RECORD now-it is the only opportunity perhaps—a hearty amen to the suggestion of the Senator as to the different methods of the two countries, and the superiority of the Mexican method.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what I have said has been said because of my sincere sympathy for the whole Indian race. We acted right at one time when we selected the beautiful lands of the Indian Territory and said that this shall be henceforth the land of the Indian; it shall be the home of the red man. We have despoiled him of his heritage; we have taken every acre of land of his fathers; we have driven the game from the country. The white man's plow has turned the furrow of the country. The white man's plow has turned the f civilization from one end of the country to the other. The red man's civilization must necessarily give way to the high-bred culture and civilization of the white man. We despoiled him of every right that he had on earth, and because he can not adapt himself to our conditions our civilization must force his extinction. The Government took the only right step that it ever took when it created the Indian Territory for the red man. Our superior intelligence, however, pressing close upon the Indian, first succeeded in getting him to agree that some white men should go into his territory. That agreement was followed by a great horde of the white race, and in a very short time we had control of the Territory. The Indian was at our mercy, and the great white civilization of the adjacent States, still crying for the Indian's land, forced the Government of the United States to take from the Indian the last heritage he had. Having despoiled him of all of these rights, it is my purpose although I admit that there may be a question of our constitu-tional authority—to extend the limitations we have already placed upon his grant so far as we can, and let the Supreme Court determine whether or not it is unconstitutionally done. I am very doubtful if the court will go to that extent. I am exceedingly doubtful if to-day the court would say that the Government of the United States has no authority over its Indian people. If it does say that, then we may as well set aside our Indian Committee and cease to attempt any further control over the Indians

I hope, Mr. President, that we will continue this as it has been before, and if any man believes that we have not the right to extend these limitations there is a speedy remedy in the courts of the United States, and we should let them pass upon this doubtful question.

Mr. President, I think the Senate will bear wit-Mr. CLAPP. ness that I occupy but very little of its time in making what might be termed an effort at speechmaking, but I am going to vary my usual course and trespass for a little while this morning upon the time of the Senate in the discussion of this ques-

As a lawyer, of course, I recognize that even in the discussion of a legal question a person is always seriously handicapped if his position is not in accord with common and popular senti-At the outset I want to distinguish between the question of what ought to have been done for the Indians, between the the question of sentiment to-day and what can be done to-day in the light of past legislation and past treaties. There is no use in reviewing the mistakes of the past, except for one pur-pose, and that is in dealing with this Indian problem we nec-essarily proceed along experimental lines; and so far as the past has proven a failure it is a guide to the avoidance of mistakes in the future. I undertake to say that the past policy has demonstrated but one thing certainly, and that is that it is an utter failure. From beginning to end the policy of the United States Government toward the Indian has been a mistake, and no human ingenuity can start with a false principle and ever work out a right result.

The Constitution of the United States recognizes the capacity of the Indian to take care of his own affairs. It recognizes the Indians as consisting of nations, and authorizes the United States Government to make treaties with the Indians as na-But after sitting down and solemnly making a treaty with them, upon the theory that they are competent to transact their affairs and that they are competent to enter into treaties, we turn around and assume the rôle of guardian and relegate them to the position of wards. It is an absolute travesty upon common justice and common honesty to have pursued that course toward the Indian. Either we should have regarded him as a ward, or, if we were right in recognizing his ability to transact his business in making treaties with him, then we should have recognized that relation, and not be put in the position taken by our courts and the position taken by Congress, after solemnly making a treaty upon this theory of equality in ability to contract, of turning around and saying: "This treaty is of no binding force on us, because we occupy the relation of guardian and you are simply our wards." Mr. President, I say again no human ingenuity will be able to devise a system based upon that false principle which would ever work out a right

I am willing to concede—and every man who has studied this question must concede-that the arguments which are made embodying the thought that the Indian will in the end suffer in contract relationship with his superior neighbor, the white man, is to be regretted and to be deplored; but the question is, What solution is there for this problem?

I know the Indians of the Indian Territory have certain rights under treaties. Under those treaties and the law, on the 1st day of July, I think, of this year a large proportion of those Indians will have the right of alienation. The details are set forth in the committee's report.

Last winter we proceeded to pass a law which extended those restrictions. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCum-BER] is correct, and those restrictions can be legally extended, then it becomes a question of policy, and in the solution of that question sentiment is necessarily an important element. f the rights which the Indians had prior to the passage of the bill of last winter, which, for brevity's sake, I will refer to as the McCumber amendment, can not be interfered with by any legislation, then, no matter how much we may deplore the consequences. they are there, and the only question before us is, What is the best policy to pursue in the light of the legal conditions and the limitations upon our own power?

The discussion of the right of alienation and restriction upon alienation have always ignored one basic principle which the court has not met yet, because it has never been presented to the court. A restriction upon alienation can only rest upon one of two conditions. It must be a limitation placed in the grant at the time of the grant or it must be a limitation resting in the incapacity of the grantee to transact business, as the incapacity of coverture, infancy, or lunacy. If the limitation is placed in that instrument by the grantor at the time the grant is made, clearly the grantee, accepting that instrument with that limitation upon his rights, the right of the grantor to make further limitations must be measured by the terms of that grant, and no one would contend that, after the grantor had made his grant embodying in that grant the limitation, the grantor, at his own sweet will, could add to the force, character, or extent of the limitation.

Turning to the question of incapacity, Congress has passed laws by virtue of which when the Indian took his allotment he became a citizen of the United States as absolutely as any members of this body, with his rights as absolute, except that as to a particular piece of land there was a limitation attached. The moment he became a citizen, carrying the parallel of his capacity further, he attained his majority; and from that mo-ment the guardian could exercise no further authority over him. That is the basic principle upon which this question must rest, and it has got to be met when it is finally presented to the

I repeat, there could be no limitation except a limitation resting in the grant made by the grantor and accepted by the grantee, or a limitation resting in the incapacity of the grantee himself; and when that period of incapacity is passed, when he attains his majority, the relation of guardian and ward as to that transaction must cease, and no limitation can then be imposed by the grantor.

We are met—and I am glad the Senator from North Dakota brought this question up, for I want the Senate to understand it-we are met by the proposition that if this be true we are appropriating money here year after year for purposes for which we ought not to appropriate it. I want to say that of all travesties in legislation there is none greater than Congress appropriating money year after year to educate citizens of the United States, when those citizens in many instances have got funds in the United States Treasury with the management of which we are afraid to intrust them-funds that are piled up there which are a menace to these Indians. We do not dare to give them these funds to use, and yet we go on accumulating those funds in the United States Treasury and voting the people's money to educate people who have money which we do not dare to give them to use. I hope this discussion will at least open the eyes of Congress to that proposition.

It seems from an inquiry made of me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] that this question is not yet quite I want to repeat that down to last year there were certain legal conditions as to these restrictions. Last year, after these people had become citizens of the United States, had taken their lands subject to these conditions and restrictions, Congress went to work and enlarged the restrictions, limiting the power of the party to control and exercise the right of property over his property.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator refer to section 19 of what is known as the "Five Tribes bill?"

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. LONG. In which the period of restriction is extended twenty-five years?

Mr. CLAPP. Twenty-five years, known as the "McCumber amendment." What was the effect of that? There are here to-day Indians from the Indian Territory who are insisting that we shall not remove their restrictions. But the Indian is not the only man interested. The man who wants to acquire this property at less than its value is also perfectly willing that this cloud shall remain upon the title. The fact is simply this: The man who is seeking the Indian's land can go to the Indian to-day and say, "You can not sell, because of the McCumber amendment," while every lawyer in that Territory, I believe the content of the content (even the author of the amendment himself does not insist upon its validity with any force), knows that that restriction, placed there after the grant had been made, is absolutely worthless and that the restrictions upon those lands will be released from time to time and will exist as they existed under the law prior to the passage of the McCumber amendment last spring.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say that there are Indians here to-day asking that these restrictions be not removed.

Mr. CLAPP. Most certainly there are. Mr. SPOONER. Upon what ground?

Mr. CLAPP. Upon the ground that they own a great deal of property there, and they do not want the property taxedthe most natural ground on earth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me while I also answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have resolutions from the tribes, also many letters, asking that the restrictions be continued, if possible, and be extended, upon the ground that without the restrictions the grafters will soon own their property, and setting out the fact that it is the grafters only who want the repeal of what is called the "McCumber amendment."

Mr. CLAPP. There is no doubt about the fact that many of those Indians-part of them to escape taxation, part of them for the sake of protection-want these restrictions continued. But the question is, What is the effect upon the Indians there of continuing a restriction which confessedly is a very questionable matter so far as its legality is concerned?

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator does not want us to understand that a majority of the Indians or any considerable portion of the Indians

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no. Mr. LONG. Want these restrictions to remain as they are under the McCumber amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. If my information is correct, a majority of the real Indians, the full bloods, do wish them to remain.

Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me Mr. SPOONER. another question?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Indians want these restrictions to continue, and there is doubt as to the legality of the restrictions, ought the Congress not to permit them to continue until the court has passed upon the legality of the restrictions?

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly.

Now, I am not arguing that these restrictions should be removed if the McCumber amendment is a valid enactment or if it comes within a reasonable supposition that it is a valid enactment. But it seems to me it is so absolutely wanting in validity that it simply places the Indians, who will sell under some circumstances or other anyhow, at a disadvantage in dealing with land speculators.

Mr. SPOONER. It is very easy to test its validity. The Indian sells and conveys in violation of the restriction. There is a case in which the court can be called upon to determine the validity of the restriction. My question is whether, if there be to that question, because it is a crucial question.

doubts as to the validity of the restrictions, we do not owe it to the Indians, who wish a continuance of these restrictions upon their power of alienation, to keep our hands off of the subject until the court, not the Senate or the House, shall have passed upon the validity of the McCumber amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. That would be true if there was any question about it, but I believe the Senator from Wisconsin will agree when he examines the matter that there is no question.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that there are other provisions in this bill, amendments introduced by the Senator from Wyoming, which will enable a speedy de-termination to be obtained as to the validity of the provisions in the act of April 26, 1906.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question to see if my recollection is correct. I am not familiar with the Indian subject. I have an impression that at the time of the adoption of the McCumber amendment, while the provision had been made for the removal of these restrictions, the time at which that provision was to take effect had not arrived.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true.

Mr. BACON. And that the additional restrictions imposed by the McCumber amendment were in fact imposed before these people had arrived at the period which the Senator denominates their period of majority."

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. BACON. Before they had been emancipated from the restrictions.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, before they had been emancipated from the restrictions applied to a particular piece of land, and that only.

Mr. BACON. Not as a general thing.
Mr. CLAPP. The Indian, after he took his allotment and before the restrictions expired, under the decision of the Supreme Court, is a citizen of this country as absolutely as is the Senator from Georgia or I.

Mr. BACON. I did not wish to take issue with the Senator, but my imperfect recollection was, but still an impression, that there was the excuse for the enactment of the McCumber amendment imposing these restrictions that while provision had been made for this emancipation the period had not actually arrived. But I have no doubt the Senator is correct in his statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Take, for instance, the Creeks as a concrete illustration. All restrictions except as to homesteads will expire in five years from June 21, 1902. That will be the 21st day of June, 1907. That was a law, a law which left the citizen as absolutely free as any member of this body except that as to a particular piece of land there was a restriction until June 21, 1907. In the spring of 1906 we pass a law attempting to extend that restriction twenty-one years. It seems to me that it is so absolutely without question void-a mere cloud on the title of that Indian—that it simply operates to defeat the very purpose which every friend of the Indian has, that if the Indian is to sell he shall be permitted to negotiate on a basis of at least legal equality, if not mental equality. But we place

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator right here allow me a question?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. It will make the Senator's position clear as well.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well. Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that we could not extend the restrictions in case the Indians were still wards of the Government? Does he deny our power if he admits the wardship?

Mr. CLAPP. That question could not be answered yes or no, because it might be proper as to that particular trust which was carved out of that grant to use the word "wardship," when outside of that particular trust, limited to that particular grant, the word "wardship" would have no application whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I want to get at is this: Does the Senator claim that the guardian, having made a contract with his ward, when the wardship is in existence, to the effect that certain property belonging to the ward may be sold when the ward reaches the age of 18, and before that ward has reached the age of 18 the guardian ascertains that the ward is not competent and still is a proper ward, could not continue that restriction for three or five years longer?

Mr. CLAPP. I invite the attention of Senators to the answer

If it were true that he did not attain his majority until some subsequent time within that period, the guardian would be guardian, but unfortunately under the law and under the decision of the Supreme Court that Indian attains his majority at the moment he receives his allotment, and attaining his majority, passes as to that subject beyond the control of the guardian.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if he attains his majority then the wardship ceases, does it not?

Mr. CLAPP. Absolutely.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the Senator would have to hold, in order to sustain his position, that the relation of guardian and the senator was a sustain his position. ward no longer exists between the Government and the Indian.

Mr. CLAPP. As to the United States Government and the allottee who has taken his allotment, there is no guardianship. As to property upon which the Government has held its hand in the creation and execution of a trust, there is a control over that trust, and the mere fact that a court inadvertently calls that "wardship" has no bearing upon the legal question involved in this discussion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to say that several cases which I cited here declare that notwithstanding these grants, notwithstanding the declaration of citizenship, the wardship did not become extinct. I admit it was not necessary for the court to make that assertion in the decision, as I view it, of the cases that were decided, but they held it, as a declaration, and held it over and over again in the many cases. The Heff case seems to be absolutely opposite to that theory.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.
Mr. LONG. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that all Indians in the Indian Territory were by act of Congress in 1901 made citizens of the United States-

Mr. CLAPP. Unquestionably. Mr. LONG. Whether they l Whether they had taken their allotments or not. And that these supplemental agreements were made in 1902, and that the supplemental agreements fixed the periods of alienation.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and that citizenship was absolute and complete, so far as the person of the Indian was concerned. From that time on the United States Government was as power-Mr. CLAPP. less to interfere, for instance, with the sale of liquor to that Indian as it would be to any white man. That individual has the right of suffrage. He has every right that pertains to a citizen. His property, however, a particular piece, and only a particular piece, is subjected to this trust which the Government imposed at the time of the execution of the trust deed.

Now, while law in the abstract can never change, the expression of law through the court necessarily grows as a subject becomes more and more the subject of judicial consideration, and it is true that the court frequently use the expression "guardian and ward." In the so-called "Rickert case," that came up from South Dakota, the attempt was made there to tax the property of an Indian. Mind you, at the very foundation it was not the effort of the Indian to insist upon his rights as against the Government, but it was the effort of the Government to interpose and protect the rights of the Indian as against taxation. In that case the court held that that property could not be taxed, because it was a trust.

I submit to any lawyer in this Chamber if there is anything in the relation of a trust that in itself would impress the property held in trust with a quality that did not pertain to the trustee, or a right pertaining solely to the trustee impress itself upon property which he held in trust without any beneficial interest. And yet the court never considered that question. Take, for instance, a railroad company which is enjoying an exemption from taxation, and, if you can, imagine it holding some property in trust and not enjoying the beneficial use of No lawyer in Christendom would contend that that property. because the trustee in the capacity of a railroad was exempt from ordinary taxation, the taxation in lieu being a percentage taxation, that that exemption would attach to the property which incidentally the corporation might hold in trust for some And yet the Supreme Court overlooked that principle one else. and said that because we held this land in trust, consequently it could not be taxed.

They went further and in the case of personal property they held that that property was exempt from taxation, and they say that this is practically the property of the United States, and upon that ground it is not subject to taxation.

There was some academic discussion in the Rickert case, but two years later, in 1904, in the Heff case, the Supreme Court stood face to face with this question and not in any academic be no sentiment in a cold legal proposition, at the same time sense. The court realized that if the control of the Federal there is this sentiment. If as a matter of fact the McCumber Government had ceased as to the right of the Indians, and especially in restraint of his appetite for strong drink, it was a them, serious problem, and with that confronting question brought to their attention, with the Rickert case forced upon their consideration by the Solicitor-General, the Supreme Court held in the Heff case that the Indian had become a citizen, and in the most important matter of guardianship which a superior and a higher people, morally developed, could exercise over an inferior people, on the question of their morals and habits as affected by intoxication and the use of intoxicants, the Supreme Court had to admit that the United States Government had no more control over that Indian, because he was a citizen of the United States. They point out in that case the difference between exercising a control over the Indian and the limitation that has been carved out of a grant, and they distinguish between the two.

But in the light of the Heff case, Congress has no more jurisdiction over an Indian in the Indian Territory than it has over any other citizen of the United States. It may still exercise that trust as to the particular property which he Indian It may still exercise its trust as to communal property which has not been disposed of. But as to the right of the Indian to deal with his own property and to exercise his rights there can be no question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is with reference to the Heff case. The Heff case in substance held that Congress has no power of special legislation to classify citizens, so as to create race or other distinctions and to subject one class or grade to stipulations and regulations not applicable to all citizens and incompatible with the reserve power of the States to enact and enforce valid local laws.

I take that from the decision as being all that was decided in the Heff case. The question of guardianship and the question of property rights were not discussed, but in a certain passage which I read a short time ago the court attempted to differentiate the political power that was obtained by the Indian by reason of his enfranchisement, if I may call it that, from the power of the Government over his property rights. I read before the portion of the opinion which differentiates it.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but the Senator would never contend for a moment that Congress could thus classify, and if they could, they had, and the Supreme Court stood face to face with the moral existence of the thousands of Indians in this country, and yet they had to hold that Congress had no authority to prevent the sale of liquor to them. The court held that the Indians are possessed of their political and civil rights, and the possession The court held that the Indians are of political and civil rights includes the possession of property There can be no qualification except as they point out rights. When a grant is made the grantor may attach a limitation, and the grantee, accepting it with that limitation, is bound by the limitation.

Mr. President, I have talked longer than I intended on this question. I have no feeling about it. While I speak with some earnestness, the Senator from North Dakota and I discussed this question in the committee without any feeling, and there is no feeling involved in the earnestness of this discussion. both seek the same thing. We are now up to the question, What can best be done in the light of existing conditions? If I knew that the Indians would recognize the McCumber amendment and not sell, that would be another question. But we know that down there both the Indian and the white men are ignoring the McCumber amendment. The Indians are selling in spite of the McCumber amendment, and the simple question that confronts us now, with that amendment questioned, is which is the better policy to pursue-to give the white man in the Indian Territory an opportunity to say to the Indian, "I will give you something for this land; you can not give me a good title," and give the white man an opportunity to deal with the Indian in that legal inequality which the law has made, or to repeal that amendment and place the Indian, so far as legal right is concerned, on a plane of equality with the white man. It is a proposition that Congress has to face.

The condition there to-day is one of chaos and confusion, and I believe that, while we may be actuated by the purest motives for the Indian-I have seen it in my own State in the last year-every effort to interfere with the law, with the legal rights of the Indians, has simply been at the cost and expense of the Indians. The white man knows the law; the white man takes his chance with his knowledge of the law; and in dealing with him the Indian is at that disadvantage. While there may amendment is not valid, then we are doing an injustice to the Indian in leaving it upon the statute book. It would be far better, so long as the Indian will sell under some condition, to place him, I say again, upon a plane of equality, at least so far as legal rights are concerned, with the white man.

I have no more interest in this matter than any other Senator in this Chamber. We all have the same common purpose, to pursue a policy that will be for the best interest of the Indian. There is no use to-day, at this late day, in the face of the legislation and the agreements of the past, being swept to one side It is a cold legal question, and if this is the law, if we can not to-day legally enlarge the restrictions, then it does seem to me that we make a serious mistake and do the Indians a great injustice in placing the white man where he can point to a supposed limitation and take advantage of it in getting the best of the Indian in the matter of the alienation of his land and the transaction of business.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Minnesota takes his seat I should like to ask him a question for information.

Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Are there any of those cases now in which the limitation has already expired?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir. Mr. McCUMBER. Then, as a matter of fact-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Except in the Seminole country.
Mr. CLAPP. I beg pardon. I did not think of that,
Mr. McCUMBER. The percentage is small, and it is limited to the Seminole tribe.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. To the Seminole tribe.
Mr. McCUMBER. A very small tribe. In the other tribes the limitation has not yet expired. So that these purchases that are being made to-day are absolutely void under the old law, under the old limitation, and they could not be enforced equitably or in any other way. These Indians are selling lands, ac-cording to the statement of the Senator and these others, which they have no right to sell under any law, and before the time has expired in which they will be legally entitled to sell the question whether this amendment is constitutional or otherwise can easily be determined by any of the courts.

Mr. CLAPP. That simply illustrates the evil and vice of this confusion. The McCumber amendment provided that the deeds should be void. That amendment is in force to-day, theoretically.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Each of the agreements provided that any contract for sale should be void.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true, but you simply complicate this by that question. An agreement is made to-day under the McCum-The McCumber amendment theoretically repeals ber amendment. the provision of the agreement, and the agreement is no longer in force. If the court overthrows the McCumber amendment, then the instrument would not be void because of the final finding of the court that the McCumber amendment itself was void, and you would have the matter hung up in the air and involve the question whether an act done under a law while it was in force, not affected ultimately by the decision as to its validity, could then relate back and be declared void under the law which had already been superseded by the second law that was declared void. It simply illustrates the confusion as to title down there under this legislation,

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota

yield to the Senator from Kansas?

I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the further fact that in the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations onefourth of the surplus lands can be alienated in one year from the date of the patent, and some patents were issued in 1905, so one year has elapsed and those lands could now be alienated. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the junior Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. No patents, as I understand, were delivered to the Chickasaws and Choctaws in 1905. The first were delivered January 1, 1906. I may be mistaken about that, but that is the information I gathered when the Five Tribes bill was being con-

Mr. LONG. They were made out, but not delivered.
Mr. CURTIS. They do not take effect until delivery.
Mr. CLAPP. On page 22 will be found a telegram. I first took up the matter with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he suggested that we take it up directly with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. In the telegram Mr. Bixby seeks to approximate, not very accurately, of course, the status of the outstanding patents. Take the Choctaws and They can alienate one-fourth, exclusive of homestead, in one year from date of patent, one-fourth in three years after date of patent, and the remainder in five years from date of patent. It is a condition of chaos and confusion. That is the situation down there to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator contend that if the McCumber amendment should be declared unconstitutional, that has repealed the old law of limitation?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then we are exactly in this position: Under the old law in most of the cases there is yet a limitation, and all sales are absolutely void. grafter who is seeking to obtain these lands for little or nothing under any excuse should lose his money, he could not get any equitable right, because the law declares that any contract for the sale shall be absolutely void.

So, if the amendment which was put on last year is declared unconstitutional, of course the other amendment has not been affected. It did not seek to repeal the other amendment. It simply declared a new limitation. If it is good, of course it supersedes the old limitation. If it is not good, the old limitation still stands. In this connection I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the most that can be said is that inasmuch as the limitation is somewhat longer, the party who is seeking to obtain a title would pay less, but the party gets no right that he can enforce. It may be that the Indian would finally give the deed anyway. If there is anything to sustain it, it would be that possibly he would get a little more just now, but that little more would last him only a few days.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, let us stick right to the concrete case here. For instance, take the Creek Nation. I undertake to say that any deed made after the 21st of June, 1907, by a Creek allottee will be valid, even in case the amendment is declared void.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The McCumber amendment can not be de-eided until after June under any circumstances.

Mr. McCUMBER. It can be decided, we will say, after June of this year

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. Now, the moment that these exemptions expire under the old law, if the McCumber amendment is not valid, you have the entire real-estate aggregation of the In-dian Territory turned loose on these Indians and the Indians placed at a disadvantage by Congress, in addition to the disad-vantage which we all must admit they labor under by reason of racial difference.

Mr. McCUMBER. If one is a disadvantage, the other is. If the additional legislation extending the limitation is a disadvantage, then the old limitation must have been a disadvantage, and a disadvantage to the extent that it was a limitation.

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all. The old limitation was a valid limitation. No land speculator in the Indian Territory would have thought of defying the terms of the old limitation. It is the new limitation which they question. It is the new limitation which clouds the title to the Indian and puts him to this disadvantage, conceding all the time, of course, that that limitation is valid it presents an entirely If the limitation is valid, it presents an entirely tion is void. different question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is in error when he says that no attempt would be made to purchase the land under the old limitation. The same people who are fighting the additional limitation are a class of people who have been securing contracts from these Indians all over the country to sell their land, and on the assumption that the Indian will stand by his bargain when he is able to sell it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota vield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can hardly let the statement of the Senator from North Dakota go unchallenged when he puts in an aggregation an intimation that the only people who are fighting this limitation are those who have dishonest motives.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly did not so intend it, any more than I would intend to say that of Senators here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it would so read in the RECORD. Mr. McCUMBER. No; I am speaking of those people down there who have been trying to buy the Indian's land before his right to sell the land accrued. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that very many others than those engaged in land transactions of any sort believe in this legislation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.
Mr. LONG. In regard to the time when the land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations becomes alienable under the original supplemental agreement I will state that that agreement provides that the period of alienation for one-fourth of the land shall be one year from the date of the patent. I understand that many of the patents are dated in 1905, and that the one year has expired, and in other cases it will expire within the next few months.

Mr. CLAPP. That is my understanding.

Mr. President, in conclusion I merely want to say that I do not wish to be understood as advocating the removal of these restrictions. I appreciate how a legal question is more or less handicapped by sentiment. I have simply presented to the Senate this matter as it appears to me. It is for the Senate now to decide whether it will allow the McCumber amendment to stand or repeal it. Personally I have no feeling in the matter one way or the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the last statement made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long] was to the effect that the right to sell after the expiration of one year after the patent had issued would accrue to many of these Indians—that is, one year from 1905 or 1906 or 1907. That right has accrued. If anyone who has purchased under that right desires to test the amendment he can do so even at the present time, and I would prefer to have the court pass upon it.

Mr. President, without going further into that case at this time, I wish to ask the Secretary to read a letter from the acting chief of one of these tribes with reference to the matter of the removal of restrictions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask Senators who are interested in the view of the Indians themselves to give attention to the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

TEMPORARY HEADQUARTERS OF CREEK NATION, ROOM 24, NATIONAL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1907.

Hon. Porter J. McCumber,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Sir: The undersigned delegates, representing the Creek Nation of Indians, earnestly ask your attention to the representations against the adoption of a certain amendment proposed for H. R. No. 22580, designated as the Indian appropriation bill, which, if it becomes law, removes the restrictions on the sale of Indian lands as at present fixed in law designated as the Indian appropriation bill, which, if it becomes law, removes the restrictions on the sale of Indian lands as at present fixed in law.

The Creeks who own allotments of land that will be affected by the proposed legislation are as a body not asking that these restrictions be removed, but, on the contrary, are earnestly opposed to such removal. The measure is urged by people who have come from the surrounding States to our country, known as "grafters," and we regret to say a few of our own people who have joined in the clamer, all of whom expect to enrich themselves by taking advantage of the ignorance of the Indians of land values when they shall be left unprotected, as will be the case should you pass the proposed amendment.

The Creek council sent a committee of its trusted members, headed by its chief, to meet and tell the Senatorial committee at Muscogee to see to it that the restrictions be not removed as urged by the land speculators, and that committee falthfully and unanimously presented the views of the council, as the records will show. Most of the allotments in the Creek Nation are yet in the possession of the full-blood Indians and their minor children, who have no adequate knowledge of transactions in realties or of land values, and in the light of the unscrupulous methods we now see every day inblushingly practiced, by which our people are being fleeced of their allotments by those who are urging you to remove the present restrictions, we have no hesitation in predicting that should the amendment pass the most of our full-blood Creeks will within a very short time become landless. The Creeks know this, and knowing, too, that the removal of restrictions will be urged before Members of Congress by the grafters and others, they have sent us to appear here and present their wishes and earnest prayer that you do not beed the selfish demands of the grafters and throwing down the barriers, expose them to the merciless greed and restrictions imposed on these allotments will terminate by l mediately follow the adoption of the amendment proposed will, in the present incomplete condition of our tribal affairs, bring about expensive litigations and complications of titles and ownership of lands that must result in great injustice and the certain pauperizing of a large number of the Creeks.

The Interior Department of your Government, including the Indian Office, possessing much valuable information respecting our affairs, is in accord and sympathy with the views of the Creeks in relation to the proposed legislation, and we earnestly implore you to use the friendly power and influence of your high station in preventing said amendment from becoming a law.

After surrounding us with conditions we never suggested, much less invited, don't tell us that your laws are such as to render you powerless to afford the simple protection the Creeks are so earnestly begging of you.

you.

Very respectfully,

P. Porter,
Principal Chief.
G. W. Grayson,

Delegates, Creek Nation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have here a letter of February 5, signed by M. L. Mott, attorney for Creek Nation, also by P. Porter, principal chief; G. W. Grayson, delegate for Creek Nation, and Samuel J. Haynes, delegate for Creek Nation, on the same subject, which is very much to the point. I should like to have it read by the Secretary

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1907.

Hon. Porter J. McCumber, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Porter J. McCumber,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Sir: For information of yourself and other members of the Senate, I most respectfully request to be allowed to submit the following in opposition to that amendment to the Indian appropriation bill which provides for the removal of restrictions upon the land of the Indian and freedman citizen composing the Five Civilized Tribes.

The Creek council, composed of the house of kings and the house of warriors, had before them in their annual meeting last October the question of the removal of restrictions, and by an almost unanimous vote they declared their unyielding opposition to it, and they selected a delegation to come to Washington and instructed them by resolution to use every means in their power to prevent the repeal of the twenty-five-year restriction clause, and thereby keep them out of the power of the land-grabbing "grafters."

The removal of restrictions in the absence of certain rules and regulations on freedman lands in 1904 was a mistake and a calamity. Few of these allotments were sold direct to any settler or one who would cultivate it, but in most cases to men who secured the same by disreputable and dishonest methods and at inadequate and rainous prices. An allotment bought to-day by the "grafter" would be sold to-morrow at an advanced price many times over. As a result, the adult freedmen's allotments, with few exceptions, are all gone, and now to remove restrictions upon their homestead would leave the larger number of them paupers and objects of charity, and a great number of them will gravitate to the town, where their time will be spent in idleness and vagrancy.

A large number of the manor freedmen's allotments have been purchased. The record of the Dawes Commission would show the allotee under age, and in many cases several years under age, and to obviate this difficulty the minor was induced to make affidavit that he or she had obtained their majority. Of course the price paid for such deed was a mere pittance. Later, if ride and drive from house to house securing the signatures to deeds and contracts for homesteads at such prices as should make even an unscruppious man ashamed.

The removal of restrictions by the last Congress upon the inherited lands of mixed breeds proved unfortunate and disastrous to a large number of citizens, because it falled to provide for the sale under such rules and regulations as might be prescribed by the Interior Department, and, as in the case of the freedmen, the unsuspecting and unlettered mixed breeds lost their lands, receiving comparatively nothing for them.

Many hundreds of deeds have already been taken for the allotments of full bloods in the Territory; in many cases a small cash payment was made and a contract signed to make an indifferent additional payment after the date of the removal of restrictions. Many of these full-blood grantors assert that such deeds and contracts were interpreted (the interpreter being in the employ of the "grafter") as a mortgage and a note to secure a small loan. The attest of a notary is necessary in proving such conveyances, and in this connection I want to acquaint you with the fact that the profession of notary is the most densely crowded of any in the Territory, every "grafter" having one in his employ on a monthly, if not an annual, salary.

If the amendment referred to becomes a law, then inside of ten days after the date fixed by the amendment for the removal of restrictions every purchasable allotment held by the incapable and ignorant full bloods will be in the hands of the "grafters" at nominal prices, and the settler and honest purchaser will have to pay these "grafters" a fair price, which he would otherwise have paid the Indian.

Every "grafter" in the Territory has insisted and is insisting that the continuation of restrictions is to the disadvantage and injury of the citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes. Their admonitions upon this question should receive just the same weight as the advice of the horse thief to the farmer that a sure way to the stable door unlocked and unguarded, especially during the night-time.

the stable door unlocked and unguarded, especially during the nighttime.

Some good people in the Territory are favoring the removal of restrictions upon the idea that taxation and settlers are necessary for the better development of the new State. Ordinarily this would be true, but the other side of this proposition means a landless and homeless number of thousands who would have to be fed and sheltered in the almshouses built in every town and community. Taxes from the land involved would go but a short way toward preventing ruin and bankruptcy of the new State carrying such a burden.

No general in the silent tread of the midnight watch ever prepared for his campaign with more deliberate purpose than has been the organized movement in the Territory looking to the removal of restrictions upon lands of these wards of the Government. Weeks and months before the Senatorial committee reached the Territory meetings were held in every town of any consequence and means and plans devised and matured with the view to impressing most favorably and forcibly the committee. The selection of representatives to present to the committee the contentions of these towns, chambers of commerce, and other interests were, where practicable and judicious, made from among the mixed-breed citizenship; his introduction to the committee was usually with much solemnity, and, to add to the weight, with a title borrowed for the occasion. Every man living in the Territory and familiar with the conditions there and with the methods of the "grafters" knows in his heart that the removal of restrictions means the impoverishing and ruin of the greater number of the full blood Indians and the freedman members of the tribes.

The Creek council and the Creek Nation favor the removal of restrictions upon the allotments of the very aged and infirm and of those afflicted with some fatal malady, but under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Very respectfully,

M. L. Mott,

Attorney for Creek

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to call the attention of Senators to the amendment that is attacked. The McCumber amendment applies to full bloods only. All of these letters refer also to the protection of the full bloods. It does not affect the mixed bloods whatever.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Da-kota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. CLAPP. I am not doing it in any spirit of criticism, but simply to put the whole matter before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; I appreciate that.

Mr. CLAPP. But the Senator will admit that the McCumber amendment, however, did operate to extend the restrictions to full bloods.

Mr. McCUMBER. It affected full bloods only.

Mr. CLAPP. As to them it extended restrictions beyond the former limit.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a letter here written by Cenhesse mahhe okis ce, who I take to be an Indian by the name, translated Johnson Tiger. I will ask the Secretary to read simply the first page of the letter, as most of the second page refers to other matters. It comes from what I understand to be a fullblood Indian belonging to one of these tribes. The grammatical construction is not perfect, but I think Senators will under-

Hon. Samuel J. Haynes,

Room 24, National Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Friend: I have received both your letters, one of which was written while on your way and the last bearing date of the 20th instant. I am indeed glad to hear from you while on this your important mission, as I would be even at any other time also. I see by the Territory press that this Congress is likely to enact further legislation to more fully put us in a shape when death, perhaps, would be more desirable than to live and be vexed while living in the event Congress gives us a wholesale restriction. You know that the full bloods to a unit are opposed to the removal of restrictions, and no one that knows anything about the condition of things in our country can hardly censure the position they take in this matter. I find that even at this time that unscrupulous real-estate men have bought from heirs to deceased homesteads, giving them only $10 for 40 acres, and they in turn have refused an offer of $1,000. I know of one man in this town that has done this, but he is only one of a thousand that have done these things, according to all reports. If these things are done at a time when the Indians are under strict regulations of the Department, worse can be expected when the restrictions are removed from all the Indians without any distinction. Let the restrictions be taken off the mixed bloods, but not from the ignorant full bloods. I do not believe that the restriction need to be removed in order that the Indians be taxed to support the new State. The Creek treaty, of course, provides that the lands shall be saleable after five years from its approval by the President; but, undoubtedly, the Creek Nation never expected such a state of affairs to exist—that is, grafting and grafters. I do hope that the Congress will not grant restriction by the wholesale. Then, again, if the restrictions are removed, there will be thousands of acres that are sold to which somebody that is an heir or heirs will be left out, for the reason that it is very hard to locate heirship to the lands that are now being sold.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to call attention to the fact that where the writer of the letter uses the expression "I do hope that the Congress will not grant restriction by the wholesale," he evidently means that he hopes Congress will not remove restrictions by the wholesale.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I had not intended at this time to take any part in this debate, but there seems to be a misapprehension in the minds not only of those from whom the letters just read have been received, but in the minds of Senators as well, as to what this amendment is.

This amendment, Mr. President, proposes no wholesale removal of restrictions. It can not be said to operate as a pauperizing of the Indians. On the contrary, the amendment fixes absolutely the independence of the Indian by giving him a homestead that shall be inalienable. Under no circumstances under the provisions of this amendment can the Indians become paupers or a charge upon the State or county.

Mr. President, a year ago from this time, or a little later—Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator will explain to the Senate what is meant by "homestead" in the Indian Territory.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I shall endeavor to do that, and I will do it now lest I forget it.

A homestead upon the public domain, Mr. President, means 160 acres of land, which must be lived upon and made the residence of the head of the family, except under certain irrigation projects, where it may be fixed at a less amount. The homestead, under the allotment laws that we have passed for the Indian Territory, is a certain percentage of the entire allotment of the Indian. It may be the land upon which he lives, or he may live upon land which is not his homestead. The balance of his allotment, except that designated "homestead," is called "surplus land." The land in the Indian Territory has all been appraised by the Government of the United States, not with a view to its true value, but as a comparative basis upon which allotments shall be made.

An allotment—and I will not go into the details of the dif-ferent tribes, but state it generally—an allotment consists of so many acres of the average agricultural land, one-half of which shall be homestead and one-half of which shall be what are called "surplus" lands. This homestead and surplus land applies not only to the head of the family, but to every individual upon the tribal roll. So that each member of an Indian family consisting of a husband, wife, and four children receives as an allotment, aside from his or her surplus-land allotment, a homestead ranging in size from 80 acres, I believe, or is it 40

Mr. CURTIS. Forty acres. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From 40 or 80 acres to 160 acres. Mr. LONG. One hundred and sixty acres of average land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. One hundred and sixty acres of average land. So that, as the committee report, they may have in a family of six in the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation a homestead of more than 12,000 acres of land, depending in acreage upon the appraised value, as determined by Government agents, which, under the protection of this amendment, is absolutely inalienable.

Mr. CARTER. Twelve thousand acres? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Twelve thousand acres, averaging as to the price of the land from 25 cents to $6 an acre.

As I started out ot say, Mr. President, a year ago the Senate was in much the same condition that it is now in regard to matters connected with the Indian Territory. I for one felt that I was not competent, with the information then at hand, to deal finally with the matters connected with that Territory. The Senate felt likewise. Matters were bridged over, and a committee was appointed to visit the Indian Territory and gain such knowledge as possible upon the conditions there. That committee, of which I had the honor to be a member, I believe did their work conscientiously. I doubt if a committee has ever been sent from this body that tried, at least, to do more honest work than did that committee. I doubt very much the informa-tion contained in one of those letters that that committee was deceived as to real conditions.

The committee gave full and complete hearings, especially calling upon the Indians of the full blood to appear before the committee at public hearings and make their views known upon the subjects-matter in which they were interested. So far as chambers of commerce having influence is concerned, chambers of commerce were absolutely cut out, the committee proceeding upon the theory that it should see at first hand and hear the exact condition of affairs as they existed; and those conditions are much worse than they have been depicted here, and as different as night is from day.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to discuss what has been the cause of the conditions in the Indian Territory; but I can not refrain from saying that, in my judgment, much of the evil results there have been caused by our ignorant legislation. can say also that much of it has also been caused by ignorant administration of the laws which we have passed.

Mr. President, I only started to correct an erroneous impression that this was a wholesale removal of restrictions. This amendment, which was agreed to by the committee which visited the Indian Territory and afterwards agreed to by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate as the best possible solution of this matter of alienation, provides that after the 1st of July, from the surplus land of the Indians in the Indian Territory, all restrictions shall be removed. In other words, Mr. President, that any man who has an allotment in the Indian Territory consisting of one-half homestead and one-half surplus land shall after the 1st of July be privileged to go into the open market and sell his surplus land for the best price he can obtain, if he cares to sell for that price, retaining unto himself forever the homestead which has been allotted to him as a homestead.

There were many considerations which moved the committee in making that report. One consideration was that under the present system and law the Indian can have his restrictions removed individually, notwithstanding the fact that Congress has passed no general law removing restrictions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

I wish to correct the Senator in one respect. What the Senator states is true, unless the Indian is a full

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; unless he is of full blood. Mr. LONG. There is no power anywhere to remove the restrictions of a full blood under the present law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is true since the passage of the law of 1906.

Mr. LONG. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, under the ruling of the Interior Department, a fullblood Indian who had his restrictions removed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to the act of April 26, 1906, had them reimposed by that act unless he had disposed of his lands before that law took effect.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Both of the statements of the Senator are quite true. But what I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to was this: We were seeking to relieve a situation that now exists. Under the conditions as they now exist, and without reference to the McCumber amendment, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to remove the restrictions upon the alienation of Indian lands, but this can only be done by personal application in each individual case. The re-The result is what is called "the grafter;" the inevitable result is the grafter.

The Indian who is the subject of his wiles seldom thinks, in the first instance, of having his restrictions removed, but when he is approached by the land speculator, who enters into an agreement with him to present his case to the Secretary of the Interior, or rather to the Indian agent in the Indian Territory through whom the Secretary acts, and, by a system of wiles and deceits, or whatever may be the course, succeeds in getting an order from the Secretary to remove his restrictions. This is done by the speculator upon the promise that when those re-strictions are removed the land shall be sold to him for a specified price, which is far, far below the true value of the land, and far below the price the land would bring if it were sold in the open market by general sale. So we say that the present system is a system that is responsible for the land speculator, who has sought to despoil the Indian.

Under the present operation of the McCumber amendment the committee found this condition: That a family that had five, ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand acres of land had not the wherewithal to buy medicine at the drug store for their sick children. I remember in one case where a physician came before the committee-I think at Ardmore-and stated that he been called away fifteen or twenty miles into the countryand the other members of the committee who were present will recall the incident-where a family having an allotment, with five or six in the family, every one of whom had an allotment of the value of $5,000, were absolutely unable to provide money to pay the expenses of even a physician to visit them. were what might be called "land poor."

I remember another case, which, I think, was at Ardmore, where a man had a thousand acres of good land, and that man and his family were obliged to wear gunny sacks in place of shoes, because, having no control of his property, he could get no money and had not the credit wherewith to buy them proper clothing and shoes. Those are some of the conditions, Mr. President, with which we are called upon to deal.

Mr. BURKETT. Could he not obtain a loan upon his land? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; because under the law he could not encumber it and he could not make a living from it, as he had no means to buy material to work with. He could not buy the seed to put upon his land; he could not buy the machinery with which to work it.

Mr. BURKETT. Then there was no income from the land? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There was no income from the nd. Conditions like that, Mr. President, are what forced the conviction upon the committee that something ought to be done, not for the purpose of despoiling the Indian, not for the purpose of making him homeless, but for the purpose of putting him upon a plane so that he could stand side by side with his neighbor, where he could have an even show for his money, where he could have support for himself and his children, so that if he had a thousand acres of land in a homestead and another thousand acres of surplus land, the whole 2,000 acres might not lie idle and fruitless, but that he might sell a portion of the land and buy cattle and horses and seed and other material to make it valuable, and erect buildings and make a home upon his homestead, which by this amendment is made forever inalienable. Those were some of the considerations that moved this amendment.

Mr. LONG. And that he might be permitted to dispose of his allotment under the original agreement that he made with the Government when he took his land in severalty.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly so, Mr. President. I take a moment here to refer to that part of the discussion that has occurred. We lose sight of the fact that these are not Indian lands in the ordinary acceptation of the term. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] and other Senators have been dealing with this question as though these were Government lands, as though these were lands on a reservation upon which the Government had placed these Indians. Why, Mr. President, these Indians hold those lands by a title as indefeasible as any fee-simple title in the United States of America. Seventy-five years ago, when the deed passed under the seal of the United States and under the hand of the President, it put those lands in fee simple in those Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory. There was no question of an Indian reservation there, but every acre was paid for dollar for dollar and the fee-simple title granted. Yet we are dealing with those lands and we are dealing with those men as though they were Indians who had been placed upon a reservation and upon Government lands.

The Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes took their way into the Indian Territory reluctantly. They did not want to go. They had homes in the East; but the march of events rendered it necessary that they should move west of the Mississippi River. If some Senators in this body could have heard full-blood Indians, with the eloquence of a Logan, plead before the committee that their ancient rights should be given back to them; if you could have heard them protesting that every line of the legislation that we have written in contravention of the original agreement was unjust; if you could have heard them cite the treaty of 1832 and others, providing that they were to hold the lands within the boundaries of the Indian Territory as communal property as long as the grass should grow, the sun shine, or the water run, you would have wondered if perhaps we had not made some mistake in our Indian legislation.

But, Mr. President, they were happy, as they said before the committee—and I regret that the entire evidence that was taken before that committee has not been printed. Every word of it was taken down; every word of it to-day is in the Printing Office waiting to come here, and I regret that we have not got it—they still were happy under their tribal form of government. They held their property in common; their fields were in common. Wherever a man wanted to go and make a home, he could go and appropriate all the land he wanted, whether it was 1, whether it was 10, or whether it was 100 acres. Under the operation of that tribal system of government, Gen. Pleasant Porter, whose letter has been read here to-day, had, we were in-formed, a hundred improved farms within the limits of the Creek Nation.

But the Congress of the United States in its wisdom decided that that was not the right way for an Indian to live. decided that there should be no more Indians in the Indian Territory; that they should drop their old civilization.

I pause here to remark that these are not the ignorant Indians that we imagine. I have in my office in this building the printed book presented to that committee containing the written constitution-I was going to say as good as the Constitution of the United States, but I will not say that, but modeled upon the same lines—made seventy years ago. They have a written alphabet; they have upper and lower houses of their legislature. They had a paper published in the Cherokee language, was it

In the Cherokee language.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In the Cherokee language, until a few months ago, when it was suspended by order of the Secretary of the Interior, for what reason heaven only knows.

But, Mr. President, we said that the Indian must no longer be an Indian; that the tribal government should be broken up; that there should be no more communal property: Indian should stand as a citizen of the United States, and we entered into treaties and contracts with the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes. They demurred-and many of them to-day hold those treaties were negotiated and carried through by fraud—they demurred to taking the land in severalty. were satisfied with the condition of things as it had existed for seventy-five years in that country; but the Government of the United States said, "No; you must enter into these treaties and take your lands in severalty.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure. Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I was struck with the statement of the Senator from Wyoming that the publication of the Cherokee newspaper had been suspended by order of the Secretary of the Interior. I ask him if he has that order con-wenient so that he can read it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not that order; and I have the information only from the statements of those who are interested, and the statements of other interested parties who wanted authority to purchase the material, the Cherokee type, etc., so that they could start the paper again on their own account and have a publication in their own language. the fact as I heard it. I know nothing more about it. The simple fact is

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not germane to this discussion, but it may be of interest to state that the Cherokee Nation voted a medal to Sequoia for his literary work, which, I believe, is the only governmental recognition of literary work in the history of the American people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, Mr. President, resuming the argument, if it can be called an argument historically, the Congress of the United States decided that these Indians must quit their tribal relations. Demurring, they consented. They consented upon condition. They said: "We will give up the community interest which we have in this tribal property. The Government says we have to do it." The Government said to them: "If you will surrender the individual interest which you have in this tribal property, the lands of which have been held in common, we will give you, in your individual name, a certain amount of that land to be carved out and called an allotment; we will give you that allotment free as free can be, except as to certain restrictions which shall cover a few years ahead, during which you shall not dispose of it." That was the contract and agreement between the United States and the Indians.

I care not one whit for all the law that can be cited in the decisions of the Supreme Court, or elsewhere, as to the power of the United States to break that agreement.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. LONG. Bearing somewhat upon the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] some time since, I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Indians of the Indian Territory recognize the binding legal obligation of the restrictions in the supplemental agreements, and that they only object to the McCumber amendment which was enacted last year in violation of all those agreements?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The only Indians in the Indian Territory who do not recognize their binding effect are those who do not recognize the binding effect of any treaties since 1832.

Mr. President, I say I care not one whit for what any court in the world has decided as to the power of the Congress of the United States to break those agreements. I look at the mat-ter in a far broader way. Must we necessarily act in a certain way because the court says we have the power? I would act in a certain way because our pledged and plighted word to the other party to the contract says that we should act in that way. We should not use our power simply because we have it. should only use the power we have, be it little or much, along the lines of the just construction of the contracts between the Five Tribes and the Government of the United States.

We have said, in our agreements with these Indians, "If you take this land in severalty, you may dispose of it in a certain way in a certain time." That time was fast approaching when way in a certain time." That time was fast approaching when the Congress of the United States, a year ago, said, "We will modify that agreement upon which you took your lands in sev-eralty. It is true that you surrendered all your interest in your tribal lands; it is true that you took your individual allotments under our promise that you could dispose of or encumber them after the time stated; it is true that you have kept to the uttermost your part of the contract; but we have got the power, and we will not live up to ours. Instead of saying that you can alienate this land in July or August of this year, or, in the case of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation in 1907, 1908, or 1909, we will say that, having induced you to take these allotments, having compelled you to keep your part of the agreement, we will postpone the operation of our part of the agreement for twenty-five years longer."

I say, Mr. President, it makes not one whit of difference to me what the Supreme Court of the United States should decide as to our power in that respect. I say that if we have the power and exercise it it is a breach of faith and good morals which can not be justified.

It is a mistake, as I say, to think that all of these people are unable to look out for themselves. I challenge any man to go to any part of the United States and find a more capable, more honorable, more upright, and better educated set of men and women than he will find in the Indian Territory. How many of the States of this Union send ten or twenty or thirty or forty of their young men per annum at the charge of the State to the highest educational institutions in the land? Is there one? And yet, until we broke up their tribal government and until we ourselves said they should not spend tribal funds for that purpose, there was not a year when the Choctaw Nation did not have its young men, at the expense of the nation, in the eastern colleges and universities. These young men to-day are in that nation engaged in the practice of the law and other professions and in building up communities which would be an honor to any State.

What public school system in the United States is there that has, not only a compulsory-education law, but, in addition, says if the labor of the child is needed at home, the State shall pay the father or the mother the value of that labor? And yet you find that there the tribe pays into the family funds so much per month for the time the child is in attendance upon the public schools. They have the best compulsory-education law, believe, that is on the statute books of any nation.

I had thought that I had made the question of surplus lands clear, but it has been suggested that I take advantage of this opportunity to clarify it still further. The surplus land is the land aside from the homestead, and is land equal in value to the homestead, but not always equal in acreage.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.
Mr. CARTER. In order to make the question I had in mind more explicit, I understood the Senator to say that the land in question was all held as community property.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Originally.

Mr. CARTER. Originally; but a treaty was made by the tribe, whereby this community property was allotted to the In-The Senator has stated that, in making dians in severalty. the allotment, a certain portion thereof was homestead and a certain portion so-called "surplus land." I ask if the homestead I ask if the homestead allotment and the surplus land combined of all the Indians made the aggregate of the original community property

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not entirely; but it does in some of the nations. In the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations the amount of the allotment is so arranged that there was remaining out of the allotment something like 500,000 acres of coal lands; and I understand after all the allotments have been completed, both of the homestead and surplus lands, there will still remain of the Choctaw and Chickasaw lands about 2,000,000 acres unallotted.

Mr. CARTER. In whom does the title to those lands rest? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is still in common. The lands still remain in common and are to be sold after the allotments are all made.

. Mr. LONG. Authority has already been given to the Secretary of the Interior to sell the remaining lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They are still common lands and all are to be sold, but not until all allotments have been made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator state approximately how many acres of these surplus lands there are in the Indian Territory that would be affected by the amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It opens up substantially one-half of the Indian acreage of the Territory, except the 2,500,000 acres referred to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that, if I understand the proposition, if the McCumber amendment stands, then nearly one-half of the total area of the Indian Territory will not be subject to

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; not that, because the McCumber amendment refers only to the full-blood lands.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Approximately how many acres of land will be in that condition, where the State can not tax them?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is impossible to approximate the acreage, but there would be a very large percentage untaxed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There would be a vast area of land which the State could not tax.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. I thank the Senator for calling attention to that fact, because that is one of the reasons which entered into the conclusion at which the committee ar-

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit me?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. STONE. I am quite sure it is a fact that there are about 18,000 full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Our information was that there were something over 20,000.

Mr. STONE. Approximately 20,000, then. That would be the number of persons affected and who are now affected by the so-called "McCumber amendment."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. Mr. McCUMBER. How many?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Something over 20,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. Between twenty-two and twenty-four

Mr. STONE. I want to ask the Senator if he can state relatively the amount of surplus land as compared with the land covered by homesteads?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is substantially the same.
Mr. STONE. Half each way?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; about half each way. Of course the lands are divided according to the appraisement that is put on them by the Dawes Commission, which is put on simply for the purpose of comparison and not as indicating at all the true value of the land.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland] spoke of a question that had some influence with the committee in forming their conclusions. That was the question of taxation.

While, of course, the first consideration in treating of this matter should be the consideration of the welfare of the Indians themselves, there is another consideration that necessarily enters into this matter, and that is the one of public the consideration of the Indian Townstown according to the Fire Children Chi policy. The Indian Territory, occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes, is about to become a part of the new State of Oklahoma. There is not within the bounds of the Indian Territory a county government, a court district, a road district, a school district, or anything that enters into the modern municipal or county organization. There has been no authority to levy taxes and there is none now except in the towns upon the regularly ap-proved town sites. The consequence is that we have coming into the State, in the eastern half of Oklahoma and the whole of the Indian Territory, a tract of land where there are more than 600,000 people, with very little taxable property outside of the cities and towns, and they have to enter upon the support of county, district, and judicial government, and this in a place where it is a matter of record that the courts are more expenwhile it is a line with the same of the face of the earth.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. LONG. The Senator referred to the fact that these lands are about to become part of the new State of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that by the statehood law all these Indians, whether mixed or full bloods, are voters, can participate in all elections in the new State-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Every one of them.
Mr. LONG. Including voting for delegates to the constitutional convention and voting upon the question of the approval of the constitution after it is made?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Every one of them. Every one of them is a citizen of the United States, and a citizen of the State of Oklahoma, and as such citizen having an obligation to assist in the support and maintenance of their State and county and local governments, and yet we have there communities, the whole half of a State, perhaps thirty or forty counties, starting from the ground up without a dollar's worth of public improvements, without a road made, without a court-house built, without a school district established, and two-thirds of the taxable property outside the assessor's power.

In considering the matter of the removal of the restrictions I think that is a proper point to be taken into consideration. The Lord only knows how at the best those people are going to sustain their county and State governments. If all the land were subject to taxation at a reasonable rate, the burden would be hard enough, because never yet in the history of this nation has there been imposed upon any people the necessity of entering upon government without some foundation of taxable properry upon which to build. It is hard enough in any Territory being created into a State to assume the additional burdens of State government. But in all the Territories that we have ever admitted there has been a foundation. All the Territories have had their county governments running in shape, and usually with good county buildings and with taxable property. All the school districts have had their schoolhouses. There have been the judicial districts, with taxable property. But here we have to start from the ground up and start out and carve out a system with no foundation of taxable property upon which to rest it.

So, I say, I believe the question of policy is a proper one to be considered in connection with and secondary to the welfare of the Indians themselves.

Mr. BURKETT. Do I understand the Senator to say that all Indians who would be affected by this legislation are citizens and voters in the new State?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; not all of them; because when I speak of a citizen and voter, of course I do not mean a child 5 years old.

Mr. BURKETT. I did not mean that, either.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I mean only those of proper age, want the Senator from Nebraska to understand that no matter what the age of the child may be, that child has an allotment equal to the allotment of a citizen.

Mr. BURKETT. I understand; but you would not contemplate making a law to permit that child to alienate any rights to property?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no. Mr. BURKETT. Except under due process of law, through a guardian.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Through the courts. Mr. BURKETT. But I understand the Senator does say that the adults-persons over 21 years of age-who are affected by this legislation, do vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think only the male adults. Mr. BURKETT. The Senator contends that if they are able to attend to everybody else's business they ought to be able to attend to their own business?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think if they constitute the Government and vote the taxation, they should be responsible for where a portion of the revenue is to come from.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I had not contemplated saying anything, and I should not have said anything except for the fact that I was fearful that a misapprehension of the result and purpose of this amendment might find lodgment in the minds of Senators.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator for

Does the Senator from Wyoming think that these Indians, having exhausted their allotments, whether by sale or by losing them in any way, could, as citizens of the United States, go upon the public domain in other States and take up homesteads?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think they could if they did not impinge upon that part of the law which says you can not take a homestead if you own so many acres of land else-

Mr. HEYBURN. The question in my mind arose out of that situation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, having parted with their lands and never having exhausted their homestead right, would not they be in position to go into other States and exercise that right?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think they would be exactly in that position.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator from Idaho has the impression that under this proposed amendment the homesteads of the Indians in the Indian Territory are affected. The Indians will retain their homesteads, as provided in the supplemental agreements. There is no proposition pending to affect in any respect the homesteads of the Indians by blood.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the three of us are right, but I want to make my own answer to the Senator from Idaho, and that is this: I believe that an Indian in the Indian Territory, having eighty acres or a hundred acres of homestead under the allotment law could go upon the public lands of the United States, if that were all the land he had, and take a homestead under the public-land laws of the United States, keeping in mind the idea that "homestead" in the allotment law is an entirely different thing from "homestead" in the general land laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is just what I had in mind, that the quality of the estate which the Indian takes under the allotment law, which we are pleased to term a "homestead." a homestead such as is contemplated in the homestead law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. You might as well put in any other name as "homestead." It is merely a distinction.

Mr. HEYBURN. So that if the Indian becomes destitute, as it has been pictured here to-day that he would become destitute, either by his own improvidence or by being imposed upon, he will still have the right to go out on the public domain and take up a homestead.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. He does not need to go out, be-cause he has that much land left in the Indian Territory, which under this amendment is made absolutely inalienable. amendment does not allow the Indian to sell all his land. There is a certain proportion of his land that is allotted to him as a homestead, varying from eighty to a hundred and sixty or more acres of land-

Mr. HEYBURN. But is that a homestead within the meaning of the homestead act?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all; but that so many acres of land this amendment says he shall not dispose of under any

Mr. HEYBURN. It only goes to constitute an estate that is prohibitory against the exercise of the homestead law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No. It prohibits him from sell-

Mr. HEYBURN. It would also prohibit him from locating.

A man can not take up a homestead if he owns a certain number of acres of land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If he had only 80 acres he might, Mr. HEYBURN. He might take up a homestead to the extent of the difference between that and 160. So the Indian would not be entirely destitute.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is absolutely impossible. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Wyoming referred to the intellectual capacity of the Indians down there and their ability to take care of their own affairs. Did he have in mind the mixed bloods or the full bloods, or both in equal proportions?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would not want to have the conclusion reached that when I referred to the intellectual capacity I meant that was an average capacity to which I referred. I simply spoke of those things as illustrations of the capacity of the Indian to reach the higher ground.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the average among the mixed bloods is very much higher than the average among the full bloods?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should be inclined to doubt that somewhat. I think a full-blood Indian is likely to be of as high average intelligence as the half blood.

Mr. SPOONER. And in education?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They all have their schools. It is seldom you can find a full blood who has not attended their schools, and the Indians have some of their own schools that are equal to academies in any of the States and Territories.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me to ask him, to what extent did the representation from the full bloods ask of the committee the removal of the restrictions?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can not say as to that. I think a majority of them wanted the restrictions kept on their homesteads. The majority, I think, wanted the restrictions removed on their surplus lands. A large representation, or what assumed to represent a large body of full bloods, brought before us in one of the towns, claiming to represent something like a thousand full bloods—Mr. Jackson was his name, was it not? wanted the restrictions removed upon everything that they had. But that is not pertinent to this discussion, because the reason was that they were not satisfied with the allotting proposition. They wanted to return to their old communal way of Consequently they wanted the restrictions removed at once, so that they could sell out everything they had and go somewhere else, as the Senator from North Dakota suggested this afternoon, and purchase land which they could hold in common.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator form any idea as to the relative number of full bloods who desire the removal of the

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; I do not think I could. It would be impossible for me to say. There are the two opinions. Governor Porter, who of course is not a full blood, but represented the full bloods before us, and their committee did not seem to be in favor of removing the restrictions, although at the time the committee was before us-

Mr. LONG. Is it not a fact that the full bloods who opposed the removal of restrictions upon their surplus lands did so because they did not want to pay taxes on these lands?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was almost universal that that was one of the reasons, that they did not want their lands to become subject to taxation.

Mr. SPOONER. They do not differ very much in that respect from the white man.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not much. That observation was called out several times during our hearings.

Mr. SPOONER. My recollection was that last winter it appeared that while it would seem to be admitted that the re-strictions ought not to be removed from the full bloods—there were about 24,000-is that the Senator's understanding

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Twenty to twenty-four thousand, as near as we could ascertain from the rolls.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator understand that Governor Porter, who represented the full bloods before the committee in opposition to the removal of the restrictions as applied to them, represents them in this paper which was read this afternoon in opposition?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The 24,000?
Mr. SPOONER. The full bloods.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; he simply represented the Creeks. The 24,000 includes them all.

Mr. SPOONER. How many Creeks are there? How many does he represent-full bloods?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know. I suppose there are about 7,000 of the Creeks.

Mr. CURTIS. There are only 10,000 Indians of blood enrolled in the Creek Nation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There are about 7,000 full bloods. Mr. McCUMBER. About one-third of the entire number of full bloods. Mr. SPOONER. What is there before the Senate or what was there before the committee to show the attitude of the full bloods in the other tribes in relation to the removal? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There was before the committee a variety of opinions by full bloods, not only of the other tribes, but of the very full bloods that Governor Porter was representing. Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator from Wyoming able to say that it is the desire of the great body of the full bloods that these restrictions shall be removed?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; I can not say that, because I do not know that we had enough information.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose it is the universal desire of the white men in the country that the restrictions shall be removed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I do not think it is.

Mr. SPOONER. Pretty much so?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to remove an impression which seems to exist here. The grafter, notwithstanding the letters of Mr. Mott and of General Porter, is not anxious to have the restrictions removed.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not have in mind the grafter when I spoke of the white men.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Many white men, who are perfectly honest, are anxious to have the restrictions removed.

Mr. SPOONER. So that the land can be taxed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And they want the opportunity to purchase homes where they can and where they choose. grafter and the speculator profits by the present laws and condition of affairs, because whatever he buys he buys at a very much reduced price compared to its real value.

Mr. McCUMBER. But after he has bought it and after he has a contract from all the Indians or a great number of them under the present law, would it not be for his interest to have the restrictions removed so that he could obtain immediate

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Perhaps at some future time. But I am speaking of the present moment.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose these lands are rapidly advancing in value

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; they have gotten so that now lands in Indian Territory are worth 30 to 50 per cent of what like lands in Kansas are worth.

Mr. SPOONER. And they will probably continue to advance?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They will probably continue to ad-

And there will be that difference in the price of lands in the Indian Territory and in Kansas because the titles in the Indian Territory are clouded by the McCumber amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I doubt if that accounts for the entire difference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question for information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has made clear the difficulties of the new State, because of the fact that certain of the land is not subject to taxation. Bearing in mind that this amendment which is attacked covers nothing but the surplus of the full bloods, I would like to ask him what percentage that surplus of the full bloods bears to the entire acreage of the State?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can not answer that question because the premises are wrong.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would it be even 1 per cent?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Speaking more especially in regard to local taxation, it would be more than 1 per cent. It would be more than 20 per cent, in my judgment. the counties within the present boundaries of the Indian Territory. Of course the Senator recognizes at once that his first premise was not entirely accurate.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is that? I will stand corrected in any respect if the Senator will point out the error.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator said this amendment affected only the lands of the McCumber amendment—the surplus lands.

Mr. McCUMBER. My amendment affected simply the surplus lands. It continued in some instances upon the home-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that it affected the homestead at all, but it affected simply the surplus. If it affects only the surplus, then it is a question how much that surplus would add to the taxable property of the State.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It would add very greatly. Of course I am not prepared to say how much.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not know but that the Senator had

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not the information.

Mr. McCUMBER. I myself do not know.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there are other matters connected with the report of the committee to which I shall wish to call attention at a later time.

Mr. LONG. Before the Senator from Wyoming resumes his seat, I would like to ask him to state the effect of the McCumber amendment in the making of contracts for the sale of lands; that is, contracts for deeds to be made after the 1st of next July, when by the terms of the original agreements the land is alienable.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Whether it is the working of the McCumber amendment or not, whether the parties are justified But I do know it to or not in their contention, I do not know. be the fact that contracts are being largely made to take effect at a future day. Contracts are being made, deeds are being given, to take effect at a future date, and wills are being made. Large amounts of money are being expended, and, to say the least, clouds are being cast upon the title of very much of the Indian land under those conditions. Now, whether or not a man is legally justified in concluding that the McCumber amendment is unconstitutional, or, if it is unconstitutional, that he acquires any right, I am not prepared to say. I can only give the Senate the conditions as they exist, and the result will be, if the Indian is not deprived of his land entirely, that his title will be so clouded that the value of the land will never be what it should be.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the Senator's permission, I want to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long] as to whether or not it is because of this amendment that this great effort is being made to buy up the land. If the premises are true as stated by the Senator from Kansas, the very fact that we have extended the restrictions and made it harder to purchase brings more people into the field for the purpose of purchasing. I think that the letter which has been read here is a complete answer to that proposition. An organized effort is being waged for the purpose of securing the abolition of all restrictions upon other than the homesteads. That organized effort emanates from the Territory. Promises have been made, and it comes to me directly, that they will succeed in eliminating restrictions upon all but the homesteads this session, and, acting upon that assumption, a great many people have gone all over that country and are securing deeds with the understanding that they will be able to destroy the safeguard of the Indians in this restriction and obtain a clear title after this Congress has adjourned. That is the reason why, in my opinion, so many are making this house-to-house canvass, with their notaries accompanying them, and hired by the month, in order to get a contract for the deed, hoping to hold the Indian to the contract and before long dispose of these restrictions and then get title.

If there is a failure to secure a removal of the restrictions, and if they believed that they could not remove them in the very near future, I am doubtful if that business would not become very much less in a very short time.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAY. Suppose the McCumber amendment is repealed, what restrictions under existing law would prevail preventing the Indians from selling their land, and when would those restrictions expire?

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment related only to the surplus, and some of the restrictions have already expired-where they are allowed to sell one-fourth in so many years, one-fourth in five years afterwards, and so on. In some instances it would be, I think, about fifteen years before all of the restrictions would be removed.

Mr. CLAY. These were restrictions that were existing at the time the lands were allotted to the Indians?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And the restrictions probably could be enforced by Congress regardless of the fact that the Indians were made citizens and regardless of the fact that the Territory was organized into a State?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true. Mr. CLAY. Now, I ask the Senator this question: Could we impose upon the Indians any other restrictions than those which existed at the time they became citizens of the United States and at the time their lands were allotted to them in severalty?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is the crux of the whole matter, whether we can or whether we can not. If the statement is true that they are still wards of the Government, then my opinion is that we can absolutely. So the question reaches back to the question whether they are still wards of the Government.

We are treating them as such in this bill from beginning to end. There is not a single page of it that does not recognize their condition as being one subservient to and under the control of the Government. If the bill is legal from one end to the other, it must be upon the assumption of the relation of guardian and ward.

Even suppose that we grant them the rights of citizens, I do not think that that of itself releases them from the governing power of Congress over their property, especially where the tribe still exists. The Government can not recognize a tribe of white citizens in the United States. The Government has continued the tribal relations of these Indians, declaring that they shall be recognized as tribes and their chiefs hold their positions. It could not continue them as a tribe, whether it is for the purpose simply of preventing a land grant going to a railway, unless it continued them upon the assumption that they were still subject to control and were still the wards of the Government.

I have a case here that was decided some ten years ago, Wiggans v. Connelly. It is a case where the Government made a treaty in 1862 with the Indians, and in that treaty it declared that five years from that date they should become citizens of the United States with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of It also provided that when they became citizens they should have the right to alienate their lands. It gave them a deed of their lands, a patent, reciting the fact of this treaty, and giving them the right to sell when they became citizens.

Under the provision of that law they obtained complete title to their property, but before the citizenship had been destroyed entirely, at least on account of the delay in its being ratified by Congress, the Government made another treaty with the Indians in connection with other tribes, and in that treaty it provided that a sale could not be made until after every minor became of age. That was changing the right to sell. The court held that they were still wards of the Government, and that still continuing their tribal relations, while they might be citizens they were still subject to the control of Congress, and it upheld the second provision which continued the limitation. It is not on all fours with and parallel to this case, and yet it is along that line.

I will ask whether or not the first treaty was Mr. LONG. ratified by Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. The first treaty was ratified by Congress. Mr. LONG. I thought the Senator said that before the first treaty was ratified a second treaty was made. Mr. McCUMBER. No; the first treaty was ratified by Con-ress. The treaty was made in 1862. The citizenship was to commence in 1867. The ratification did not take place for several years after the treaty was made, but it was ratified.

What case is that, I ask the Senator? Mr. LONG. Mr. McCUMBER. In the case of Wiggans v. Connelly.

Mr. LONG. In what report?

Mr. McCUMBER. In 163 United States, page 57.

I am taking up too much time, I know, but I wish to answer just one proposition by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark]. The Senator states that irrespective of what the United States Supreme Court may hold in regard to our power to change the contract, nevertheless he considers that we are morally bound to carry into effect the contract and to grant the Indians the right to make a sale in accordance with the terms of the original contract.

Mr. President, there is a moral obligation upon every citizen to comply with his contracts and upon the Government to comply with its contracts. There is a moral obligation which is superior to that, and that is that when a guardian makes a contract for his ward and ascertains that that contract is not for the interest of his ward he should abrogate the contract of his own volition. If we, as a nation, are certain that the contract which we made is not for the interest of our ward, then there is a higher obligation upon our part-of our own motion to cancel and change that agreement.

amendment on page 34.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. That it is general legislation. It changes existing law

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest the discussion has revealed that it is simply carrying out treaty stipulations with Indian tribes. It is germane to the title of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no treaty stipulation with the tribes.

The Supreme Court has decided that the only thing we have with the tribes now is an agreement, and the law putting it in force is simply an act of Congress.

Mr. LONG. I will ask my colleague if it will be convenient for him to withhold his point of order for the present. I desire to make some observations on the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. If convenient to the Senator from Minnesota that this provision should be passed over for this evening, it can be taken up first in the morning.

Mr. CLAPP. I hardly think so. There are several amendments here that Senators were interested in, and I have advised them that this question would occupy the afternoon. They are not in the Chamber. I think if there is to be any further discussion we had better have it now, if it is convenient for the Senator from Kansas to proceed at this time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] said that, in his opinion, there was some doubt as to the validity of the amendment which he had incorporated in the Five Civilized Tribes act of last year. I will state that, in the opinion of those who have given consideration to the question in the Indian Territory, there is no doubt of its invalidity. It is believed there that, those Indians being citizens validity. It is believed there that, those Indians being citizens of the United States, Congress could not in 1902 make agreements with them providing that the restrictions on the alienation of their lands would expire in the Cherokee Nation in five years from August 13, 1902; in the Creek Nation in five years from July 1, 1902, and in the Seminole Nation immediately upon the delivery of the patents, and then in 1906, without the consent of the Indians, extend the period of nonalienation for twenty-five years. After the 1st of July next in the Creek Nation, and after August 14 next in the Cherokee Nation, sales will be made notwithstanding the McCumber amendment.

But such sales will not be made for the full market value of the lands, because the persons purchasing the lands will have to litigate in order to clear the title. The courts must determine whether Congress had the power to extend the period. It is a cloud upon the title of all the lands there. is that speculators will purchase the lands believing that the amendment will be declared beyond the power of Congress to enact. Without this amendment and under the original agreements they could at the expiration of these periods this year sell their lands in the open market for full value to persons desiring to purchase them, not for speculation, but to make homes for themselves and their families.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this cloud which is placed in what is called the "McCumber amendment" lead the Indians to sacrifice their lands?

Mr. LONG. They want to sell their lands. Mr. SPOONER. Will they sell at some sacrifice?

They will. Mr. LONG.

Mr. SPOONER. At very much less than the land is worth?
Mr. LONG. They will. They have made contracts, which may not be valid, but contracts which they will keep. There was evidence presented to the committee showing that persons have been making these contracts on the theory that the McCumber amendment was invalid and would be declared so by the courts.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. The Indian thinking it valid?
Mr. LONG. The Indian has a homestead sufficient for his purpose and wished to dispose of his surplus land in order to improve his homestead. He will be unable to get full value for the land on account of the cloud cast upon the title by the legislation of 1906.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Indian sell his land under the circumstances for very much less than its value?

Mr. LONG. The lands have not yet been sold. The committee was not advised as to the nature of the individual contracts.

Mr. SPOONER. The prices were fixed, I suppose.
Mr. LONG. The prices, I suppose, in many instances are xed. The sales can not take place until the expiration of the periods designated in the supplemental agreements, but after those periods have expired, after the time fixed Indians could dispose of their lands under the original agreements, the lands will be sold notwithstanding the McCumber amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Are payments made now on the contracts by the purchaser?

Mr. LONG. I do not know as to that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that there were abundant statements made before the committee that partial payments were being made.

Mr. DEPEW. Is possession of the land delivered to the pur-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not ordinarily. I think one man spoke of having contracted for 900 pieces of land. Mr. SPOONER. Was there a substantial payment or a nominal payment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was merely a nominal payment, Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator able to state whether they were sales with reference to the real value of the land, or whether they were substantially sacrificial sales?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They were substantially sacrificial sales, and, I think, very largely sales that were made with the belief on the part of the grantee that no matter whether the Indian could or could not lawfully conclude not to complete the bargain, yet he would do it, moved by a sense of honor, which is very keen with those people; that while the law might not compel him to make the transfer, still when the time came he would make it in order to perfect the bargain,

Mr. LONG. The Senator from North Dakota has referred to the Heff case. I wish only briefly to refer to it again. It is the latest expression of the Supreme Court upon this very vexed question of the control and government of the Indians. The general allotment act of 1887 provided:

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside.

It also further provided that they should be citizens of the United States. In 1897, ten years later, Congress passed an act prohibiting any person from selling or giving away disposing of malt or spirituous liquors to Indians, providing for prosecution in the United States district court, thus giving power to the National Government to control the Indian, not-withstanding the act of 1887, which subjected him to the jurisdiction of the laws of the State or Territory in which he might

The question in the Heff case was whether Congress, having parted with the control over the Indian in the act of 1887, could reassume control or guardianship over him by the act of, 1897, passed ten years later. That was the point decided in the case, and the Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon that question, said:

that question, said:

It is said that commerce with the Indian tribes includes commerce with the members thereof, and Congress, having power to regulate commerce between the white men and the Indians, continues to retain that power, although it has provided that the Indian shall have the benefit of and be subject to the civil and criminal laws of the State and shall be a citizen of the United States, and therefore a citizen of the State. But the logic of this argument implies that the United States can never release itself from the obligation of guardianship; that so long as an individual is an Indian by descent Congress, although it may have granted all the rights and privileges of national and therefore State citizenship, the benefits and burdens of the laws of the State, may at any time repudiate this action and reassume its guardianship and prevent the Indian from enjoying the benefit of the laws of the State and release him from obligations of obedience thereto. Can it be that because one has Indian, and only Indian, blood in his veins he is to be forever one of a special class over whom the General Government may, in its discretion, assume the rights of guardianship which it has once abandoned, and this whether the State or the individual himself consents? We think the reach to which this argument goes demonstrates that it is unsound.

That is in regard to the personal rights of the Indian, the

That is in regard to the personal rights of the Indian, the question being whether Congress, once having given over to the State or to the Territory the control of these Indians, could, ten years later, reassume guardianship over the Indians just like Congress, having provided in the original agreements that the Indians in Indian Territory could sell their lands within certain fixed periods, could, in violation of those agreements, extend the periods without the consent of the Indians, reassume guardianship over him, and modify the original agreements. In this case, called "Matter of Heff" (197 U. S., 508), the court further said:

the court further said:

But it is unnecessary to pursue this discussion further. We are of the opinion that when the United States grants the privileges of citizenship to an Indian, gives to him the benefit of and requires him to be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State, it places him outside the reach of police regulations on the part of Congress; that the emancipation from Federal control thus created can not be set aside at the instance of the Government without the consent of the individual Indian and the State, and that this emancipation from Federal control is not affected by the fact that the lands it has granted to the Indian are granted subject to a condition against alienation and encumbrance, or the further fact that it guarantees to him an interest in tribal or other property.

Mr. President I do not contend that because these Indians.

Mr. President, I do not contend that because these Indians were made citizens of the United States in 1901 that all agreements made after that time restricting their power of aliena-tion are null and void. I do claim that when they took their allotments in severalty they should have a right to dispose of them according to the contract then made, and that it can not be modified, changed, or abrogated without the consent of the In-

There is another case to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if the Heff case did not limit it to the police jurisdiction?

Mr. LONG. It did; that was the only point involved in that case.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; and that was all the court had to decide.

Mr. LONG. But the right of liberty guaranteed to a citizen is no more sacred than the right of property guaranteed to a citizen as well. The right of liberty and the right of property are given to the citizen of the United States, and Congress can not take such rights away by subsequent legislation without the consent of the Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas, so that I may have his position clearly, does the Senator contend that the relation of guardian and ward between the Government and the Indian tribes of the Indian Territory has ceased to exist?

Mr. LONG. I do most emphatically.

Mr. McCUMBER. And also that it has ceased to exist as to the Indians of Kansas, the Senator's own State?

Mr. LONG. As to those who have taken their allotments. Mr. McCUMBER. Practically all of the Indians now in the United States, with the exception of a very few tribes, have been declared citizens of the United States.

Mr. LONG. The tribes in the Indian Territory are different from the others. In the general allotment act there is a trust period of twenty-five years, and not until the end of that trust period does the Indian secure a patent, a real patent, to the land,

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the Indian is declared to be a citizen from the time he takes his allotment. That is what I mean.

Mr. LONG. Yes; that was decided in this case.
Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; from the time he takes his allotment, irrespective of the limitation upon his power to sell. That being the case, does the Senator think the Government has the legal right to appropriate money for the support of Indian schools for those Indians who are absolute citizens of the United States and of the States?

Mr. LONG. That is a different proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I am asking the Senator so as to get his opinion.

Mr. LONG. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the proposition of our power. I am asking the Senator if he so thinks. He does not need to answer if he does not desire to do so.

Mr. LONG. I am in the same position in regard to that power that the Senator is in regard to his amendment. He doubts the validity of his amendment, and I doubt our power in that respect.

.Mr. McCUMBER. I do not-

Mr. LONG. I am not convinced that we have not that power. But, so far as these lands are concerned, I am of the opinion that the agreements made with these Indians are valid and that they can not be abrogated or changed by the United States without the consent of the Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. I doubt the power; I have doubts about the power myself; but I doubt it because I am doubtful as to whether that relation has become extinguished. If the relation is extinguished, then there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that we have no right to appropriate money for educating one class of American citizens differing from another class. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. LONG. So far as the Indians in the Indian Territory are concerned, that relation has ceased; but the agreements made, by which they agreed to take their lands in severalty, are valid and will be upheld by the courts.

Without going into a discussion of the case, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the case of Jones v. Meehan, 175 United States, page 1, in which it is held that the construction of a treaty made with an Indian tribe is a judicial question, and that, notwithstanding subsequent legislation by Congress, land acquired under a valid treaty that had no restriction as to alienation could not be affected by subsequent legislation by Congress or by the executive department.

I have but little further to say in regard to the general policy covered by this amendment. I believe that it is for the best interest of the Indians in the Indian Territory that the McCumber amendment be repealed. I believe that unless it is repealed it will result in much litigation after the 1st of next July, when, according to the original agreements made with those Indians, the periods of alienation begin to expire. I believe, instead of turning this matter over to the courts to determine, instead of continuing the cloud upon the titles of the land in the Territory, Congress should undo what it did one year ago and repeal that amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to delay the adjournment to-night, but I should like to detain the Senate about ten minutes in discussing this question.

I believe that the McCumber amendment has been of great benefit to the full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory—I speak only in regard to the full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory. I believe it would be a great mistake to adopt the amendment reported by the Senate committee and repeal the McCumber amendment in the act of 1906. I wish to cite but one or two cases to show that it would be against the interests of the full-blood Indians to adopt the pending amendment.

After very careful consideration, a year ago Congress removed the restrictions upon certain members of the Cherokee tribe of Indians; and I want to call your attention to two cases to show the result. One was the case of Betsey Gallicatcher. She owned 130 acres of land. The restrictions were removed and she sold that land for $2,350. There were twentyeight producing wells on it. Eight of them were flowing and twenty were being pumped. Her income from the royalty on those oil wells amounted to $39 a day, or $14,245 a year; and yet she sold that land for $2,350. I cite another case. Indian woman, Senah Oo yu sut tah, owned 50 acres of land. She sold it for $1,500 after the restrictions were removed. There were eight flowing wells on that 50 acres. Her income was $2,847 a year from the royalty alone; and yet, as I have said, she sold the land for $1,500. I could, if time permitted, cite you to fourteen similar cases in the Cherokee Nation the very Indians that would be affected by this amendmentwhose lands were sold at from one-third to one-eighth of their Pass this amendment and you will rob nine-tenths of white. Tass this amendment and you will for infections of the full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory of their land.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether he knows what the facts are in those cases about the contract of sale; that is, whether those cases were cases in which the so-called "grafter" had gone to the Indians in advance and got a contract from them that he should have the privilege of buying that property provided he could get the restrictions removed?

Mr. CURTIS. I understand not. I am informed that the Indians did not know that the restrictions were removed; that persons came to Congress and represented that these people were qualified and got Congress to remove the restrictions; and that then, while the bill was pending for ratification, the people who wanted to secure the land ran some of the Indians down into Arkansas, had deeds executed for the land, and took possession of it, and filed the deeds as soon as the act was approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to know if the Senator does not think that the parties who were wronged in those transactions could have gotten a better price for their property if there had been no restriction on it, so that everybody could have gone and bid on the land in the open market?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not believe that those people should have been permitted to sell their lands at all.

Now, one more word on the legal proposition. The difficulty with my colleague and with other Senators who have been speaking on this amendment is that they fail to distinguish between the civil and political rights and the property rights of the Indians. It is true that when Congress once loses control of the Indian it can not again assume control of him by any act of Congress; but I maintain here that up to the time we lose control of the land of the Indian we have the right to change the condition and extend the time of the restrictions; That is, Congress in its wisdom at any time before the jurisdiction of the United States has ceased over the lands can increase the restrictions as well as remove them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Kansas permit an interruption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have the views of the Senator from Kansas as to exactly what additional right was conferred when we conferred by legislative enactment upon the people of the Indian Territory citizenship, including the rights and privileges and immunities of other citizens of the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think that we conferred one single additional right to them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then the Senator holds to the position that when we said in the law they are made citizens of the United States and given all the rights, privileges, and immunities of other citizens, that was an idle line in the law?

Mr. CURTIS. I do, except, perhaps, when Oklahoma becomes a State and the Indians are made a part of that State, they will have the right to vote at general elections, which right they might not have enjoyed but for that amendment to the act of

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. One other question only, called out by the answer of the Senator. At the time that citizenship was conferred by express legislation was there any proposition as to the Indian Territory becoming a State, either as a part of the State of Oklahoma or otherwise?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, I think it had been discussed; yes. I base my contention in regard to the lands of the full bloods upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the Rickert case. This was the case of an Indian to whom an allotment had been made under the act of 1887-the very act that makes the Indians of the Indian Territory citizens of the United States. That act was amended, and under it they were made citizens.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but the act to which I referred was a later act, in 1901.

Mr. CURTIS. The act of 1901 amended the act of 1887.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And I should like to have the Senator, while he is speaking of the Rickert case, explain, of course in his own way, if he sees any difference between the rights of an Indian as to land to which he has no patent and the rights of an Indian as to land which is patented in the tribe by the United States Government.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not believe there is any difference, for this reason: The patent which was given to the Five Civilized Tribes was issued to them by reason of treaties; and the Supreme Court decided that the patent must conform to the terms of the treaty. The Indians who hold their land by reason of a treaty have just as sacred a title as have the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes who have patents.

When we entered into agreements with the Five Civilized Tribes we put into such agreements substantially the same conditions and restrictions that are contained in the act of 1887. What were they? That for the period of five years in the Cherokee country, for the period of five years in the Creek country, after the ratification of said agreements, and for the period of one year after the date of the patent in the Choctaw and Chickasaw countries, those Indians could not contract for the sale of or otherwise dispose of or mortgage their land. Congress, by reason of that agreement, held control of the Indian property for five years; and I maintain that under this Rickert decision, up to the expiration of five years, after the ratification of the Cherokee and Creek agreements, if we discover we have made a mistake, we have a right to extend the time of restric-Why? Because it is the guardian dealing with his ward. There is no vested right of any outside person.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me for a question? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. As I have said before, I do not interrupt in any spirit of criticism, but to get the Senator's views. What rights, if any, does the Senator contend the Government would have in that property beyond the mere right to extend the restrictions? Would the Government have a right after that to add any other burden, to charge that property with a price which the Indian must pay before he would get his patent?

No. The Government is the guardian of the Mr. CURTIS. Indians and of their property, and that guardianship does not exist, except only until the time fixed in that limitation expires; but up to the time it does expire Congress has full control of that property and may extend the time, if it thinks the interest of the Indian requires it. Congress has the right, it has the power, and it is its duty to fully protect the interest of the Indian.

Mr. CLAPP. Then the Senator contends that anything which the Government felt was in the interest of the Indians as to their rights in that property, whether it was an extension of the time of the restriction or anything else, if it were justified by the plea that it was in the interest of the Indians, after that trust patent was issued within the five years, could be done?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; because these Indians had no greater rights than those to whom patents had been issued under the act of 1887.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Up to 1904 the restrictions on alienation applied to intermarried white citizens and freedmen-

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. STONE. Exactly as to the citizens of the Indian tribes.
By an act passed in the year 1904 restrictions on alienation as to freedmen and intermarried white adults were removed and they were permitted to sell their surplus lands. Does the Senator from Kansas hold that Congress could now impose restrictions upon the alienation of the surplus lands of those

Mr. CURTIS. No; because we removed the restrictions to take effect upon the passage of that act of Congress.

Mr. STONE. Yes. Mr. CURTIS. Bu But I maintain if Congress had placed the five-year limitation in the act, and within the five years had discovered that a mistake had been made, then it would have the right, so far as the Indian is concerned, to extend the time, because the Government is the guardian of the Indian and has control of his property.

Mr. STONE. I see; but, pressing the inquiry further, the Senator concedes the Government can not now impose restrictions upon the alienation of land owned by intermarried whites and freedmen because they were removed by the act of 1904. By the same token, how can you enlarge restrictions imposed upon any surplus lands of another class of citizens of the same country ?

Mr. CURTIS. Because in the one case Congress lost jurisdiction the minute it released them, while in the other it held jurisdiction of their property for five years; and if it discovered before any outside vested rights attached that it had made a mistake, then it would have a right to correct that mistake.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. While the Senator is on that line, will he allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator believe that after the removal of the restrictions, but before any outside right had attached, before the property had been sold, the Government could still, in its position as guardian, attach conditions to the land?

Mr. CURTIS. If the period had not expired, yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But if the period had expired?

Mr. CURTIS. I doubt it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will give this illustration: For instance, to-day the lands of the Indians in the Indian Territory are subject to sale. On the theory of the Senator that Congress is still the guardian of the Indian, and the Indian has not parted with the title to the land, and no outside rights have intervened, could Congress reassume the guardianship of the lands and place restrictions upon them?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so, because the limitation would have expired and we would have lost control.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But, under the Senator's theory, would not our duty as guardian of the Indian, if we are his guardian, and having his property unencumbered, compel us to put on those restrictions, and, under the Senator's theory, would we not be authorized to do so?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not go quite that far. I think I am sustained in the position I take by the decisions of the Supreme

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me for a ques-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas, Mr. President, in the case of a full-blood Indian, the restrictions as to whose property have been removed by the Secretary of the Interior, can the restrictions be reimposed by the McCumber amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, does the Senator know that the Department has ruled that they can be?

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the Department has so held it was wrong. I think if the Senator will read the act of 1906 he will see that it recognizes the right of the Indian from whom restrictions had already been removed to control his property.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will read the decision of the Department, if the Senator cares to listen to it.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not question that the decision has been made, but in my judgment the Department has made several decisions relating to the Indian Territory that are not in accordance with the law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I entirely agree with the Senator

Mr. CURTIS. These Indians are yet the wards of the nation, in a condition of pupilage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition. That is what I contend is true of the full-blood Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, with whom we are now dealing. The Indians who hold lands under the act of 1887 do so with the consent and authority of the United States. So do the Indians in the Indian Territory.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long], if the junior Senator from Kansas
[Mr. Curtis] will allow me, if the solemn statement made by the Supreme Court, which he has just quoted, that these people are still wards of the Government is, in his opinion, correct?

Mr. LONG. I am of the opinion that under a later decision of the Supreme Court, in 197 United States Reports, which I cited in my remarks, the Indians of the Indian Territory have been released from the condition which they occupied prior to the passage of the act of 1901.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the whisky case?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not there some difference between the power of the Government to maintain control over the habits of the Indians and over the property of the Indians?

Mr. LONG. As was stated by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp], if there is an obligation by the Government higher than the control of the Indian as to his appetite, I do not know what it is. Congress evidently recognized this in the act of 1897 when it attempted to reimpose on the Indians restrictions which it had released by the act of 1887. The Supreme Court decided that Congress did not have that power, having once released its control.

Mr. SPOONER. The one is a question of policy and the other is a question of law. I suppose it might be claimed that among the privileges and immunities of other citizens the Indians acquired the indefeasible right to drink.

Mr. LONG. They acquired the indefeasible right, under the act of 1887, to be treated as any other citizens of the United States, and not as a distinct class.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think it was possible that the Supreme Court could have held that the restrictions involved in the case which his colleague is reading from could have operated as an exemption from State taxation, except upon the theory that the Indian still continued to sustain peculiar relations to the Government which had not been operative as to his property?

Mr. LONG. The exemption from taxation in the Rickert case was due to the fact that title had not yet passed to the Indians—that it was a trust patent. The United States still held the land in trust and would hold it until the end of twenty-five years, and during that period the State of South Dakota had no right to levy taxes upon the property held in trust for the benefit of the Indians. That is all that case decides, as I understand; and the personal property, which was also claimed to be exempt from taxation, was property that belonged to the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. Yet, if the Indian to whom an allotment was made in 1887 died, his land descended to his heirs; and that is exactly the case in the Indian Territory. But I desire to read from this opinion:

These Indians are yet wards of the nation, in a condition of pupilage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition. They occupy these lands with the consent and authority of the United States, and the holding of them by the United States under the act of 1887 and the agreement of 1889, ratified by the act of 1891, is part of the national policy by which the Indians are to be maintained as well as prepared for assuming the habits of civilized life, and ultimately the privileges of citizenship.

In the Heff case the court points out the difference, and it

But it is said that the Government has provided that the Indians' title shall not be alienated or encumbered for twenty-five years, and has also stipulated that the grant of citizenship shall not deprive the Indian of his interest in tribal or other property, but these are mere property rights and do not affect the civil or political status of the allottees.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether there is a difference in the grantors of the patents to the lands to the Five Civilized Tribes and the grantors in a patent to the lands of which he is speaking?
Mr. McCUMBER. The grantee, you mean?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The grantor.

Mr. CURTIS. The same conditions substantially were contained in the agreements made with the Five Tribes, so far as alienation and incumbrance are concerned, that were contained in the patents issued under the act of 1887.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but my question was not, I think, understood. Does the Government of the United States issue the patents to the lands to the Indians to whom he has been referring, outside— Mr. CURTIS. They do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand that the Government of the United States is the grantor of all these patents outside of the allotments in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the United States is not the grantor of the patents issued in the Indian Territory; and I should like to ask the Senator—

Mr. CURTIS. But the United States joins in the patents issued in the Indian Territory, and Congress went so far as to authorize the issuing of valid patents by the Secretary of the Interior in case the chief of the nation refused to sign.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; that was to cure a delin-quency on the part of the chief of the nation. But the patent is issued from the nation that owns the land in fee to the Indian who takes it in allotment, and I think perhaps a distinction might be made between the cases.

Mr. CURTIS. Perhaps.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming where the chief gets the authority?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is community property, and the chief is the executor.

Mr. McCUMBER.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. He gets his authority to transfer the property of the tribe the same as the President gets his authe property of the tribe the same as the President gets ins authority to transfer the property of the nation. But as to where the authority comes from that is not to the question, I think.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could the chief make the deed unless Congress gave him authority?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think he could without doubt. I think the chief could make the deed if the tribe said that their lands should be so deeded among themselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then one must acknowledge, if I may take the time of the Senator from Kansas further

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. He must acknowledge that the tribe exists and retains the tribal relation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not speaking of the present moment. I am speaking of when they had their tribal rela-

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. When they agreed to the manner in which the deeds should be made.

Mr. McCUMBER. But they are making deeds that way now.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Only in pursuance of the allotment. I was calling attention to the fact that the Government of the United States is not the grantor in any of these allotment deeds or patents that are made in the Indian Territory. The Government of the United States could not be the grantor, because the Government of the United States has nothing in the land which it can grant, the fee of the land being held in the tribe.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the point I want to make is that the only authority at present, if there is no tribal relation, must be an authority through Congress to an individual, which it declares to be the chief.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all, because that authority was initiated and given before the allotments were taken, in the act providing for the allotments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that, but suppose Congress had said that some other person should execute the deed. Would the Senator say that that would be our authority?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course not, because the man who executes the deed is merely acting as the agent of the tribe in making the deed to the individuals of the tribe. He is not acting as the agent of the Government of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. But he gets his authority from Congress. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; no such thing. Mr. CURTIS. I will detain the Senate only long enough to call attention to two other decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. SCOTT. It is evident we can not get through with this matter to-night. Many of us have been delayed two or three days with relation to executive business which is important. It is now 20 minutes of 6.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the Senator from Kansas be allowed to finish his remarks.

Mr. CURTIS. I can conclude in five minutes.
Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw the motion for a few minutes. The Senator from Kansas says he will take but five minutes.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia withdraws the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator spoke of the United States v. Rickert. Is it not a fact that in that case it appeared that the title of the land was still held by the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Held in trust for the Indians?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And the decision of the court proceeded upon the ground that the State had no right to tax lands held by the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Owned by the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly. Neither would the State nor the Territory have the right to tax land in the Indian Territory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But in this case the title has passed to the Indian. The fee is in the Indian.

Mr. CURTIS. Only by a patent which carried out the provisions of a treaty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The fee is in the Indian in the case we are considering.

The fee is not yet in the individual Indian and Mr. CURTIS. can not be until the limitation fixed has expired.

Now, my colleague referred to these agreements as treaties.

The Supreme Court, in a recent case—the Red Bird case—considered them, and in the opinion it says:

Counsel for claimants speak of the act of 1902 as a treaty, but it is only an act of Congress and can have no greater effect.

Therefore, if it is only an act of Congress, and those are the acts we are talking about, we have a right to amend them.

Then I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Lone Wolf case. It says:

That Indians who had not been fully emancipated from the control and protection of the United States are subject, at least so far as the tribal lands were concerned, to be controlled by direct legislation of Congress, is also declared in Choctaw Nation v. The United States (119 U. S., 1, 27) and Stephens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 445, 483). (Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S., p. 567.)

While the court does not decide in this case that it would could be properly that had been decided for the same that it would could be properly that had been decided for the same that I would could be properly that had been decided for the same that I would could be properly that had been decided for the same that I would could be properly that the decided the same and the same that I would could be same that I would be same that I woul apply to property that had been deeded to an individual Indian, it does hold that it applies to tribal property; and if the McCumber amendment is in the interest of the Indian and does protect the full bloods of the Indian Territory, why not, instead of Congress declaring the act unconstitutional, let it go to the Supreme Court and let it say whether or not it is unconstitutional. That, in my judgment, is the better course to pursue, instead of Congress passing upon the constitutionality of an amendment which was placed in the bill on the motion of one of the Senators

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Without taking any of the time of the Senate, but as bearing upon the amendment which has been under discussion this afternoon, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD some letters received from the Indian Territory, some written by Indians and some by white people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the letters submitted may be printed in the Record without being read. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

TULSA, IND. T., December 17, 1906.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: If the papers have not misquoted you, you support the Hitchcock policy of continuing supervision over the Indians' lands. I was at South McAlester during the sitting of the Senate committee. The country was ransacked for testimony to decry that policy and to put the friends of the Indians on the defense. There is no wise, no just friend of the Indians who favors the release of Indian allotments, and I do not say this from impulse or from a casual acquaintance with the Indian question.

I have canvassed this Territory from one end to the other the past month getting information from all sorts and conditions of people, and my conclusion is the wiser ones dreading the coming of statchood, with its implied control of them, with a dread as bitter and relentless as when under the leadership of Boudinot and Ross they fought the right of way concessions for the first roads entering the Territory. Rev. J. S. Murrow, who protested so earnestly at the McAlester sitting of the Indian Committee, had less of culture, perhaps, than some of the refined scoundrels who sought to decry his statements, but he spoke for every man in the Territory who is not either ignorant or brutally selfish.

Respectfully,

Respectfully,

TISHOMINGO, IND. T., January 22, 1907.

Hon. Senator La Follette, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Knowing that our friends are very few in the United States Congress, and it may be because they do not know our needs and conditions here, I notice that the Senate committee has recommended that the restrictions be removed on all lands. What greater injustice could be done? To illustrate, a grafter has a five-year lease on a piece of land, and most of the full bloods have made such leases. Now the restrictions are removed. Who can or who would wish to buy this land in this condition but the grafter with his lease and at a price named by this same grafter? Dear sir, allow the full blood to go before some court and have his competency established and his lease made void before any sale can be made. I hope you will look into this. I am somewhat alone in this matter. As it is the desire of the whites here to have restrictions removed so that these lands can be taxed, would it not be better for this to be postponed until after statehood? There are grafters here who are said to have thousands of acres under lease. If not asking too much, could you have a bill introduced selling our school property, also our capitol building and grounds? Our schools are an outrage as at present conducted, far more costly than before the United States Government took them from us.

Dear sir, I took the liberty of writing you last Congress, and hope I am not intruding now. I am an intermarried Chickasaw citizen.

Most respectfully,

T. K. WITTHOME.

The convention to form a constitution for the State of Oklahoma. GUTHRIE, OKLA., January 25, 1907.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Since you have in the past demonstrated an interest in fair play for the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, I take the liberty of sending you a copy of a resolution which was introduced in the constitutional convention last week and which was referred to a committee the chairman of which is not in sympathy with its purpose. It is destined to die there or be reported after it is too late to accomplish the desired result. Please consider same and bear in mind that every citizen of the Indian Territory—except land sharks—is anxious to see Congress fix a just and equitable limitation on the sale of Indian surplus. There is a single firm in the Chickasaw Nation who have 30,000 acres of Indian surplus under lease, who are waiting for the removal of restrictions, when they expect to make a wholesale purchase at insignificant prices. Land monopolies and a hellish system of tenantry will result unless Congress does not prohibit the wholesale purchase by these land companies and grafters.

See to this, Senator, and the whole of the Indian Territory citizenship will thank you.

Please hand the additional copy inclosed to the chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs.

I am, very truly,

Carlton Weaver.

A memorial.

To the Congress of the United States, to the President, Theodore Roosevelt:

Roosevett:

Whereas the special Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has recommended the removal of the restrictions upon the alienation of surplus allotments and other lands in the Indian Territory; and

Whereas the material interest of all the people of the Indian Territory, as well as the State at large, depends upon a broad and equitable distribution of the landed interest; and

Whereas a great amount of said lands are at present controlled by land companies and speculators under an obnoxious lease system; and

Whereas unless prohibited by the Congress said land companies and speculators will gain control of a vast amount of Indian lands, which will result in large holdings and land monopolies: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the representatives of the people of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, in convention assembled, do respectfully pray that the sale of all said alienated lands be restricted so as to prohibit land or lease monopolies and to permit only natural persons to be come purchasers or lessees thereof, and then only of such limited amounts as will guarantee a broad and equitable distribution.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to both Houses of Congress and the President of the United States.

JANUARY 30, 1907.

Hon. Robert M. La Follette,

United States Senate, Washington.

My Dear Sir: At a meeting of a number of delegates of the commercial clubs of the principal towns of Indian Territory at Muscogee recently it was decided that there would not be recommended for passage a law removing by the wholesale the restrictions on the alienation of lands of full bloods in Indian Territory. Experience has taught that the full blood, as a rule, in the handling of his own business—the difference between a good trade and a bad one—is not yet sensible enough to be trusted. The contemplated removal of restrictions by the wholesale on full-blood allotments may not be the best thing, though the mixed-blood Indian, as a rule, is able to manage his own affairs.

As a substitute for the amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, pardon me for handing you and urging the adoption of the one inclosed. By this means the Indian of the full blood will have his rights protected, and he will not be the subject of wholesale spoliation.

Sincerely,

E. Dunlap.

On and after thirty days from the approval of this act all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of lands, except homesteads, of Indian allottees of less than full blood in the Indian Territory, and all the restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, and encumbering of lands of allottees not of Indian blood are removed from and after date of selection of allotment. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States courts in Indian Territory, and the judges thereof, and of the United States court for the eastern district of Oklahoma, and the judge thereof, to hear and determine the application for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, and encumbering of the lands, exclusive of the homestead, of full-blood Indian allottees in Indian Territory, and the application of such full-blood allottee for the removal of restrictions on the leasing of the homestead; and such court or judge shall, upon proper showing, cause to be entered of record an order removing such restrictions. Such application shall be filed in either district where the applicant resides or in which the whole or any part of his allotment is situated. All the restrictions upon the alienation of inherited lands, from the date of selection, are hereby removed. upon the aliena hereby removed.

ARDMORE, IND. T., January 21, 1907.

Hon. Robert La Follette, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I address you regarding this matter because of your apparent friendliness for the Indian, particularly the full blood Indian.

In 1902 Congress enacted that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Indian Territory may dispose of one-fourth of the allotment within one year from date of patent. In 1906, however, Congress, in the Five Tribes bill, enacted a provision that no full blood may dispose of any portion of his allotment for twenty-five years, unless Congress sooner removed the restrictions. Now, the select Senate committee, in its recent report on affairs in the Indian Territory, declares that the act of 1906 imposing the restrictions without the consent of the Indian to be invalid, and that because of this there is much unfair dealing in Indian Territory. This is true with reference to this one-fourth.

But Senator Loxo, of this select Senate committee, in his amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, proposes to remove restrictions by the wholesale after July 1. I submit that I am a member of the Choctaw tribe of Indians; I am familiar with the language; I know in person a few thousand members of the tribe, and I know their characteristics and their ability. After a long experience with these Indians, I feel convinced that the mixed blood Indian is capable of managing his own affairs; but that the full blood is not. Therefore to protect the full blood, repeal the McCumber amendment, I respectfully suggest, so that the old law of 1902 be left in force and effect with reference to the sale of one-fourth of the lands, exclusive of the homestead; remove the restrictions from the mixed blood, but provide that the United States court, or some special tribunal whose judgment could not be appealed from, be authorized or created to hear and determine the application of all full blood Indians to have their restrictions on the alienation of their lands, exclusive of their homestead; and where such full blood can show that he is competent to manage his own affairs or that there are circumstances that justify that the restrictions be removed on all or a portion of his lands, let judgment be rendered accordingly; otherwise not. Let the fee of attorneys for drawing up the papers for the removal of restrictions be fixed at, say, fifty or one hundred dollars, or $25, or any reasonable amount, and make it a misdemeanor for any lawyer to charge more than that. This is the rule with reference to attorney's fees in the procurement of pensions.

The present system of removal of restriction

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to state that to-morrow morning after the conclusion of the routine morning business I will move that the Senate resume the consideration of the pend-

ST. LOUIS ELECTRIC BRIDGE COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 25123) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River; which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge, and all approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., in accordance with the provision of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to state that this bill is identical with a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce which is now on the Calendar. It is an important bill and quite short, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move that the bill (S. 8213) to authorize the St. Louis Electric Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 7, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the gentleman will state the reasons for his amendment, and then, perhaps, I will desire to answer.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to inject into this bill at this or any other point any legislation or any amendment that will not meet the approval of the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the committee. This is a matter of grave concern to the immediate locality that I represent and the city where I reside. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bur-TON] and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have been made familiar with the situation which this amendment proposes to correct—not to correct it immediately by legislation upon the bill, but to correct it by having the officer in charge of the work to officially report to the Congress a condition of affairs which is known to exist and admitted to exist at Brunswick Harbor. I would not offer this amendment if I thought it would in the least affect the appropriation so justly given in this bill for the harbor at Brunswick. If I thought it would jeopardize in the least any improvement of that harbor, or any appropriation for it, I would be the last man to make the suggestion or stand in the way of the improvement of the harbor. The condition which this amendment proposes to reach, by having information furnished to the Congress, so that legislation may hereafter be enacted in order to remedy it, is this:

The Government has spent each year, and proposes in this bill to spend, large sums of money to deepen and improve the Brunswick Harbor, which is one of the termini of the Southern Railway Company. That company has possession of and owns and controls the dock front and privileges in Brunswick Harbor, and the Southern Railway Company refuses to do business with only those steamboats or other boats engaged in navigation and transportation in and out of Brunswick Harbor and on the rivers running into the Brunswick Harbor for transportation of freight on the streams who compete with the railroad, and it makes contracts with only those that do not compete with them to permit the use of these wharves at Brunswick. The Southern Railway owns, as a part of its line from Brunswick to Atlanta, a line running from Macon to Brunswick, a distance of 190 miles. The railroad conditions as to freight charges and the delivery of freight at Macon are almost in-tolerable. The Southern Railway Company owning, as it does— or, rather, I will not state that to be a fact, because I may not be justified in doing so—but it controls all the lines that run from Macon, Ga., to the seaboard and undertakes also to control the competition which we are seeking to gain from Macon to the sea by reason of improving the Ocmulgee River and other Georgia rivers, for which appropriation is made in this bill, by denying to the boats that ply between Macon and Brunswick and to the sea the right to land at or use the docks and wharves of the Southern Railway Company, although just and reasonable compensation was offered to be paid. The railroad has refused to consider any proposition to permit the use of their wharves by any boat or vessel that competes with the railroad in the transportation of freight. In other words, they have a monopoly of the wharfage at Brunswick, and they arbitrarily exclude those boats that may compete with the rail-

Now, I know of my personal knowledge, from conversations and correspondence that I have had with the president of the Southern Railway Company and with the officials of the Southern Railway Company, that they do and have refused the privi-lege of using the dock by the boat that runs between Macon and The people of Macon, realizing the advantages that would accrue to that locality and to that section by river competition, during the last year inaugurated a boat line upon the river from Macon to Brunswick, and operated through the months of August and September. It was a success; but we found that when we undertook to land at Brunswick Harbor to meet the Mallory steamship, which plied between Boston, Balti-more, and New York, and which was the connecting line between the ports in the East from which we received our freight, we were denied the privilege and right, even for any compensation that the Southern Railway officials might fix, to use these wharves or to receive any freight from steamers at these wharves. The Macon boat was excluded therefrom absolutely and arbitrarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BARTLETT. I ask that I may have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

There was no objection.

We were compelled, in order to receive the Mr. BARTLETT. freight from the Mallory Steamship Line, to go to the expense of lightering our freight and to transfer it from the Mallory ships to our boat by lighters. I have here a letter, which I will not undertake to read, from President Spencer, then in life, in reference to this matter. It was of so much importance to our people that we insisted that he send a committee of his own When they officials to Macon in order to discuss the situation. arrived we found, instead of discussing the situation, they simply came for the purpose of announcing to us that they would not consider the proposition at all. At this meeting the railroad officials refused for any consideration to permit the use of their wharves by the Macon boat.

Now, the line between Macon and Brunswick was first built by State aid to the railroad corporation which constructed it; then it was sold, and bought by the Southern Railway Company. At that time it was known as the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad Company.

After that, since 1893, the Southern Railway Company, by reason of its control and right to vote the stock of the Central Railway of Georgia Company and the other road leading from Macon to the sea, and by reason of its ownership and control of the other railroads to the seaports, has absolute control over the freight shipped to and from my city and has absolute control of the freight charges. The city of Macon undertook last year and is seeking now to prevent or to ame-liorate the intolerable conditions, which I will not undertake to state in detail, but concerning which I have letters from the largest merchants of that city, whose freight would be carried more cheaply if we can secure water transportation. Now, the freight is congested for weeks and weeks in the yards of the railroad at Macon, where it is not delivered and where demurrage is charged to the merchants if they do not send for and receive their freight within forty-eight hours; but where the railroads do not deliver to merchants their freight promptly, so that they will not have it for weeks after it has arrived, no compensation is paid them.

The General Government, in order to relieve the people of these transportation evils, has provided for a deepening of the stream that runs from Macon to the sea in order that we may have water competition with the railroads; and when we put boats on the river and they became a success by reason of the fact that they were carrying all the freight they could, the railroads endeavored to destroy these benefits by monopoly of the wharfinw privileges. This one boat carried nearly 2, 000,000 pounds of freight between Macon and the sea in two months, and demonstrated that water transportation was not only a success, but of immense benefit to our people. Now, the merchants had organized this line of boats. They were competing with the railroad for the freight; but we were met at the port of Brunswick by this great railroad corporation, which has control of the water privileges and landing places at the harbor of Brunswick, and they deny us the right, for any price the railroad might fix, to land even simply for the purpose of delivering and receiving our freight from other vessels that land there and that by contract with the railroad can not land anywhere else. I do not make this statement from hearsay, but advisedly. I have a letter from the president of the Southbut advisedly. I have a letter from the president of the Southern Railway Company which sustains it, and I know it from personal interviews and conversation with the officials of the company

One of those officials appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and this matter was inquired into, and they claimed the right to deny to those people who are competing with them for the freight-carrying business the right to use these wharves. which control this harbor, for which large appropriation is made in this bill.

Now, that is the statement that we make. I simply want by this amendment to provide that the Congress of the United States, through its Representatives, may, from the official statement of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, know at the next session what are the facts. I would that I could put upon this bill a provision, applicable to all harbors, that wherever a railroad or any other corporation or person undertakes to monopolize and appropriate the wharves of the harbors of this country and to discriminate between the citizens who have right to use these harbors that we spend so much money to deepen and improve for the benefit of the entire people, that it shall be prevented by legislation from so unjustly discriminating against the people; that the people's money shall not be spent solely for the benefit of these railroad corporations, whose chief purpose is to destroy competition. The people demand it, and I think we are ready to answer it by enacting legislation that will protect the people from such unjust exactions.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I see no special objection to this amendment. It is of the utmost importance that river and harbor expenditures be effective for the benefit of all persons and for all kinds of traffic. In some instances appropriations have been made the benefit of which has inured to certain corporations and individuals to an undue extent. I would suggest, however, that part of the wording of this proposed amendment would look like a detention of the appropriation until a report is made, and on conference with the gentleman from that district [Mr. Brantley] he is of the same opinion.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to state to the gentleman from Ohio that I have no such purpose. I simply put it on that portion of the bill, because that was a harbor where that condition complained of and with which I am familiar exists, and I did not want to raise the question about all the other harbors provided for in this bill. I want to get the information, and the gentleman knows that I would not for a moment interfere with or detain or restrict the expenditure of money on the Brunswick Harbor.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. May I suggest to the gentleman that the two lines here, "in expending the money and carrying out the contracts in this paragraph authorized for the improvement of the harbor herein named," contain an intimation that the appropriation is, in a measure, conditional?

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman thinks that striking those words out of the amendment will relieve it of the objec-those words out of the amendment will relieve it of the objection, I will consent to that.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Then, by unanimous consent, I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the language beginning with "in" and ending with "named" be stricken out. I should like to hear my friend from Georgia [Mr. Brantley] on this.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be medified.

asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be modified as he suggests. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment as just modified is unobjectionable to me. I represent the Brunswick district and live in the city of Brunswick. Of course we believe that we deserve and need this appropriation, and we are exceedingly anxious for it, and I do not want the appropriation held up or detained in any way by reason of any investigation that is made. I have no objection, however, to any investigation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague? Mr. BRANTLEY. I have only a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I have no objection to any investigation looking to the prevention of any improper discrimination in the use of the wharves at Brunswick. The people of Brunswick are as much interested as the people of Macon in the improvement of the Ocmulgee River, and in the free passage of boats from the city of Macon to the city of Brunswick. In this particular matter about which complaint is made I have no personal knowledge. My attention has never been called to the matter either officially or personally, and all that I know concerning it is what I have read in the newspapers. Some time ago I learned in that way that the owners of a boat coming down from Macon to Brunswick demanded the privilege of using without charge the wharves of the Southern Railway at Brunswick. These are not the only wharves there. There are many wharves and wharf owners at the port of Brunswick, and we have available there a water front of 40 miles that can be utilized for wharves. Now, as to whether or not the Southern Railway Company was justified in saying to those people, "We built our wharf and you have no more right to demand the use of it than you have to demand the use of any other wharf," is not for me to say. I am perfectly willing to have the matter investigated. I am willing to have the discriminations removed, if any discriminations exist. I only wish that, in making the investigation, the improvements necessary at the port be not delayed nor the expenditure of this money prevented or held up. As the amendment has been modified so as to remove the probability of this, I have no objection to its being incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the statement that the people of Macon or the owners of the boat plying between Macon and Brunswick applied to the Southern Railway Company to use its wharves without offering to pay compensation, or free of charge, is not a correct statement. On the contrary, they offered and were willing to pay compensation for the privilege I hold in my hand the correspondence (which of using them. I will put in the RECORD) between myself and President Spencer, of the Southern Railway Company, written at the instance of the people of Macon engaged in operating boats on the Ocmulgee River from Macon to Brunswick, in which we asked for the permission to land at the wharves for the purpose of transferring the freight from the line of steamers known as the "Mallory Line" to our own boat, the Mallory Line steamers having a contract to use the Southern Railway wharves and no other, and such reasonable charge as the Southern Railway might agree upon was offered to be paid. The people of Macon did not ask to use or occupy the wharves without paying reasonable and proper compensation therefor.

I know, further, that the committee of citizens said to the officials of the Southern Railway Company at the depot at Macon during August last, in the private car of the second vice-president, Mr. Culp: "We stand ready to pay you any reasonable charge you make for this service. Understand us, gentlemen, we do not want the use of the wharves free." So my friend and colleague from the Eleventh district of Georgia is mistaken, and he is not warranted in making the statement is mistaken, and he is not warranted in making the statement that the people of Macon asked the use of these wharves without charge. The contrary is true. In refutation of his statement I hold in my hand and will put into the Record the correspondence between President Spencer and myself on this subject; and refutation was also made before the River and Harbor Committee by Mr. Culp when summoned, who appeared be-fore that committee. The refusal to permit the use of the wharves was not put upon the ground that compensation was not offered to be paid. I will assure my colleague and his people that I have no desire to delay or hamper the appropriation for the harbor at Brunswick. I shall vote to give them every cent of money that will make it, as it is entitled to be, one of the great export cities of our country. But I am unwilling to vote for the money to improve the harbors of the country and then to turn the wharfage rights and the right to use them over to the great railway corporations of the country to the detriment of the business progress of the section of the country where I live.

I am unwilling to spend the money of the country solely for the benefit of the railroad company that have obtained and own these wharves and exclude from them those who may compete with the railroad and who are endeavoring to cheapen transportation to the people and relieve them from the grasping exactions of a gigantic railroad monopoly. I am not willing to consent that people of Macon and other cities in Georgia shall be deprived of the benefits they are entitled to obtain from the appropriations made to improve the Georgia rivers by the selfish and unreasonable exactions of the railroads.

I call attention to the following correspondence I have referred It will demonstrate that the people of Macon were not seeking to obtain the right to use the wharves of the railroad free of charge. On the contrary, the distinct offer is made to pay such reasonable amount as the railroad might agree upon. And that the privilege to use the wharves was denied, not because the railroad was not offered to be paid reasonable charges therefor, but mainly because the boat between Brunswick would compete with the railroad and reduce freight rates to the people of Macon and vicinity.

Macon, Ga., July 18, 1906.

Mr. Samuel Spencer,

President Southern Railway Company,

1300 Pennsylvania avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: The citizens of Macon, in conjunction with the chamber of commerce, are very much interested in securing navigation upon the Ocmulgee River from Macon to Brunswick, and especially above Hawkinsville. The Government has already expended a considerable sum of money upon the improvement of the Ocmulgee River, and it is contemplated to ask for additional appropriations; besides, there are many points between Macon and Brunswick that are not reached by any railroad or other means of transportation for freight.

With a view to increasing river navigation and demonstrating to the Government the feasibility of further improving the river, the citizens of Macon have, at considerable expense, arranged to have a boat ply between Macon and Brunswick, Ga., and have made a connection with the Mallory Steamship Line at Brunswick for the carriage of freight from eastern points to Brunswick, and thence to Macon via the boat line operating upon the Ocmulgee River. They anticipated that they would be permitted to have access to the wharves and landing places at Brunswick used by the Mallory Steamship Company upon such reasonable arrangements as to terms as could be made with the Southern Railway Company, which owns the wharves and landing places occupied by the Mallory Steamship Company, in order that freight forwarded by the Mallory Steamship Company to Macon via the loat line operating between Brunswick and Macon may be transferred in transit.

They have made an effort to that end, but have been informed by Tupper & Co., agents for the Mallory Line at Brunswick, that they will not be permitted, under the present agreement with the Southern Railway Company, to use the wharves at Brunswick in order to transfer freight from the Mallory Line to the boats plying between Macon and Brunswick. They have also had some correspondence direct with the Mallory Steamship Compány in New York, but have falled to secure this privilege. They have also had some correspondence with Mr. L. L. McClesky, division freight agent of the Southern Railway Company, in which he says that his company is not in a position to furnish berth room at the Brunswick docks for steamers plying between Macon and Brunswick on the Ocmulgee River, and declines to permit Macon boats to occupy berth room at the Brunswick docks in order to receive shipments from the Mallory Line or to deliver to that line shipments from Macon via the river boats.

This matter, as I have stated, is one of supreme importance to the city of Macon, and as I do not see how it can materially affect the interests of the Southern Railway Company I have consented, at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and the citizens of Macon, to address you this letter and to ask most earnestly that you will direct the matter taken up by the proper officials of the company in this division, with a view of having a conference between the officials of the Southern Railway Company and the people of Macon in order that the matter may be adjusted if possible.

As the Congressman from this district I am deeply interested in securing appropriations for the continued improvement of the Ocmulgee and am anxious that the money already expended on that work, as well as the money that may be expended in the future, shall result in increased traffic upon the river.

I do not represent anyone as an attorney in this matter, as I am not now practicing law, but I am simply acting on behalf of the people of Macon; and in making this request I feel assu

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, New York, July 28, 1996.

Hon. C. L. BARTLETT, Macon, Ga.

Hon. C. L. Bartlett, Macon, Ga.

Dear Sir: I have yours of the 18th, and beg to say that the matter shall have attention.

In this connection I hand you herewith copy of a letter written to the committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Macon, of which Mr. A. E. Campbell is chairman, in response to their communication upon the subject.

I hope that the proposed meeting between the committee and the officers of the Southern can be arranged at an early date and that the equities of the entire situation can be made clear to the satisfaction of both sides. both sides.
Yours, very truly,

S. SPENCER, President.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, 80 BROADWAY, New York, July 24, 1996.

Office of the President, 80 Broadway, New York, July 24, 1996.

Mr. A. N. Chappell, Chairman; Messrs. W. E. Small, John C. Holmes, and Stephen Popper, Committee, Chamber of Commerce, Macon, Ga.

Dear Sirs: I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 19th, and I will with pleasure have the matter investigated by the proper executive officers of the company, with the view of such a meeting as you suggest between the proper officers of the company and the representatives of the chamber of commerce.

In the meantime, however, I must in candor call your attention to some points which may necessarily govern the company in the matter. As you will doubtless appreciate, the terminals of a transportation line are the most expensive, and, as a rule, the most crowded portions of its property, and where additional ones are needed, the necessary property is always acquired at abnormally high prices. Under these conditions railway companies, of course, can not afford to provide terminals beyond their own needs for traffic passing over their own lines and producing transportation revenue. They can not reasonably allow the use of terminals for mere terminal rental unconnected with the securing of traffic for transportation.

The Southern Railway Company has no desire to obstruct in any way the facilities desired by any community in the matter of transportation or otherwise, but it can not consistently provide property or facilities for other transportation lines in which it has no interest and from which it can derive no benefit.

The CHAIRMAN The greatent is a specific passing the property of facilities for other transportation lines in which it has no interest and from which it can derive no benefit.

S. SPENCER, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and the amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Oklawaha River, Florida: Continuing improvement from the mouth to Leesburg, Fla., including Silver Springs Run, and for maintenance, $15,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34, strike out all after the word "Florida," in line 6, and strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, and insert in lieu thereof "completing the improvement from the mouth to Leesburg, Fla., including Silver Springs Run, according to the report in House Document No. 782, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, for maintenance, $15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving anchorage basin at Gulfport and channel therefrom to the anchorage or roadstead at Ship Island; also Ship Island Pass between Ship and Cat islands, Mississippi: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $100,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 38, after the word "dollars," line 18, insert: "And the Secretary of War may annul that portion of the contract entered into February 20, 1901, between Maj. W. T. Rossell, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, on behalf of the United States, and Spencer S. Bullis, relating to maintenance of a channel and anchorage basin in the Mississippi, between Ship Island and Guifport, Miss., and the amount due to said Spencer S. Bullis, or his assigns, for maintenance shall be reckoned from June 14, 1906, to the date of the annulment at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Inland Waterway Channel from Franklin to Mermentau, La., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 336, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, $89,292, and the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed $200,000 in excess of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment to correct the number. It is a mistake in the number of the document.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 41 strike out the words "three hundred and thirty-six' and in lieu thereof insert the words "six hundred and forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 42, after line 4, insert the following paragraph:

"Improving Inland Waterway Channel and excavating a canal from the Mermentau River, Louisiana, to the Sabine River, in accordance with the report submitted December 14, 1906, by Maj. Edgar Jadwin (House Document No. 640, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session), $189,715; and the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such material and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed $200,000 exclusive of and in excess of the amount herein appropriated."

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Chairman, by the rivers and harbors act of March 3, 1905, a survey was authorized of an inland waterway or inter-coastal canal from the Mississippi River to the Rio Grande, paralleling the Gulf of Mexico, with such an improvement as would afford the people residing along the proposed route additional opportunity of reaching commercial centers with their products.

Pursuant to this authorization Major Jadwin, district officer of that section, made a careful survey of this route, and on the 14th day of December, 1906, submitted his report. He approved the entire route from Franklin, La., to Corpus Christi, Tex., and disapproved those sections from Donaldson-ville to Grand River, Louisiana, and from Corpus Christi to Point Isabel, Tex., the entire length of the waterway being 690 diles. The portion approved or recommended was 582 miles. This report in due course was referred to the Board of Engineers. After consideration and in passing decision on that report a portion of the reach was approved by the Board, and a portion disapproved. The sections from Franklin, La., to the Mermentau River, Louisiana, from Galveston to the Brazos, and from Aransas Pass to Pass Cavallo were found worthy of improvement. The stretch from the Mermentau River to the Sabine was not found worthy of improvement by the Board of Engineers for the following reasons:

[Extract from House Doc. No. 640, 2d sess., 59th Cong., pp. 32, 33.]

[Extract from House Doc. No. 640, 2d sess., 59th Cong., pp. 32, 33.]

The district officer estimates the cost of the work necessary to connect Mermentau River with Lake Sabine at $380,215, and $20,000 per annum for maintenance.

To a considerable extent the commerce of this section consists of lumber, and while the output is at present large, this industry is one which will probably decrease as the sources of supply in proximity to the waterway becomes exhausted. There are, however, other items of merchandise which would probably give to this portion of the waterway, if constructed, a considerable amount of commerce, but the Board is of the opinion that the prospective commerce is hardly sufficient to justify at the present time the expenditure of the large sum necessary to construct this portion of the waterway. Before recommending such an expenditure the Board thinks it more advisable that the section from Franklin to the Mermentau should be first completed, which would open up a through waterway from the Mississippi to the Mermentau. If the commerce, which will thereupon develop upon the completed portion of the waterway, shall be as great as is now expected, it may then be advisable to extend this waterway from the Mermentau to Sabine.

Summing up its conclusions, the Board recommends the improvement of the following sections of the proposed inland waterway from the Rio Grande to the Mississippi:

	Cost of original work.	Cost of annual maintenance.
Aransas Pass to Pass Cavallo	$65, 850. 00 141, 528. 80	$10,000.00 20,000.00
Franklin to Mermentau River	289, 292.00	20,000.00
Total	496, 670, 80	50,000.00

Respectfully submitted

Brig. Gen. A. Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors followed the recommendation of the Board and the bill reported by it carried an appropriation for the excavation of an inland waterway 5 feet deep and 40 feet wide between the points above stated.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the Committee on Rivers and Harbors upon a resumption of the legislative powers supposed to be vested in them by law. In 1902 the rights of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the rights of the membership of this House were practically taken away from them by the act creating this Board of Engineers.

I recognize that the Rivers and Harbors Committee should have an advisory board of engineers, in so far as engineering problems are concerned, but I do not concede that the board's action should be final in any event as to the commercial advisability of a project.

I want, as I stated, to congratulate the committee upon the fact that they have resumed the legislative prerogative vested in them, in that the unanimous report by the Board of Engineers against the Cold Springs Inlet—Cape May project—was ignored by the committee and an appropriation of $1,200,000 included in this bill for that improvement. I have no doubt that it is a meritorious project and am glad to see that the committee decided this matter for themselves; but I feel that in not pursuing a similar course in the inland waterway project the people of Louisiana have suffered a great loss.

The products of southwest Louisiana between the Mermentau and Sabine are not confined solely to lumber. Half of the rice produced in the United States, practically all of the sulphur in North America, and millions upon millions of barrels of oil constitute a part of the output of that locality, and instead of there being 400,000 tons, the tonnage of originating commercial commodities now being handled by rail will exceed 1,500,000

Mr. Chairman, I propose to confine my remarks to the section from the Mermentau River, Louisiana, to Sabine Pass, Texas, as this reach extends through my district.

The district officer estimated the cost of the work necessary to connect the Mermentau River with Lake Sabine at $389,215, and $20,000 a year for maintenance. I now wish to incorporate as part of my remarks the report of Major Jadwin on this section, which was not concurred in by the Board of Engineers:

LAKE MISERE TO SABINE

I was about to inspect this section of the waterway when orders were received to proceed to Washington to appear before the River and Harbor Committee in connection with certain projects in this district. It is therefore not practicable at present to make as accurate and complete a report on these sections as on the rest of the waterway. Still, as there is sufficient data before me to show that construction of the sections is warranted, it seems better to so recommend now, as this will prevent delay in action on the entire project. I expect to inspect the sections after my return from Washington and take up some of the points which are here touched on only generally more in detail. Should the results be such as to indicate that the statements made to-day are too wide of the mark for the purpose of the report I will so report.

made to-day are too wide of the mark for the purpose of the report I will so report.

To connect this section with the one to the eastward a cut will have to be made through the marsh from Lake Misere to Willow Lake, thence across Willow Lake to a small lake at the head of Bayou Bois Connu, thence to Lake Calcasieu. The interest on the cost of this subsection and the cost of maintenance are estimated to total about $21,000. From Calcasieu Lake westward the waterway will pass up Kelsor Bayou to Black Lake, thence across a marsh to Black Bayou, which empties into the Sabine River. The interest on the cost of this subsection and the cost of maintenance are estimated to total something less than $20,000 for this section. It has already been shown that a saving of nearly $100,000 a year can be properly credited at present to these sections on export oil from Jennings oil field to Port Arthur, although this amount will probably gradually decrease unless other oil although this amount will probably gradually decrease unless fields are discovered.

Calcasieu River is tributary to the Calcasieu Lake. The entire section is abreast of the enormous lumber country of western Louisiana. This was recently stated by a well-posted man in the lumber business to be the greatest undeveloped pine lumber district in the United States at present. A telegram just received from the Perkins & Miller Lumber Company estimates the output of the milling district at Lake Charles at over 200,000,000 feet. This is 200,000 thousand feet, or 400,000 tons. It is not believed that very much would be saved in freight rates on the portion of this lumber which goes to New Orleans for export. On that portion which is sent to New Orleans for domestic use it is estimated that a saving of 25 per cent can be made in the freight account. The exact amount which goes this way is not known to me.

tic use it is estimated that a saving of 25 per cent can be made in the freight account. The exact amount which goes this way is not known to me.

Lake Charles in 1900 had a population of 6,680, but has grown considerably since that time. Its general merchandise would receive a benefit from the waterway, as the rates on general merchandise from St. Louis to Lake Charles exceed those from St. Louis to New Orleans by an average of about 29 cents per 100 on less than carload lots and about 20 cents per 100 on carload lots, and general merchandise can probably be brought from Plaquemine to Lake Charles for less than the latter amount.

A large sulphur mine has been developed near Lake Charles. The parties owning it recently undertook, at their own expense, the construction of a canal from their lands directly west through the higher land to the Sabine River, intending to lock from the canal to the river. It was understood that they made a contract with the large contractor to put 16 dredges on the work. Several dredges were worked for a time, but the project was later abandoned. It was alleged that the railroads had offered such inducement in the way of reduced freight rates that it would not pay the company to assume the expense of construction of the canal. As definite figures are not at hand as to their present rates and output, the exact saving there would be to that industry can not be indicated. Much pine lumber for the intermediate coast country between Lake Charles and New Orleans would also move by the waterway.

A large percentage of the lumber—probably one-half—from the Lake Charles field goes to Port Arthur for export. If only one-fourth of the 400,000 tons went that way by the canal there would be a saving probably of one-half of the present freight rate, which is 5 cents a hundred, or $1 a ton. This would make a saving to be credited to the reach from Lake Calcasieu to Sabine of $50,000. There should also be credited to this ranch a saving on the general merchandise to flanger and Beaumont. This tonna

It is to be noted that the conclusion of the Board is expressed in general terms, and no logical reason is given for its decision. They hold that the commerce of this section consists principally of lumber, "and while the output is at present large, it will decrease as the source of supply in proximity to the waterway becomes exhausted."

This finding discloses a lack of information concerning the country through which this waterway is to be constructed. It further demonstrates that the report of the district officer was not given due weight, as it shows conclusively that not only is there a large lumber industry in the section between the Mermentau River and Sabine Pass, but likewise vast agricul-tural interests. The reach under discussion covers 72 miles. It passes through one of the greatest freight-originating sections of Louisiana. Were this section to be completed between the Mermentau River and Sabine Pass it would enable shippers to reach Calcasieu Pass and Sabine Pass, the latter one of the best ports on the Gulf.

The approximate tonnage of Acadia Parish, tributary to the proposed canal, in rice and rice products, is 100,000 tons; crude oil, 500,000 tens; cotton, 6,000 tens; miscellaneous, 10,000 tens; that from the city of Lake Charles alone exceeding 450,000 tens, not including sulphur. The parish at large probably originates a million tens more. I have not in this estimate included incoming tonnage.

In order that the House may be informed of the freight rates obtaining in our locality, I insert the following table from the Interstate Commerce Commission:

Commerce Commission,
Interstate Commerce Commission,
Division of Rates and Transportation,
February 1, 1907.

Statement showing commodity rates, carload and less than carload, from Lake Charles, La., to New Orleans, La.

[Rates in cents per hundred pounds.]

Commodities.	Carload.	Less than carload.
Cotton Sugar Rice (rough) Rice (clean) Lumber		a$1.50 .30 .14 .17½ .30 " Per bale.

This table shows that to ship a barrel of rough rice of 162 pounds to New Orleans in carload lots costs, in round numbers, 19 cents, or $2.28 a ton.

By the inland waterway rice can be profitably shipped at 8 cents per barrel of 162 pounds, or 96 cents a ton, a clear gain of $1.32 per ton.

Statistics show that in the parishes tributary to this projected canal there has been and will be produced approximately 2,000,000 barrels of rice annually. Estimating that one-half of the rice produced would be shipped by the canal—1,000,000 bar--$110,000.

Estimating the output of the sulphur mines to be 100,000 tons, which could be carried by water on the same basis as salt, 25 cents per ton, $25,000.

Oil, 40 per cent of which, it is claimed, would be handled by water, estimated 1,000,000 barrels, 10 cents a barrel, $100,000.

To which must be added the savings set forth in Major Jadwin's report, to be credited to this section, general merchandise tonnage of Orange and Beaumont on agricultural products alone from New Orleans, $45,000. Total, $280,000. And yet the Board of Engineers say that present and future commerce does not justify the construction of this canal. It surpasses human un-derstanding how or why the Committee on Rivers and Harbors could recommend an appropriation of $1,200,000 for the Cape May project in the face of an adverse report of the Board of Engineers, and then turn down a proposition approved by the district officer, representing the Government of the United States, after survey in the field and a personal examination of conditions.

I know that the committee must be laboring under some honest error, as the project for southwest Louisiana will be of benefit not only to the agricultural interests of that section, but to that of the Northwest and of the manufacturing sections of the East.

Mr. Chairman, twenty years ago the people of Texas and Louisiana were striving to bring a good citizenship into their States so as to create wealth by the development of the natural advantages and resources of their respective sections. Their efforts have been rewarded beyond their expectations, and now the problem for solution is how to place the products of their enterprise and industry upon foreign and domestic markets at the lowest level of transportation charges for services performed, based upon the capital actually invested in the instrumentalities of transportation.

It is a conceded fact that water transportation is cheaper than all other known methods. Realizing this fact, it has been the constant effort of many of the Representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States to obtain liberal appropriations for the purpose of improving the navigation of the rivers and streams of the respective States of this Union.

Not only has the attention of your national legislators been directed to the improvement of harbors, rivers, and streams, but likewise to the connection of streams and like avenues of commerce, where feasible, in order to facilitate the marketing of the products of the country at the lowest possible cost, so that the charge to the producer for their transportation would not reduce the value of the article produced to a point which would result in the contribution of his labor without compensation for the benefit of others.

The products of our territory and other sections of Louisiana consist principally of sugar, cotton, sulphur, salt, lumber, rice, corn, and fuel oil. The incoming traffic from abroad would be grain, foodstuffs, general merchandise, and coal. We should not rely upon the present supply of oil for fuel purposes, as its continual extraction from the earth will reduce the output until it will be required solely for refining; hence the fuel problem, we are to encourage the location of manufacturing concerns in the South, is one of prime importance.

As a comparison between railroad rates and water transportation charges one has but to call attention to the fact that Pittsburg coal is brought in barges from that point to the city of New Orleans at a freight charge of 75 cents per ton at the wharves, after having been carried more than 2,000 miles; whereas coal of an inferior quality, mined in the Indian Territory, is shipped only 522 miles to the city of Houston, and the freight charges are $2.50 per ton.

From the outset of my remarks it was apparent that I was opposed to this bill because of its want of legislative logic. I realize that owing to the traditions of the House it is immaterial whether the bill be logical or not, as the committee's report is always adhered to by the membership unless consent is given by the chairman to change the bill. The chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee is entitled to the respect of everyone, yet he has his pride of opinion as well as others, and is in a position to weigh and exercise the great power in his hands. I have no hope of persuading him to change the report of the committee and include an appropriation of $389.215 for the construction of this inland waterway from the Mermentau River to Sabine Pass; although, in justice and fair-ness, the project appeals to the legislative judgment of anyone familiar with the surrounding conditions.

I have been impelled to raise my voice in protest at the loss sustained by the people of my section because of the non-approval of this section by the committee. I was told that it was refused because the Board of Engineers declined to approve the report of the district officer. Yet this record discloses the fact that the Board of Engineers refused to approve the Cold Spring Inlet project, Cape May.

Mr. Chairman, although the matter under discussion is not such as appeals to the majority, yet I was a witness to what might be termed an exhibition of "legislative powerlessness" connected with the discussion of this proposed improvement. After considerable persistence the Rivers and Harbors Committee was induced to refer to the Board of Engineers for further hearing their original findings on this inland waterway. Upon this hearing I participated in the presentation of the argument for the reversal of its original action. The legisla-tive anomaly was presented of Members of Congress—prominent members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee too—begging the Board of Engineers to reconsider their former findings and hold that the project was commercially advisable.

For the information of those who may read these remarks, and to show the trend of the times to concentrate power, I insert the act creating this Board:

and to show the trend of the times to concentrate power, I insert the act creating this Board:

That there shall be organized in the Office of the Chief of Engineers. United States Army, by detail from time to time from the Corps of Engineers, a board of five engineer officers, whose duties shall be fixed by the Chief of Engineers, and to whom shall be referred for consideration and recommendation, in addition to any other duties assigned, so far as in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers may be necessary, all reports upon examinations and surveys provided for by Congress, and all projects or changes in projects for works of river and harbor improvement heretofore or hereafter provided for. And the board shall submit to the Chief of Engineers recommendations as to the desirability of commencing or continuing any and all improvements upon which reports are required. And in the consideration of such works and projects the board shall have in view the amount and character of commence existing or reasonably prospective which will be benefited by the improvement, and the relation of the ultimate cost of such work, both as to cost of construction and maintenance, to the public commercial interests involved, and the public necessity for the work, and propriety of its construction, continuance, or maintenance at the expense of the United States. And such consideration shall be given as time permits to such works as have heretofore been provided for by Congress, the same as in the case of new works proposed. The board shall, when it considers the same necessary, and with the sanction and under orders from the Chief of Engineers, make as a board or through its members, personal examinations of localities. And all facts, information, and arguments which are presented to the board for its consideration in connection with any matter referred to it by the Chief of Engineers shall be reduced to and submitted in writing, and made a part of the records of the Office of the Chief of Engineers. It shall further be the duty of sa

The section was again amended by the act of March 3, 1905 the river and harbor bill of that year-and the provisions of the section were extended by the latter act so as to require the Board to examine the review surveys as well as projects provided for by acts and resolutions prior to the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of the representatives of the people to delegate their power to commissions and bureaus, and thereafter they awaken to the sad realization that the creature has become greater than the creator.

From the action of the committee in rejecting all amendments of substance to this bill, I take it that the one offered by me might meet a similar fate, and not desiring to place this meritorious project in the position of having been disapproved by the vote of the House, I withdraw it.

I do not desire to leave the impression on the minds of any of the Members that I have abandoned hope of securing the incorporation of this amendment in the bill at some future time. I believe that the rightfulness of the claims of the people that I have the honor to represent will be recognized, and that this amendment will yet become the law of the land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Galveston channel, Texas: Continuing improvement, $150,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a bond with proper sureties, satisfactory to the Secretary of War, in such amount as he may deem necessary, shall have been furnished, to insure that the city of Galveston will, on or before June 30, 1909, convey to the United States a good and sufficient title to the point of land known as Pelican Spit and the land adjacent thereto.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, insert after the word "thereto," line 11, the following:
"As described in the resolution of the board of commissioners of the city of Galveston, Tex., dated April 1, 1905."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River, Tenn., below Nashville: The Secretary of War may cause a survey to be made with a view to the improvement by locks and dams of that portion of the river heretofore surveyed in which no locks and dams have been constructed.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. This is made necessary by the fact that a part of this improvement is in Kentucky, which seems to have been omitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, after the word "Tennessee," in line 5, insert the following: and Kentucky."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sterling having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tennessee River, Tennessee and Alabama, from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Riverton, Ala.: Continuing improvement by open-channel work, $205,000, of which amount $15,000 may, if required, be expended in that portion between Hobbs Island and Guntersville.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, insert after the words "open-channel work," in line 7, the following:

"To secure a depth of 5 feet at low water, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 50, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $223,000, of which amount $98,000 may be expended for wharf room for the storage of material and plant or other Government property, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the report submitted in House Document No. 270, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session: Provided, That no part of said sum of $98,000 shall be expended for such wharf room unless terms can be made with the Cleveland Yacht Club in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors as set forth in said document: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the prosecution of the project submitted in House Document No. 118, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and heretofore adopted, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, to an amount not exceeding $900,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated or authorized.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, line 4, after the word "exceeding," insert the following: "One million and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know just what this is

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will not do that, although it pertains to my own harbor.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words as to the reason why I have offered this amendment. The chair-man and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in dealing with the various questions on this subject that have been before them have, in my judgment and in the judgment of the people whom I represent, dealt with them with knowledge and with judgment and with honest purpose and with fair dealing to every part of the country in framing the bill which is now I heard in the general debate which took place here before us. on this bill one gentleman charging that the chairman of this committee dominated the committee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that from what I have observed on this bill while before the House that he could have made an additional He could have charged that the chairman of this committee dominated the House of Representatives as he has dominated the committee, and he has dominated the House of Representatives because I believe that the Members on this side and the Members on the other side of this Chamber believe that he has the best knowledge on this subject; that he has the best judgment on this subject; that his purposes with regard to these appropriations are honest to the utmost, and he endeavors with all the people throughout this broad land to deal in a fair manner with every part of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members on this side of the House and the Members on the other side of the House to unite in the passage of the amendment which I have offered, Mr. Chairman, if for no other reason, to demonstrate to the people of this country that while the chairman of this committee dominates the House of Representatives sometimes, and while he dominates the House of Representatives on this subject most times, that he does not dominate it all the time, and that there-fore we should not permit him to protest against this amendment, but insist in giving to the harbor of Cleveland the sum of money that will be sufficient to place the city of Cleveland in the same class with my city, the city of Baltimore, the city of New York, and the city of Boston. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are no politics in this bill nor any in the discussion thereof, but I desire now to inject a political suggestion in expressing the hope, Mr. Chairman, that our Republican friends will not nominate Theodore Burron to succeed our President, Theodore Roosevelt. We have been defeated by "Teddy" the first, and we do not desire to encounter "Teddy" the second.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the "noes" appeared to have it. appeared to have it.

Mr. GILL. Division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 56. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River: General improvement, $450,000: Provided, hat so much of this amount as may be necessary may, in the disection of the Secretary of War, be expended in the construction of a edging plant.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to this paragraph, "General improvement, $450,000." I presume that is intended to cover the expense of both dredging and snagging operations on the whole river.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would say to the gentleman there is a continuing annual expenditure for snagging on the river, an amount that is supplied without any appropriation. It is expected that this amount, $450,000, will furnish an additional dredging boat, and one dredging boat is now under construction with the funds already appropriated.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it is not intended that the whole amount shall be expended in providing a dredging plant.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, no; the general improvement of the river itself, which involves a number of things,

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that what may be in excess of the cost of the dredging plant will go to dredging the whole river without any regard to any particular section?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly; to other kinds of improvements. I would say to the gentleman I think that the provision is as ample as has been made in any bill for the general improvement of the Ohio River; that is, for open-channel work.

I presume he is especially interested in the lower portion.

There was an attempt to amend the bill two years ago by making specific provision for the lower portion. That was opposed ing specific provision for the lower portion. That was opposed by the committee and defeated, and it is not thought best to separate the river into different stretches or reaches, but it is thought that this will be sufficient for the lower portion.

Mr. SHERLEY. My own view is in accord with the gentleman. The point of my inquiry was not in the way of criticism, but simply to bring out the fact that this was intended for dredging on the whole Ohio, and that the particular locality to be dredged would be left to the exigencies of the case as they appeared to the War Department.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the lowering the sill of Lock No. 6, so as to give a navigable passageway of 9 et through said lock, $70,000.

Mr. DALZELL, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 23, page 55, the following:

"Improving Ohio River, Pennsylvania: For building Lock and Dam No. 7 in the Ohio River, Pennsylvania, in accordance with the report of Maj. William H. Bixby, as printed in House Document No. 122, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $294,800: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such material and labor as may be necessary for the completion of said lock and dam, to be paid for as provisions may, from time to time, be made by law, to an amount not exceeding $800,000 in excess of the amount herein or heretofore appropriated or heretofore authorized: And provided further. That the said lock and dam will be constructed with a view to a navigable depth of 9 feet."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not occupy any of the time of the House when the general debate was in progress, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALZELL] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to secure appropriation for the construction of Dam No. 7 in the Ohio River. The paragraphs immediately following those which have already been read provide for the construction of Dams Nos. 8, 11, 13, 26, and 37 in that river, but they omit Dam No. 7. And as I am in entire earnest in this proposition, Mr. Chairman, I trust I may have the attention of the committee for a few moments as I seek to demonstrate to them on the merits of the case that this amendment ought to prevail.

The people of western Pennsylvania, whom I have the honor with others to represent, have a very great and vital interest in this amendment. They believe that its success will tend to continue the industrial prosperity that they are now enjoying, and that its failure will go a long ways toward calling a halt in that prosperity. They believe, furthermore, that the failure of this amendment will render to a large degree unavailable the advantages to be derived from the expenditures already made in the Ohio River.

They are in deep earnest about this matter. They are so much impressed with the justice of what they ask that they are unable to understand why an immediate and favorable response is not given to their demands at the hands of the Congress. They wonder why their Representatives on this floor, if they have any influence at all, are unable to secure for them that which they consider a matter of justice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make light of the diffi-culties surrounding the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the construction of their bill, and of the numerous appeals that are made to them, and of the embarrassments under which they must necessarily labor in making wise choice as between various conflicting interests. And I am going to omit the customary eulogy upon the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who is not yet dead, because I have never yet heard anybody assail his integrity, doubt his ability or the wonderful knowledge that he possesses of the subjects with which he deals. But now, Mr. Chairman, neither the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors nor the Committee on Rivers and Harbors itself is infallible. In the rush of a short session, when no hearings could be had before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it may very well be thought that that committee has unconsciously emitted one or more worthy projects, and I want to say to the committee now, in all earnestness, that the people whom I represent have had no opportunity to appear before that committee and submit their claim to have this improvement made. This is the first time that the people I have the honor to represent have had a chance to be heard by the Members of this House, and all that I ask is that when I have concluded the Members of the House will vote in accordance with the merits of this proposition as I have made them to appear or as I have failed to make them appear, without regard as to whether or not the item was included in the original river and harbor bill.

Now, I am not going to stop and discuss the general policy of the improvement of the Ohio River. It is too late for that. That policy has already been inaugurated and its execution entered upon. In my judgment no other policy could have been adopted than the policy that was adopted.

I shall not stop, either, to discuss the relation of water carriage to the regulation and cheapening of freight rates. That question, too, was considered before this great improvement was entered upon, and that also is a closed chapter. I shall address myself, briefly as I can, asking your patience, to my amendment.

The Ohio River in its course to the Gulf washes the shores of six great Commonwealths. It drains 210,000 square miles of territory, in which there are 13,000,000 people, and it flows through as fair and fertile fields as ever met the smile of day. Along its banks are numerous cities and growing towns. Along its banks are numerous cities and growing towns. At its headwaters is the greatest manufacturing district in all the world, a district whose industrial developments are phenomenal. Let me tell you something of the Pittsburg district. It produces annually more coal than either France, Belgium, or Russia. It is built upon a bituminous coal bed, where there is visible to-day a supply of coal amounting to 3,000,000,000 tons. The Pittsburg district produces more iron and steel than either Great Britain, Russia, France, Austria-Hungary, or Belgium. The Pittsburg district produces more steel rails than either Germany, Russia, or France. The Pittsburg district produces more petroleum than Austria, Sumatra, Canada, and Java combined; more than all countries combined save only the rest of the United States and Russia. Pennsylvania makes 60 per cent of all the coke produced in the United States. Almost every ton of that coke comes from the Pittsburg district. Pittsburg manufacturers make substantially all the plate glass that is made in the United States. They have invested in that great industry over $30,000,000. Pittsburg makes more structural shapes than all the rest of the United States put together. makes more tubing than all the rest of the United States; it makes more tin plate than all the rest of the United States; it makes more crucible steel than all the rest of the United States. Let me tell you what that amounts to. The tonnage of Pittsburg last year exceeded the total combined tonnage of five of the world's great ports-New York, London, Liverpool, Hamburg, It reached last year the amazing figure of 123,000,000 tons.

Now, my friends, the question is how to distribute that great tonnage.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. From where does the district the gentleman refers to in Pennsylvania get its iron ore?

Mr. DALZELL. The iron ore comes from Lake Superior.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is it not because of the favorable transportation facilities already given to Pittsburg that it does get to Pittsburg?

Mr. DALZELL. We built our own railroads to bring it in.
Pittsburg enjoys some favorable facilities for transportation, it is true, but that is no reason why it should not have all adequate transportation facilities so far as human ingenuity can

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Would not the same thing exist at St. Louis if the Government should give us the same advantages?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman should not try to drive me away from my argument by talking about St. Louis. I shall be glad to aid in giving to St. Louis what St. Louis is entitled to. I have nothing against St. Louis. I am as anxious to see St. Louis prosper as any other citizen of the United States can be. But I am trying to prove to you that there ought to be an appropriation in this bill that is not now in it, and I want you to decide that question from my statement upon the merits of the question and not upon the fact that it is not in the appropriation bill.

Now, to resume where I left off when I was interrupted. How shall that great tonnage be taken to market? Pittsburg has seven railroads. The topography of western Pennsylvania is such that the possible multiplication of these railroads does not exist. These seven railroads, like all the railroads everywhere throughout the United States, are to-day congested to the very point of disaster. Where shall we go for relief? To the Ohio River. It was to get rid of this great tonnage, to send this great tonnage, produced in that district, to market that the improvement of the Ohio River in the first place was inaugurated.

In 1885 Davis Island dam was constructed 5 miles below Pittsburg. The construction of that dam gave us Pittsburg Harbor. It was originally intended that it should have a 6-foot channel. It has since been changed so as to make it a 9-foot channel, as will be the improvement of the Ohio River, if the Chief Engineer's report is carried out, all the way from Pittsburg to Cairo.

I have not time to stop, nor is it necessary that I should, to detail the history of the building of those other dams in the neighborhood of Pittsburg. We started with No. 1, Davis Island dam. Then five more were built, until we have now six dams in the immediate vicinity of Pittsburg, from No. 1 to No. 6, the last one 28.75 miles from the city of Pittsburg. The river and harbor act of 1896 provided for a survey from Marietta to Pittsburg to ascertain the feasibility of filling in that stretch of river with movable dams, to ascertain their number, their location, and their cost, and in January, 1899, a final report was made, and the Government engineers located twelve additional dams. That would make eighteen dams from Pittsburg, twelve additional. No. 6, as I have told you, is 284 miles from Pitts-burg. No. 7 Dam, the one proposed in this amendment, is 36.44 miles from Pittsburg. No. 8 Dam, provided for in the next paragraph of this bill, is 46.8 miles from Pittsburg. Now, here is the present situation: We have six dams constructed. No. 7 ought to be constructed next, but the River and Harbor Committee skipped No. 7 and have gone to No. 8. With what result? What are the consequences? I say, in the first place, the omission of that dam is illogical. Where the freight is produced at the headwaters of the river, and the river is improved for the purpose of carrying off that freight, the improvements ought to be continuous from the headwaters; and, in the second place, the failure to construct No. 7 renders comparatively useless the original six dams that are there now, and I am going to prove that to you. I do not ask you to take my word for it. I will give you the facts.

Colonel Stickney, the Government engineer, in his report upon these dams, said that they were useful for two purposes—first, for navigation, and, secondly, and largely at certain seasons of the year, more important for the purpose of harborage. Between Dam No. 1 and Dam No. 6 in the Ohio River there is not a single, solitary pool that is fit for the harboring of boats. No fleet could be gathered in any one of those six pools. It can be gathered in the pool at the city of Pittsburg, in the harbor of Pittsburg; and I want to call your attention to some very important facts in that connection as illustrating the importance of this question of harborage.

[The time of Mr. Dalzell having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Graham, it was extended ten min-

Mr. DALZELL. In June, 1895, there were collected in the Pittsburg Harbor 1,200,000 tons of coal, loaded on about 2,500 vessels, awaiting the water to move down the Ohio River, the largest tonnage ever assembled in any harbor in the world at any one time. The rise did not come until November 27. The cost of freight and vessels engaged in the service was estimated at $6,310,000. It cost $2,000 per day to keep the tonnage afloat and $1,000 per day interest on the Investment; total, $3,000 per day. This tonnage was kept waiting in Pittsburg Harbor for water in the Ohio River an average time of five months, or one hundred and fifty days, at a loss of $450,000, which is 5 per cent on $9,000,000. You can appreciate now what Colone! Stickney meant when he said that one of the great purposes of this improvement was to furnish harborage in the pools on the Ohio River between the dams for these great freight cargoes that originate in the Pittsburg district.

Now I come back to what I said a moment ago. Between Dam No. 1 and Dam No. 6 there is not a solitary place in the Ohio River where a great freight fleet can be harbored. Why? Because of the conformation of the shores and the river bed of the Ohio River in its first 30 miles southward from Pittsburg.

The watershed is declivitous always, and Let me show you. erosion results, and that explains the physical condition of the first 30 miles of the Ohio River below Pittsburg. Davis Island Dam, or Dam No. 1, is 5 miles below Pittsburg and forms Pittsburg Harbor, as I have shown you, a good harbor for Dam No. 2 is about 9 miles below Pittsburg, and in the pool above it are Horsetail Ripple, Neville or Sevenmile Island, Lowrie Ripple, Duffs bar, and Merriam bar. Here is a pool in which no harborage can possibly be secured at any time, high Dam No. 3 is scant 11 miles below Pittsburg, and in its short pool of less than 2 miles are Whites Towhead, Whites Ripple, and the trap. The fall in the river in this pool is about 4 feet to the mile, making a current almost like a mill race.

Dam No. 4 is about 18 miles below Pittsburg, and in its pool are Deadmans Island, Sewickley bar, and Logstown bar. There is no harbor here.

Dam No. 5 is about 25 miles below Pittsburg, and in its pool are Crow Island, Hog Island, Wallory bar and ripple, and La-There is no harbor in this pool.

Dam No. 6 is about 29½ miles below Pittsburg, and includes in its pool two long shoals—Beaver shoal and Raccoon shoal.

Now I have shown you up to this time that what I have stated about the harbors in the first six pools is absolutely true.

Now we come to Dam No. 7, the dam that ought to be constructed. Between No. 6 and the site of Dam No. 7 is 8 miles of natural harborage. The shore lines form a harborage without a shoal, without a ripple, without a bar. I ask you whether or not it is good business judgment to omit Dam No. 7 and go to Dam No. 8?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question? Certainly. Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman to say that when these dams are up there is not ample anchorage provided in them? Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. DALZELL. I do say so. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean that there is not?

Mr. DALZELL. I do say so. I do not say so from my owr personal knowledge, but upon reliable information.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Why should there be lack of anchorage in 29 miles of water supported by dams?

Mr. DALZELL. I have given you the reason—because of obstructions in the pools. I can not testify to that of my own knowledge, but that is the consensus of opinion of those who are familiar with the subject.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know that the sole object of the improvement is to provide 9 feet, and when the dams are up, every pool for every mile of the 29 miles is 9 feet, and that is the minimum?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know any such thing. quoted to you your own engineer, Colonel Stickney, who says that the prime object of this improvement is not simply for navigation but for harborage, and I have illustrated by a concrete proposition the truth of Colonel Stickney's assertion. gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, does not fully understand the facts in this case. I may say here without violating any confidence that I have been informed within the last twenty-four hours by more than one member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that these facts have never been laid before them.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, but the question is whether they are facts or

Mr. DALZELL. As between the gentleman from Ohio and myself I shall have to trust that to the committee. Now, then, that is not all. You not only have 8 miles of harborage between Dam No. 6 and the site of Dam No. 7, but you have until you get to Dam No. 8, which is provided for in this bill, 10 miles more. So that you have, below Dam No. 6, 18 miles of dry river when the water is low, all of which could be avoided by the

Now, mind you, the site for Dam No. 7 was bought two year It belongs to the United States Government to-day. All the drillings in the river bed have been made and the tests have been made. The expense has been estimated, the Chief of Engineers tells us that the plans for its construction are now ready, and all they are waiting for is an appropriation to proceed with the work. Now, I do not want to say anything offensive, but it does seem to me that to provide for the construction of Dam No. 8 and leave Dam No. 7 unprovided for is

I appeal to you as business men. Is this a good business proposition? What is No. 8 worth without No. 7? What are Nos. 11 and 13 below worth without No. 7? East Liverpool, the greatest pottery city in the United States, is between No. 7 and No. 8. It had a tonnage last year of 3,777,400. It can neither go up the Ohio River nor go down the Ohio River without the construction of Dam No. 7.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But the gentleman will allow me to correct him. That tonnage can go down, because No. 8 is below. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. DALZELL. Between 7 and 8, yes. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It can go down.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no pool between 7 and 8, and No. 6 is 18 miles off. The gentleman, I fear, has not had these facts thoroughly explained to him. Now, gentlemen of the committee, if I have made a case, I want your votes, whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and its chairman are for it or not, I have not attacked any project in this river and harbor bill. I am willing they should all stay in it. I am willing to concede they are all good projects. I have nothing to say against any I seek to introduce into this bill no new project. seek to introduce into it a dam the site for which is already purchased, the plans for which are already made, and which the Government is now ready to go on with and execute if the money is furnished. I do not seek to introduce into this bill any great project that will ultimately take a large sum of money. All that is asked is the same appropriation that is made for these other dams, a little $240,000 of cash in the first instance. In a bill of this character carrying $83,000,000 it is a mere bagatelle to the United States Government. boon and aid to my people who contribute so much to the general prosperity of the country, and upon whose prosperity depends the contentment and material well-being of hundreds of thousands of wage-earners. All I ask is that this Committee of the Whole will exercise the function for which it was consti-tuted, of revising in the interests of justice the bill reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that does not but ought to have included Dam No. 7. I want nothing but fair play.

Let me have it. [Applause.]
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I can not at all criticise the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] for his earnestness, but I desire to say to the Committee of the Whole that to pass the amendment which he has proposed would be a gross injustice. Let us survey for a moment the situation in the Ohio River. It is about 967 miles long. Originally no improvement was made except by open-channel work. Then a second plan was partially adopted and rather haltingly prosecuted, under which it was proposed to erect dams here and there, with the double purpose of providing harbors, or mooring places, below cities and of raising the level of the water so as to facilitate through navigation. It is upon that project that we are working now. There has been a survey and a partial report, which must still be reviewed by the Board of Review and Engineers, which contemplates the construction of fifty-four dams at a cost of $62,000,000, we could not undertake these dams now, or any considerable number of them. And so we have been pursuing the policy recommended by the earlier reports and heretofore pursued by Congress

I' would state that appeals, though not made with the same eloquence as that for Dam No. 7, have nevertheless been made with the same insistence. I received a telegram from Parkersburg yesterday to the effect that it was an outrage that no provision was made for their dam there. I received one from Wheeling of a similar tenor relating to improvements elsewhere in the Ohio. It but added to my distractions at this present time, for what I most love just now is a contented community and a contented man, and even though this river and harbor bill is so very large there are comparatively few who seem to be contented. Now, then, what shall we do next? I read from the report of a survey of the Ohio River from Marietta to the mouth of the Little Miami. It is in accordance with this report that we are now acting. The engineer officer says (and his report is approved by the Chief of Engineers):

I therefore recommend strongly that the next dam to be built in the Ohio River be built below Cincinnati—

For that provision was made in 1902-

The next one below Point Pleasant and Gallipolis at the mouth of

For that dam below Gallipolis, No. 26, we have made provision in this bill, and when provision is made for it the aggregate appropriations in this bill for the Ohio River are over $4,000,000, an amount very much in excess of what it has received before, an amount so large that, as gentlemen on this floor know, it has caused bitter criticism of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Each of these dams cost approximately $1,200,000. Only one could be provided in the Ohio-that is, only one new dam-without disturbing the equitable division of funds which should be made in the bill. Now we are asked to provide for dams below Gallipolis, below Par-kersburg, below Pittsburg, near to Wheeling, and in two or three other places we were asked to put in dams. What are the claims of Pittsburg? Bear in mind that the recommendation of the engineers is to locate these dams at places in the river where they will act for the benefit of navigation and where they will serve as harbors.

Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a Mr. DALZELL. question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that he has any report from engineers advising the omission of Dam No. 7 and the building of Dam No. 8?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have said nothing of the kind, nor do I intend to.

Mr. DALZELL. But the gentleman stopped after he read only a part.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Very well. I will read what comes next after 26:

The next three below Parkersburg, mouth of the Little Kanawha; Catlettsburg, mouth of the Big Sandy, and Portsmouth, mouth of the Scioto River.

I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. But the gentleman has not answered what I asked him.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, there is no report against that, That is in a separate part of the river, and I am coming to

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What has been done? Six dams have been finished in the 29 miles below Pittsburg, and there are five incomplete dams in all the rest of the river. Now, the State of Ohio, the State of Kentucky, and other States deserve no better treatment from the Rivers and Harbors Committee than the State of Pennsylvania, but in all the other 940 miles, or 938 miles, of the river there are only five incomplete dams, while six dams have been completed in a section of only 29 miles below Pittsburg; and I want to say to you, gentlemen, after the first one below Pittsburg was constructed these dams in the lower portions of the river, of which I have read, confer as much benefit under the plan adopted as any dam just below Pittsburg. But a few interested parties there are able to complain louder. It is not quite correct to say they have not had any hearings, for they appeared before me and one or two other members of the committee a few weeks ago. I asked one of them this question: "There is a dam below Cincinnati that is Would you advise us to abandon that dam and only half built.

only half built. Would you advise us to abandon that dam and go on and build Dam No. 7 below Pittsburg, leaving the other incomplete?" It was a perfectly easy question for the gentleman. He answered, "Why, certainly we would."

Another gentleman said, "The chairman is foolish, because he is not in favor of Dam No. 7." Certainly; why should not these men be competent to judge when they owned some hundreds or thousands of acres of land in the pool to be benefited by the dam?

Another man said, "You are crippling industry." "Crippling industry," when here with less than $25,000,000 a year the Rivers and Harbors Committee has been struggling to provide for all portions of the country. The absurdity, the brutal ignorance, to come in saying because a certain project is not adopted therefore you "cripple industry." [Applause.] I want to read some figures in regard to the amounts appropriated around the city of Pittsburg and the amounts contributed by that city as compared with other communities. I will add it under leave RIVERS AND HARBORS-COMPARISON OF EXPENDITURES

⁶ Large sum expended; amount not ascertainable.
^b Large sum expended by cities and the Chicago Drainage Canal Commission; amount not ascertainable.

This statement was made after the bill of 1902 was passed, and the figures were prepared at the War Department. Nine million dollars was appropriated around that city and $5,200,000around New York, which was next largest sum. What amount has Pittsburg contributed in the way of improvements to its own harbor or in that locality? The munificent sum of $6,000, as against between two and three millions, and I must say, gentlemen of the committee, that when I look on the situation there below Pittsburg I question very much the propriety of these dams being constructed by the United States Government without local contributions. What was the condition? When you get 23 miles below Pittsburg there are farming lands worth $50 to $100 an acre, and the putting in of a dam makes them worth a thousand dollars an acre. Is it not fair that the locality should contribute some part of the expense of building the dam? We already have built these six dams, and it was asserted when they were advocated that they would provide anchorage ground. What need do you have for anchorage ground for more than 29 miles, and besides that, you have three dams finished or under way in the Allegheny, and dams in the Monongahela?

Do you need to continue dams clear down the Ohio on the assertion that they are needed for anchorage ground for Pitts-I do not think it is quite right to leave the impression with this committee that this enormous tonnage of Pittsburg is seeking outlet on that river—116,000,000 tons, or something of that kind. The total amount that went through this Davis Island dam, the first below Pittsburg, was only 3,247,000 tons last year, only one-fourth of the traffic of the Ohio River. Is not the rest of the Ohio entitled to something? Ought I to say when the choice came up between Dams 26 and 27 that I would turn my back upon the report of the engineers that 26 was the next to be built? Ought I to have turned my back upon the recommendation of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association, which followed that report and said 26 was the next to be built? Ought I to have ignored the fact that we have only five incomplete dams in the remaining 940 miles of the river and six completed dams in the 29 miles below Pitts-burg and recommended to the committee the construction of this Dam No. 7? Why, it outrages every idea of fairness and equality; and if there is one principle that we should observe in the Rivers and Harbors Committee it is this, not to yield because of clamor, not to yield because of criticism, but to do justice to the whole country. I know very well several trust magnates and others came down with the thought that they would overawe the Rivers and Harbors Committee

Mr. DALZELL. I say that is not so; I deny it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. You can only tell what their intent

Mr. DALZELL. That is pure demagogy.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, I think the gentleman—
Mr. DALZELL. That is exactly what it is.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman is going a little far. can only tell what the intent was by the action. They were little more discourteous in their words than any delegation which ever came before the committeeMr. DALZELL. Because the chairman at once assaulted them as soon as they came in.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in error about that, and I think the House will stand by me on the proposition that I did not assault them. I am not that violent in my manner.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman was pretty violent that day. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Of course, when men say that a person is foolish, and all that sort of thing, it is but natural that the suggestion would be made that their time could be more usefully spent at home than in the River and Harbor Committee om. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to say that I have observed this discussion with a great deal of interest, the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] and the answer by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton]. I may be unable to get the whole of the gentleman's statement right, but I have not yet heard any answer to the contention made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] that other expensive improvements already made in the Ohio River are rendered comparatively worthless without the building of Dam

I would like to have that answered.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state that that assertion is not based upon the facts at all. The argument was made to us that the completion of Dam No. 6 and the other dams would increase by 50 per cent the navigable period in the Ohio. The completion of Dam No. 7 will no doubt somewhat further increase the navigable period, but so will every other dam on the river increase the navigable period in the Ohio and will give benefit to a local traffic. Why, the coal traffic out of the Kanawha River, clear below this, compares in magnitude with that out of the Monongahela, and we have included in this a provision for a dam below the Big Kanawha River, which is the one recommended by the engineers as the next to be constructed. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] will, of course, understand this, that we can not construct all of the fifty-four, and must select those which will be of the greatest benefit in the improvement of the river. There is but one new dam provided for in this bill and that is the one below—26.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That does not quite answer the point. If I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania right, it was that these other dams for the purposes for which they were constructed are comparatively valueless without completing Dam No. 7.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, I would say in answer that there is no basis for that argument. There are 29 miles of anchorage which is available nine months of the year. When the water is low there is a pool of 9 feet in depth in each, and through navigation for 9 feet is provided in every one of them. Otherwise you can not have any navigation on the river at all. It is true that when those dams are down they can not anchor their boats, but during the times when the dams are up, when the plan of canalization is made effective by the raising of the dams, it is possible.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dal-

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DALZELL. Division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Lock and Dam No. 26 in the Ohio River, in the States of Ohio and West Virginia, $100,000, and the provisions of the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1905, appropriating $135,000 in the aggregate for Locks and Dams Nos. 19 and 26 are hereby repealed, and the said amount is made available for the construction of said Lock and Dam No. 26: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said lock and dam, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $965,000, in addition to the amounts herein appropriated or made available: Provided, That said lock and dam shall be constructed with a view to a navigable depth of 9 feet.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I regretted very much not to vote for the proposed dam, No. 7, below Pittsburg. My only reason for not doing it is I recognize the fact that the Ohio River can not have more money for improvements at this time and because I know and think I can demonstrate that other projects for improve-ment of the Ohio River provided for in this bill are more meritorious and more deserving at this time than the proposed Dam No. 7.

The committee has just recently heard read by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that portion of the report of the Chief of Engineers recommending the construction first of the dam below Cincinnati, already provided for, then the dam below Point Pleasant, W. Va., and Gallipolis, Ohio, which is Dam No. 26, provided for in the paragraph just read. reasons, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, might well be set out to the committee why Dam 26 was preferred by the Chief of Engineers in his report and the reasons which moved the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to give preference to that dam in this bill. On page 8 of the same report from which the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee read, that of the Chief of Engineers, the report by Major Bixby, of the Engineer Corps, is quoted as follows:

I am decidedly of the opinion that specially advantageous results to commerce, obtained with special quickness, will follow the construction of dams across the Ohio River whenever these dams are built a short distance below large tributaries and large cities, partly because the large harborages thus obtained in the Ohio River will afford fine places for the loading and unloading of coal fleets and other tows, and for the stoppage and assemblage of such fleets and tows while waiting favorable stages for departure up and down both the main river and its tributaries, and partly because such increased harborage will be most advantageously placed by being at the already established centers of population and freight communications, thus giving special stimulus to commerce and related business interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Dam No. 26, constructed, as it will be, a short distance below Gallipolis, Ohio, a distance of about 9 miles below the mouth of the Great Kanawha River, will give a pool 18 miles long in the Ohio River, at a point halfway, practically, between Pittsburg and Louisville, for the assembly of the great coal fleets destined to the lower portion of the river. The Kanawha, which flows into the Ohio River 9 miles above where this dam will be constructed, was locked and dammed by the Government some years ago for a distance of It flows through a country whose coal resources are 90 miles. practically inexhaustible. A few years ago the Government engineer who was in charge of that improvement, a gentleman of the highest ability and character, a citizen of my own town-Mr. Addison M. Scott-devised and tried the plan of letting the water out from one lock to another in the Kanawha, until all the water contained in the ten locks had gone into the Ohio, and in that way, upon the head of water thus artificially created, it has been possible frequently, on a very slight rise in the Ohio, to take Kanawha coal to Cincinnati and even to Louis-With this improvement—with this Dam 26—now provided for in this bill, with its 18-mile pool in the Ohio River and a considerable pool, as well as harborage, in the mouth of the Kanawha, it will be possible at any time, with occasional ex-ceptions on account of ice in the Ohio, to float coal to Cincinnati and to Louisville, and not only at those cities, but at many other points, reach available and important railroads for interior transportation. This would prevent famine prices for coal not only at Cincinnati and Louisville and other river points, but at points in the great Northwest and elsewhere, to be reached by rail from the Ohio River points.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. These are the reasons, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, why Dam 26 has been preferred to some other projects in the Ohio River which have been submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others. And it does seem to me that instead of criticising the chairman and the committee for the method in which they have apportioned the money available at this time for rivers and harbors, it would be wiser for us to have the courage to provide, by some bonding system or otherwise, to secure a sufficient amount of money to give speedy completion to all these projects which gentlemen are so earnest in behalf of, and whose importance to commerce has been developed and proven beyond doubt. There was a time when the Rivers and Harbors Committee was besought to appropriate for improvements of rivers and harbors, not because the improvements were demanded by commerce already in existence and already developed, but in the hope that some time in the future commerce might be developed by the improvement. But that time has gone by. Conditions have changed. There is already developed a traffic way beyond the present means of transportation. The railroads of the country are unable to handle the low-grade freight of the country, and various portions of the country are suffering because there is no adequate supply of coal for domestic and manufacturing purposes.

It seems to me that it would be wisdom to provide in the very near future some means which would relieve the railroads of the congestion of low-grade freight, which would relieve the manufacturing sections of the country from undue scarcity and high price of their coal supply, and which would enable this low-grade traffic to move with something like the rapidity with which the business interests of the country and the general prosperity of the country demand. I feel confident, Mr. Chairman, that so far as the Ohio River appropriations are concerned, the items contained in this bill, as it is reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, will be shown by careful and dispassionate examination to be a proof not only of what we all admit, that the chairman and the committee have been fair and honest in this matter, but that the committee have used the very best judgment in the selection of the items. The committee has been fair, too, in the amount appropriated for the Ohio.

[Here the hammer fell.] The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.: By the removal of rocks in the channel of said river near to the falls, $43,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Any quarrel between the advocates of river improvement is unfortunate; but unfortunate though it may be generally, it sometimes serves to clear the atmosphere. I am glad to second somewhat what was said by the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Gaines] touching the Ohio River. I am glad that there has grown up a realization on the part of the House and the committee that the Ohio River does not stop as well as begin at Pittsburg. Now, I say that with all kindness; but it is manifest that when an advocacy is made of a particular project on the ground that all other projects on the river are more or less useless unless that one project is attended to, we have a condition of civic pride, to put it mildly, that is altogether out of keeping with the facts. This bill, for instance, provides, by an expenditure of a third of what it will cost to build a dam on any other part of the river, for one at Louisville. That dam will give a 9-foot stage of water for 50 miles, a pool longer than anywhere else. It not only does that, but it gives 6 feet to the Kentucky River, which is now locked and dammed most of its way, and which, by virtue of other provisions of this bill, will be improved up to the coal fields at and near Beattyville, Ky., opening up that coal region, as the coal region of West Virginia is opened up by the provision for Lock No. 26, thus putting both these fields in competition with Pennsylvania, a consummation devoutly to be wished.

There is a stretch of river between Louisville and Evansville, many miles in length, where a limited amount of dredging will give the necessary depth of water most of the year round. we have had a hard time getting appropriations and getting the War Department to do that dredge work, usually because that portion of the appropriation that went to the Ohio River was being taken by the upper part of the river. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] makes the startling statement that because commerce exists in large measure at the head of the river therefore the river ought to be improved downward instead of upward—the natural way. Every dam that is built below the city of Pittsburg is of just as much importance to the navigation of that river, and more so, than those built at and near Pittsburg. They all serve only to establish a certain pool along the river, and uone of them will have their complete utility realized until all the dams are completed. But to say that we, on the lower Ohio, must wait until all the dams around Pittsburg, which because of the declivity of the river have to be at closer distances, are finished before the lower part of the Ohio River is to be considered is, to my mind, a proposition without merit. Now, there is not a man on the Ohio but would like to have every dam provided for that is desirable and would like to have seen the dam provided for in this bill as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]; but there also is not a man here but what knows that of necessity there is only a certain amount of money that can go to the Ohio River and that this increase could not be made in accord with the general plan of the bill and of the treatment of the Ohio, and therefore its affirmative consideration by the committee would have resulted in denying the lower-river projects that are infinitely more pressing and important.

The fact that this debate has taken place will be a very valuable one if it serves to show to Pittsburg that she should cooperate with all portions of the river rather than gather to herself all of the appropriations made for the Ohio River. believe I can say with due modesty that I know as many river men on the Ohio River as any man in this House, and have been in as intimate contact with them. I know that at my city there is now needed an improvement that any river man will tell you will do more for the whole river than any other improvement involving the same expenditure, and I refer not to the dam there, but to the enlargement of the canal. The falls of the Ohio are a natural obstruction to commerce, and Pittsburg in particular is interested in having every possible thing done to remove that natural obstruction. Now, we have got to have there an enlargement of the canal. It was built years ago, and is utterly inadequate to handle the freight that now passes down the river, because these boats, carrying immense tows, have to be broken up to pass through the canal, and by the time they get through and reassemble the fleet, the crest of the wave is gone, and they frequently have to lay just below Louisville for days waiting for another rise to continue their journey down the river. Pittsburg river men know that the improvement would be of more value to the river as a whole, and more valuable to Pittsburg than the improvement suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Yet I have not sought to provide for this work in this bill, because I know the necessary limitations upon the bill, but I gladly take the occasion not to criticise the zeal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but to call attention to the facts in the hope that it will be impressed upon the minds of some that the Ohio River does not stop with the State of Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new paragraph to read: "Improving Green River, Kentucky, between Mammoth Cave and Munfordville in accordance with the report of Capt. Harry Burgess, Corps of Engineers, of date June 8, 1905, contained in House Document No. 377, first session Fifty-ninth Congress, for the construction of additional locks and dams so as to afford slack-water navigation to Munfordville, Ky., $550,000."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee long in advocacy of the adoption of this amendment. I would not propose the amendment if I had any doubt about the merits of the proposition involved. Green River at the point mentioned in the amendment at low-water mark is a stream of about 200 feet in width, and I do not believe there is another stream in the whole country of that width that will average the depth of that stream. It passes through a country that is very rich in its timber and mineral resources. report of the engineer who made the survey, Captain Burgess, is stated that there are, in this short stretch on either side of the river, at least 100,000 acres of timber that can not reach a market for the lack of transportation.

There are filed and printed with the report also the report made by the State geologist of Kentucky, giving the mineral resources adjacent to this splendid stream. I can do no better, Mr. Chairman, than to read a few extracts from these reports. I read from the report of Captain Burgess, in which he says:

I read from the report of Captain Burgess, in which he says:

On the lower part of this stretch timber lands lie on both sides of the stream. It is estimated that there are over 100,000 acres of good timber land bordering on this stretch of the river. The timber on this land includes oak, beech, ash, hickory, elm, and some excellent poplar, which timber is practically excluded from market, there being no means of transportation except by rafting during freshets, which is uncertain, involves a large loss of timber, and is apparently unprofitable. The land on the south bank at a little distance from the river is good farming land, but on the north the land is not particularly well adapted to agriculture. The river bottoms are generally narrow, the hills approaching the stream from both sides. These hills contain excellent oolitic limestone, suitable for building purposes and situated under the most favorable conditions for quarrying if to be transported by the river. There are deposits of iron which were worked somewhat in the past, but the coal and asphalt probably do not extend much above the cave. There are some deposits of excellent plastic clays near the river, among them a white china clay of unsurpassed quality.

I may state in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that early in

I may state in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that early in the last century there were iron furnaces established along this river, perhaps the first furnaces of this kind that were ever constructed west of the Allegheny Mountains. They were established, successfully operated for years, and were only abandoned when railroads were built into other mineral districts, affording a cheaper transportation than could be had by the furnaces along this stream. Concerning the mineral deposits, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a few extracts from the report of the State geologist:

The hills are of limestone, the capping beds being a very light-gray, almost white, oolitic limestone. Included in the colitic beds is a band of blue limestone 2½ to 3 feet thick, which serves as a "parting" for the oolitic beds. Excepting one small opening at Munfordville, no quarries have been opened in this oolite. The stone is under a light covering of soil; hence there is but little overburden to remove. Large areas of it could be uncovered at convenient points to the river with very little stripping, and the drainage of quarries in it would be good.

At no point was the exposure such as to enable the making of a perfectly accurate section of the oblitic beds, but at Munfordville the following measurements were obtained:

		ncnes.
1.	Top ledge of gray colitic limestone	_ 38
2.	Second ledge, blue limestone	_ 29
3.	Third ledge, light-gray oolitic limestone	_ 46
4.	Fourth ledge, light-gray oolitic limestone	_ 29
5.	Fifth ledge, light-gray colitic limestone	_ (?)

It will be noted that a thickness of 11 feet 10 inches is exposed. The top of the fifth ledge only is exposed at the point where the section was made, but the croppings in the vicinity show it to be about 9 feet thick, giving a total thickness of about 21 feet, including the blue lime-

On the farm of Eli Bradley, 15 miles down the river from Munford-ville, the following section was obtained in the river bluff:

H. H. C.	Feet.
Top ledge, light-gray oolitic limestone	16
Second ledge, blue limestone	3
Third ledge light-gray colitic limestone	20

Beneath the third ledge blue limestone comes in. There are distinct seams, but no shaly partings between the ledges. The blue limestone forming the second ledge is subdivided into four layers of good thickness for curbing, paving, and rubblework. It is also excellent for ballast and macadam, and not too hard to crush readily for such purpose. The oolitic stone breaks well to line with wedge and feather or under hammer. It is soft enough to be cut or sawed to dimensions with great ease. The supply of this stone on Green River in Hart County is almost without limit.

Reading also from a further report of another one of the geologists upon the question of stone, I find the following:

geologists upon the question of stone, I find the following:

On either side of Green River the moderate elevations and the flat country along the river are capped with collitic limestone of good quality. It is in 18 and 20 foot strata; the upper 20-foot stratum is overlain with residuary clay and breecia; the 18 and 20 foot strata are divided by a 2½-foot stratum of compact blue limestone.

The collitic limestone being a building stone of standard value, and being in this instance advantageously located, would, provided the river is opened to traffic, suggest quarrying and dressing on a large scale for what would prove its uncontested market, namely, the river towns from point of production to New Orleans.

Its favorable location, known and unequaled value in the manufacture of Portland cement, combined with the abundance of maris in same locality, thereby supplying all raw material for making cement immediately on the banks of the river, which would be sent down inclines to barges or boats for transportation, thereby supplying several ideal locations for such a factory between Munfordville and Mammoth Cave.

Large beds of rock asphalt of good quality occur along the river for several miles.

It is a matter of history that Hart County in the past produced good pig iron from deposits along the bank of Green River. Above Munfordville, on the farm now owned by Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner, is a deposit of limonite of good quality and known quantity. Should Green River be made navigable it is possible this industry may be revived, as cheap transportation would then be furnished for fuel and refined products.

There are also, Mr. Chairman, near this stream, some of the most excellent clays that can be found anywhere in the United States. I myself, sir, saw a sample of chinaware made from the clay by a firm in Trenton, N. J., I think, which sent a man down to take out a sample of the clay and manufacture it. I think it was as pretty china as I have ever seen in my life. The State geologist says concerning these clays:

Some of the white-china clays of this county, as to color and the production of beautiful translucent wares, are unsurpassed. In the various exhibits of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition no clays produced a better showing than the samples of kaolin from Hart County, Ky, now on exhibition in the State museum at Lexington.

Besides the kaolins, or china clays, there are plastic clays in almost unlimited quantities. These clays contain no large percentage of impurities, but are found possessing practically every shade of yellow, brown, drab, and red. The deposits range from 10 to 40 feet in thickness, and occur at various points over the entire area of the county north of the river.

Mr. Chairman, I can not express how intense has been my anxiety to see provision made by this honorable body for the improvement of this splendid stream to the point named in the amendment, and I sincerely regret that the committee did not include it in the bill now under consideration. That the opening up this stream for navigation to Munfordville would save thousands of dollars in transportation charges to the people in that section and result in the development of much valuable mineral and the marketing of millions of feet of lumber, hitherto untouched for the lack of facilities for reaching markets, there can be no doubt.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this improvement is of sufficient importance, not only to that locality but to the commercial world in general, to justify the appropriation of the amount named in my amendment. I therefore ask the House in its wisdom to adopt the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just a word about I have no doubt that there are very considerable mineral resources in that locality, and that it is a country which on development will assume very great prominence in furnishing its share of the resources of the country; but this is a very large country, and we have to provide transportation facilities for it as best we can. I think we should adopt the policy of improving the main streams first. The Ohio is not yet developed to a high degree of efficiency for navigation, and I trust the gentleman and his constituents may patiently wait until their turn comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 21, page 58, add the following par-

After the word "dollars," in line 21, page 98, and the following paragraph:

"Cumberland River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement by the construction of Locks and Dams No. 19 and 20, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the work of constructing said locks and dams, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $400,000, exclusive of the amounts herein appropriated."

The EDWARD Construction of the co

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, the Government has undertaken the improvement of the Cumberland River, and has di-vided that work into what is known as the upper Cumberland and the lower Cumberland, the upper Cumberland being designated as all that part of the Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn., and the lower Cumberland being designated as that part below Nashville, Tenn. Under the present bill, with what has already been done, seven locks and dams are to be completed above Nashville. In the act of 1905 the policy was adopted to begin improving the Cumberland River at the head of the present navigation, and in that act was provided for the construction of Lock and Dam No. 21, which is 29 miles below Burnside, Ky., which is at present the head of navigation on the Cumberland Now, in this bill before the House the committee has seen fit to appropriate something like a half million dollars for the improvement of the river in and around Nashville, Tenn., but has not appropriated or provided for one dollar at the upper end of the river. Above Nashville, and in the portion which we are seeking to improve in Kentucky, a stretch of a hundred and ten miles below Burnside, there is no railroad, no means of transportation except the Cumberland River. Seven counties in the State of Kentucky are dependent upon this river, and if we could have the provision put in which I have offered, to continue the improvement from the upper end, as well as from the lower end, it would be of greater benefit, in my opinion, not only to the country at large, but to the local people there, than the improvement on the lower part. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, at Burnside, Ky., at the head of the present navigation in the Cumberland River, we tap the coal fields of Kentucky, and only 40 miles below there coal brings the enormous price of 30 cents a bushel, while it can be put on the cars at and near Burnside at 6 cents a bushel. One of the most important things, it seems to me, to the country to-day is to obtain cheap fuel, and while the Kentucky hills are full of coal and while they are tapped by the Cumberland and Kentucky rivers, the State of Kentucky, and especially the city of Louisville, have been purchasing their coal from Pittsburg, Pa., for the last quarter of a century, waiting for the improvement of the Cumberland and Kentucky rivers. I therefore hope that the committee will give my amendment favorable consideration. [Applause.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Do I understand this amendment is for the Cumberland River, No. 19?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would state we have made what seems to me very generous provision for the Cumberland River in the line that is most rational and helpful. We have provided for the completion of five locks and dams and we vided in the last bill for Lock and Dam 21. The board of engineers made a very exhaustive examination of this locality afterwards and reported adversely upon the dams between 7 and 21, and for the present those certainly ought not to be undertaken. As regards the Kentucky, the committee has recommended provision for the completion of the locks and dams to and including 13. Those will open up a very large part of country where there is a large quantity of coal; also raising the crest of the dam at Louisville will raise the water of the Kentucky at the mouth, making it so that the locality tributary to the river will receive very substantial benefit from this bill. As for the Cumberland, I do not think anything should be undertaken at the present time beyond that which is appropriated for, namely, the completion of these five locks and dams above Nashville, continuing slack-water navigation to Carthage and beyond. I trust the amendment will be voted

Insert after line 2, page 69, the following:

"Toward the construction of a navigable waterway 14 feet in depth, the locks, however, to be so constructed as to permit of a depth of water of 20 feet over the miter silis, from the south end of the channel of the Senitary District of Chicago near Lockport, Ill., by way of the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, to the mouth of said Illinois River by way of the Mississippi River to St. Louis, Mo., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 263, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, $3,000,000: Provided. That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said navigable waterway, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $28,000,000 exclusive of the amount herein appropriated."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the State of Illinois, through

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the State of Illinois, through its legislature, passed an act some time ago which provides:

When such channel shall be completed and the water turned therein to the amount of 300,000 cubic feet of water per minute, the same is hereby declared a navigable stream, and whenever the General Government shall improve the Desplaines and Illinois rivers for navigation to connect with this channel, the said General Government shall have full control over the same for navigation purposes, but not to interfere with its control for sanitary or drainage purposes.

The Congress of the United States some years ago appropriated $200,000 for the purpose of making a survey to ascertain whether or not the proposition of constructing a ship canal from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico was feasible. The survey under the appropriation made was conducted from Chicago to St. Louis.

The commission appointed to make that survey reported the feasibility of the plan. This commission reported also the cost of the improvement to be $31,000,000. The city of Chicago, through its sanitary district board, has already constructed the most expensive portion of this waterway, running from the city of Chicago, on the Great Lakes, to the city of Joliet, a distance of 40 miles. That part of the channel already constructed is 160 feet wide, 36 feet deep, and capable of carrying ships drawing 24 feet of water. Since this survey was completed the Sanitary District of Chicago has expended, in the further extension of the project, $3,000,000, so that, as a matter of fact, the $3,000, 000 thus expended should be deducted from the $31,000,000, thus making the cost of the improvement $28,000,000. That such an improvement would aid greatly in the movement of the commerce of the Mississippi Valley everybody in the country will agree. Chicago, having expended $50,000,000 out of the pockets of its own people for the commencement of this great improvement, argues in favor of the further extension of the project by the Government of the United States.

The proposition to postpone the construction of this waterway until a survey is made of the Mississippi River, in order to ascertain whether or not that part of the project is feasible, seems to me to be unworthy of consideration.

If all the country is to profit by the opportunities which are to be created by the construction of the Panama Canal, we ought to be at work on this improvement now, so that when a survey is reported of the Mississippi River from St. Louis to New Orleans, we will have proceeded so far with the work as to save much valuable time and be prepared to take advantage of the situation thus created several years earlier than we will otherwise be able to do.

It seems to me that no project presented for the consideration of the House has more merit in it that the one proposed in this amendment. The Mississippi Valley is bountiful in the products of its farms, its forests, its mines, and its mills.

Its commerce can be developed beyond that of any similar territory in the nation if the needed facilities are but afforded, and I believe that we ought not to delay the favorable consideration of this question beyond the present session of Con-

Objection is often made to this as but a part of the project. But it is such an important part of an important project that it ought to be given immediate and favorable consideration. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to be present during the consideration of this bill in the committee, and I would like to make a few remarks that will take more than the time allotted to me under the rule. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I be given fifteen minutes to discuss this subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Olmsted). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I only intend to occupy the time of the House long enough to discuss a few erroneous and misleading statements and reports that have been made to the Congress of the United States. Under the law passed a few years ago a commission was authorized to investigate the projects proposed by the Congress. They were instructed to report not only on the feasibility of the projects, but the desirability and their value to the commerce of the country.

In reviewing the deep waterway or the 14-foot channel between Chicago and St. Louis they report unfavorably, the principal contention being that the amount of commerce existing between the city of Chicago and the city of St. Louis does not justify this appropriation, and they make the statement to Congress that only 1,000,000 tons originate between the city of Chicago and the city of St. Louis annually. Had I been here during the discussion of this bill in the committee I am quite sure that I could have convinced the committee that it was a very incorrect statement, and in order to give this House an idea of how incorrect that statement is I will read to you the amount of tonnage of three articles that originate on the banks of the proposed waterway and pass between the city of Chicago and the city of St. Louis annually. From a point 60 miles below the city of Chicago, along the lines of the proposed waterway, there is originated annually and carried to the great city of Chicago 3,500,000 tons of stone. In the city of Chicago there is originated annually and carried to a point on the Des Plaines River, 40 miles below the city of Chicago, 1,000,000 tons of iron ore. There is mined along the banks of the Illinois River coal that is tributary to this waterway annually more than 8,000,000 tons. In 1904 there were 8,500,000 tons of coal mined tributary to the Illinois River. The total of these three items that are tributary to and would be carried on the 14-foot waterway between the city of St. Louis and the city of Chicago (all of this tonnage is in addition to the report made by the engineer board, because they gathered their statistics from miscellaneous sources) is in all 13,000,000 tons, instead of 1,000,000 tons annually, as reported by the board of engineers. If I had been able to attend the sessions of the committee during the past month, I am confident that I could have satisfied its members that between the city of St. Louis and the city of Chicago there originates annually more than 50,000,000 tons, and all tributary to the Chicago River, Chicago Drainage Canal, the Des Plaines River, and the Illinois River.

My colleague [Mr. Davidson], a member of the committee, yesterday gave his reasons why this improvement should be postponed. He seemed to me, while he was discussing it, not to express his full sentiments. I am convinced, from what I know of the sound judgment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that when the time comes that we shall have all the data he requires, he will be in the forefront of the men who shall be advocating the construction of this waterway. But he expressed some fear yesterday that the Chicago Drainage Canal might reduce the levels of the Lakes at least 6 inches. Whether that be so or not, Mr. Chairman, I can not answer, but I know that the records of the levels of the Lakes prove that since the day the drainage canal was opened until to-day the Lakes have been higher than they were the day before the opening of the Chicago Drainage Canal, and the best engineers of the country, such men as Isham Randolph, the man who constructed the Chicago Drainage Canal, and Lyman Cooley, one of the most celebrated engineers of this country, contend that the water diverted from the Lakes by the way of the Chicago Drainage Canal will never affect the levels of the Lakes. The gentleman said that Chicago is now only diverting a portion of the water that will be required, which will be 10,000 or 14,000 cubic feet per second. Chicago has been permitted to divert the water. He said if the 10,000 or the 14,000 cubic feet are taken from the Great Lakes, the damages that the National Government will be liable for, should it take over the Chicago Drainage Canal, would be enormously greater than the $4,000,000 in damage suits that are now instituted against the drainage canal.

Mr. Chairman, whether it be a fact or not that the damages will be greater when the 10,000 cubic feet are diverted, 10,000 cubic feet per second is not essential for a ship canal. now taking from the lake, through the Chicago River and the drainage canal, 4,200 cubic feet per second, and the largest boats that sail upon the Great Lakes are traveling up and down the Chicago River every day, which is evidence that for the purposes of a ship canal much less than 10,000 cubic feet will be required. But for sanitary purposes 10,000 or more cubic feet will be required. And while the gentleman said that the Secretary of War was investigating to determine whether or not the required amount of water should be allowed to go through the drainage canal I am quite confident, should the question ever be presented to Congress to stop the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the drainage canal, Congress will never agree that more than 160,000 cubic feet per second shall go by the way of the St. Lawrence River, to the detriment of 2,000,000 people requiring ten or fifteen thousand cubic feet per second for the preservation of the life and health in the great city of Chicago.

So I have no fear, Mr. Chairman, of the decision of the Secretary of War, because I have confidence in the Congress of the United States; and I know, too, Mr. Chairman, when that question comes up before the Congress of the United States, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Davidson] will stand with Chicago for pure water and for the preservation of the life and health of its people. The gentleman suggested that under our State law the Government would be compelled to assume obligations for damages caused by the construction of the drainage

It has never been the intention of any Representative from the city of Chicago or from Illinois to burden the people of the United States with any such obligations. If I had been present during the sessions of the committee, I should have proposed that certain money be appropriated to begin this work, I should have proposed an appropriation to make a survey from the city of St. Louis to the city of Cairo, and I should also have proposed that this waterway built by the people of Chicago, costing up to date more than $53,000,000, should be turned over to the Federal Government without any possible obligation, and in making such propositions I should only have been expressing the sentiments of the people of the State of Illinois.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] suggested yesterday in his remarks that if we can not have 14 feet from St. Louis to New Orleans it would be impossible to maintain a 14-foot channel from the city of Chicago to the city of St. Louis. Now, I know that the gentleman is mistaken, and I know, with the many things that he has to look after in the House, he has not given this project such attention as it is entitled to. If a 14-foot channel is constructed from Chicago to St. Louis, no high stage of water will ever affect this depth. It is not a silt-bearing stream above the Missouri River. In other words, the channel does not come in contact with the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri River until it empties into St. Louis This bay always has a deep pool, even in periods when there is only 5 feet from St. Louis to Cairo. It is a well-known fact that all the trouble in the Mississippi River, the shifting of bars, is caused by the water from the Missouri. It is therefore obvious that there is no danger of filling the channel from Chicago to St. Louis, even though there is only 5 feet of water from St. Louis to Cairo. I agree with the gentleman when he says if we can not have the 14-foot waterway from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico the waterway loses more than half its value. When I began discussing this project in this House twelve years ago the only thought that I had in mind was that we might begin at the Great Lakes and end at the Gulf of Mexico, and that the waterway might be so deep as to make it possible to carry ships of from two to four thousand tons burden. But if this project should stop at St. Louis-if it got no farther than St. Louis with 14 feet-there would be many days in each year when there would be 14 feet of water between the city of St. Louis and the city of Cairo without any sort of improvement on the Mississippi River.

There is a project now for which Congress has been appropriating, looking toward an 8-foot channel between St. Louis and Cairo, and an Army engineer before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors two years ago said that it would not be difficult to maintain a 10-foot channel under the present project and that 9 feet was as easily obtained as 8 feet, proposed in the project.

The low-water stage between these two points is about 5 feet. With a 10-foot channel between these points, it would be 5 feet deeper in the very lowest possible stage than it is at this time, and would mean, Mr. Chairman, that, with the improvement of the river as proposed now, there would be more days in the year when there would be a 14-foot channel between the city of St. Louis and the city of Cairo than days when there would be less than that depth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of his colleague be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, as to the Mississippi River between the city of Cairo and the city of New Orleans, I have been informed by the engineers who have surveyed on the Mississippi River for many years that they always dredge for 12 feet, and that 14 feet has frequently been obtained, and once obtained is as easily maintained as 9 feet. So there is no difficulty in operating a ship of 14 feet draft between the city of Cairo and the city of New Orleans. Thus it is obvious that there are more days in the year when there, will be 14 feet under the present projects than days when there will be less than 14 feet from Chicago to New Orleans. The proposed waterway from Chicago to the city of St. Louis means that we are to have 14 feet of water every day in the year, and if that is not meritorious, Mr. Chairman, then I know of no meritorious project that has ever been presented to this Congress during my service.

I read a statement a few days ago in a newspaper made by a Member from Iowa with reference to this project, in which he said if this improvement is made it will be all right going downstream, but the velocity will be so great that it will be impossible to come upstream. This is a return of the ghost of twelve years ago. Twelve years ago I began discussing this project. Many Members said that it would be impossible to construct and maintain a 14-foot channel between the city of Grafton and the mouth of the Missouri River, because, they said, in order to have a 14-foot channel that would clean itself the Mississippi would have to be confined to a channel so narrow as to make the velocity so great that it would be impossible to manage a ship up or down stream the few miles from Grafton to the Missouri River. But I continued pleading with Congress for the survey, and $200,000 was appropriated. A survey has been made. What is the report of the board of survey has been made. What is the report of the board of engineers? They report that the proper thing to do is to build a dam at Alton, thus creating from Alton to the Illinois River slack-water navigation 14 feet every day in the year, with the very minimum of dredging to maintain it, instead of a velocity so great as to render navigation impossible on the reach from Grafton to Alton.

So, Mr. Chairman, it is the old argument back again; it is the old ghost that was with us twelve years ago. During that time those of us who favored the survey answered in this wise: I do not know whether your statement is correct or not, but let us turn it over to a board of engineers, have them investigate, order them to report to the Congress of the United States, and if they report that a navigable channel can not be constructed and maintained then we will stop talking about it. The survey has been made; it has been demonstrated that the channel can be made navigable, and it does seem to me that this is rather a late day to come back with that old ghost.

Since I have served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I have become well acquainted with every member of the committee, and I know each member probably as well as any other member of the committee. With the members of the committee I have not the slightest complaint. I have confidence that every man acted on this project as his judgment dictated. I have no complaint with any man who disagrees with me on any proposition. All I ask is a fair, frank statement, an opportunity to make my case, and if I can not convince I do not expect to succeed. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the mean hers of that committee should be criticised for any part of this bill that they have reported to Congress. I have so much confidence in the committee that I am satisfied to vote for the bill notwithstanding the fact that I have not participated in its preparation. If I have any complaint at all it is that the committee has not recommended appropriations enough. I am very glad to have an opportunity to discuss this subject on the floor of the House, and whether it wins to-day or not, much good has been accomplished in the discussion that has been going on for the last few days; more has been done to advance this project and to cause an appropriation to be made in the near future for it than all the work that has been done in the last So I think the gentlemen that have been advocating ten years. it here for the last six days are to be congratulated on calling the attention of the country to the value and the merits of this Will we begin this work to-day? I can not answer that question. Will there be constructed a waterway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf? Yes. Just as sure as God reigns above. [Applause.] Gentlemen of the committee, if that be true, it will be constructed because it is a meritorious project, and because it will be of value to the people of the Mississippi Valley. It has been talked about for a hundred years. Let it be said that the waterway the people have discussed for a hundred years has been acted upon by this Congress. Let it be said from to-day that the beautiful dream of over a hundred years is now to become an accomplished fact. Why not give to the people of the Mississippi Valley an opportunity to place the product of that valley in Europe and in the Orient more cheaply than it can be placed there in any other way. The difference between the cost of transportation other way. The difference between the cost of transportation of grain by water from Chicago to New Orleans as against the cost of transporting by rail to the seaboard is from 7 to 9 cents a bushel; in other words, it costs from 9 to 11 cents a bushel by rail to seaboard against 2 cents by this waterway, and that means more to the farmers of the Mississippi Valley, many times more, than would pay the interest on the money required to do the work. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a list of Members of this House who have been reported to me as favoring the deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. Their position the deep waterway from the lakes to the out.

has been ascertained through letters written to them by their has been ascertained through their replies to those letters. They constituents and through their replies to those letters. evidently hold, as we do, that the time for this great undertak ing has come-that we should not defer until to-morrow what No doubt they will be surprised to learn, can be done to-day. as will James J. Hill, Theodore P. Shonts, and other great men of the nation who regard this project as the most urgent of all river-improvement projects, that under a new rule adopted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors this undertaking can never be even considered, survey or no survey. And yet this is the case. The rule I refer to is to the effect that no project, large or small, shall be undertaken unless an amount sufficient for its completion can be appropriated at one time. It is patent to every thinking man on this floor that, if strictly adhered to, this rule will forever bar that great project from the committee room and the House, unless the Members take the bit in their teeth and run away from or run over the rule. The reasons for this are twofold: First, there never will be a river and harbor bill large enough to carry a sufficient appropriation for the completion of the deep waterway, because the revenues of the Government will not permit such an outlay at any one session; and, secondly, even if they did, even if we had the ready cash in the Treasury, such a bill could never pass through Congress, for the simple reason that it would mean the exclusion of every other project in the country, for the time being at least, which would be both impossible and wrong.

What, then, is the only alternative under these circumstances? Let us do as Alexander the Great did when he solved the Gordian knot-cut it with the sword which our constituents have placed in our hands. To-day this rule is being enforced against the Mississippi Valley. To-morrow it will be invoked against another section that may be interested in some great project, just as the committee or its chairman may see fit to make use of it. And, Mr. Chairman, what we find fault with is that, even in this bill, with a brand new rule staring its framers in the face, it has not been enforced indiscriminately-or will anyone claim that $450,000 will suffice to complete the improvement of the Ohio or $300,000 that of the Missouri? Why, ten or a hundred times those amounts would barely do for these purposes.

I call attention to this situation so that the Members of the House may understand that, under the rule referred to, no great projects can be considered in the future at all unless either bonds are issued to provide for them at one time or they override the committee rule and make appropriations on the installment plan, as has been done heretofore.

The Members in favor of the deep waterway, in view of this situation, have but one alternative, if they are in earnest in their support of that project, and that is to vote now for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which will dispose of the rule and insure the beginning of actual work on that great enterprise.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is if he would have any objections to reading the names on that list he has of those who are in favor of the deep-waterway project?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I think we had better make a test of that when the matter comes to a vote. Mr. Chairman, this is a most magnificent conception, this thought of a deep waterway from Chicago to the Gulf. I do not think we should regard our action here to-day, which I believe will be against it, as conclusive that it will not be adopted at some time. But we should give to it mature consideration before we begin. We should know the facts. There has been presented to the committee a statement of a so-called "expert" to the effect that the tonnage between St. Louis and Chicago amounted to 35,000,000 tons per year. An official report limiting the amount to three railways and that which is unloaded at the respective termini makes it, instead of 35,000,000, but 1,082,000 tons. At the instance of a St. Louis commercial organization an expert in this traffic appeared before the committee and stated that the total tonnage between St. Louis and Chicago was 4,500,000 tons. This is but an illustration, this variation in the estimates of tonnage, of the immature and imperfect consideration given to this project. I have listened to the figures given by my colleague on the committee from Illinois. He speaks of 8,000,000 tons of coal that might be handled. Does the gentleman realize that with the most economical means of transporting coal the total amount that is carried through the Louisville Canal and the main channel of the Ohio at Louisville to the lower Mississippi is but a million and a half tons, and does he expect that on this waterway the through traffic on that article would amount to 8,000,000 tons?

I stated briefly the other day the objections to this. First, that we should not undertake any projects unless we provide for completion. The committee desires to stand or fall in this bill upon that proposition, because it is the businesslike way in which to do things. We are providing in this bill for the construction of five dams in the Cumberland River, and the locks were constructed on an average of twenty years ago and have stayed there since, without one particle of benefit. lock and dam in the Columbia River that lingered nearly thirty years before it was completed, and not one iota of benefit could be obtained until its completion. We desire to abolish that, and desire to ask the approval of Congress in that course. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], who has just preceded me, says that policy makes it impossible that this project should ever be adopted, because so large an amount will never be put upon a river and harbor bill. I am not sure of that. It would of course mean very much larger appropriations than we are making now for this purpose. I further stated the other day that projects very worthy, very much pressed, have been pending before the committee for five years, ten years, and, in fact, for a longer time, and have not yet been provided for. Shall we take up this project which was not brought to the attention of the committee, at least with any degree of insistence, until the beginning of the month of December? There is a certain zeal in new converts which is very earnest and sometimes very amusing, and there has been a most splendid illustration of this zeal of the new convert in the advocacy of this The last session I do not recall that but one Member of this House spoke to me on behalf of this deep inland waterway.

Mr. MADDEN. That was because—The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will if you will ask a question. Mr. MADDEN. The chairman of the committee just stated that in the report made to the committee on the number of railroads running between Chicago and St. Louis that the information was there were three. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. There are more than that. I said even the three railroads

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say there are six.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But the bulk of the traffic is by those three.

Mr. MADDEN. And I was just going to suggest if the rest of the information of the tonnage was as reliable as that it was not worth basing an opinion upon.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman the man who appeared before us and stated the traffic was four and a half millions laid special stress on the six railroads and included them all.

Another thing. This is but a part of a great plan, a water-way from the Lakes to the Gulf. We now know nothing on which we could base our action except on the canal from Chicago to St. Louis.

Would the chairman be willing to state-Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must decline to yield at this point. Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman let me ask him this ques-

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. Would the chairman of the committee be willing to say that, in the event the survey which it is proposed to make of the Mississippi River proved the adequacy or feasi-bility of the plan for the deep waterway proposed from the Lakes to the Gulf, he would favor it at some future time?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That question had best be answered when we know the amount of benefit that would be conferred by the undertaking. I certainly should have a very favorable dis-position toward an improvement of this kind if it could be accomplished within reasonable limit of cost.

I also stated the other day that we have been saying "no" to every project which has been presented to us which did not have the favorable opinion of the board of review. This has been made practically a hard and fast rule as to projects whether they would cost $5,000 or $500,000, and now you say that in a case like this, so recently brought to our attention, we should violate that rule and bring in a project that would cost $31,000,-000. I think gentlemen who have argued so long on this subject have omitted one prominent or, indeed, two prominent, incidental features relating to this waterway, and I will ask the Clerk to read from extracts from the message of the governor of Illinois delivered last month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the extracts referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under the law enacted by the last general assembly an internal improvement commission was appointed to investigate the various problems connected with the projected deep waterway from Lake Michigan to the Gulf of Mexico and with the reclamation of lands along the Illinois River subject to inundation and overflow.

The most prominent subject considered by the commission is the proposed extension by the National Government of deep-waterway navigation from Lockport, Ill., to St. Louis, Mo.

In connection with this most prominent feature of the commission's work the report of the commission shows many incidental advantages which will accrue to our own State from the construction of the proposed waterway. Among these are the creation of 120,000 electrical horsepower, which can be secured without in any way affecting the use of the waterway as a navigable channel. At the minimum estimate of $25 per horsepower this electrical power would afford an annual income of $3,000,000.

The reciamation of overflowed lands is another important advantage in the Illinois River Valley 350,000 acres of land are subject to overflow. Much of this would be relieved from this hazard as a result of the building of the proposed waterway.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. So it seems Mr. Chairman, that

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. So it seems, Mr. Chairman, that there is an incidental benefit worth $3,000,000 a year that would arise from the building of this waterway, which, capitalized at 4 per cent, would mean a value of $75,000,000. Would it not at 4 per cent, would mean a value of $15,000,000. Would it not be well for us, before the money is appropriated from the National Treasury to build this waterway, to find out who will have the benefit of that $75,000,000, besides 350,000 acres of land, not of very great value, a large share of which will be reclaimed by this waterway. How can we tell what share of this agitation comes from the desire for navigation of this waterway and what share comes from a desire to use that water power, worth $3,000,000 a year, or what share of it is due to the desire to reclaim a large share of 350,000 acres of land. On this subject I want to read some correspondence which has gone through the War Department. The chief en-gineer of the Sanitary Canal, Mr. Isham Randolph, wrote a letter to the governor of Illinois on the 17th of December last, in which he said:

THE SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO,
AMERICAN TRUST BUILDING,
Chicago, December 17, 1996.

Hon, CHARLES S. DENEEN, Governor.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I am advised that the combination which has lately been formed for the development of water power south of Joliet has sent representatives to Washington to get permission from the Secretary of War to carry through the plans which they have outlined.

Now, the development of this Illinois valley water power should be on systematic lines which would yield the greatest possible return of power consistent with a navigable waterway.

The plans proposed by the United States engineers for this river improvement ignore the water-power phase of the question, and these plans should be revised so that the best possible results may be obtained in the interest of both commerce and manufactures.

Would it be consistent for you to address a communication to the Secretary of War, asking him to withhold all permission for the development of water power in the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers pending a thorough study of the question, and would it be proper for you to state that the commission appointed by you and authorized by the State legislature had this whole question under advisement?

It is of the greatest importance that no vested rights should become intrenched in this valley which would hamper the waterway and the highest interest of the State.

Yours, with respect and esteem,

ISHAM RANDOLPH, Chief Engineer.

Then he asked the governor to write to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War called upon the Engineer Department to make a report upon it, and this is what is said. At the same time I will insert a copy of H. R. 24271 and the report of the engineer office in regard to it, all relating to this subject of water power:

STATE OF ILLINOIS.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Springfield, Ill., December 19, 1906.

SIR: I inclose herewith a letter addressed to me by Mr. Isham
Randolph, chief engineer of the Sanitary District of Chicago, in reference to the development of water power south of Joliet in this State.
It is self-explanatory.

The last legislature directed me to appoint an internal improvement commission, with a view "to investigate the various problems associated with a projected waterway from Lake Michigan to the Gulf of Mexico, etc." The members of that commission are Mr. Isham Randolph, Chicago, president; Mr. Henry M. Schmidt, of Beardstown; Mr. Henry W. Johnson, of Ottawa; Mr. Lyman E. Cooley, of Chicago, secretary. dolph, Chic Mr. Henry secretary. Mr. Rand etary. r. Randolph and Mr. Cooley are eminent engineers, and, with their sciates, have studied the development of Illinois Valley water power

Mr. Randolph and are code associates, have studied the development of Illinois variety water properties.

I should be pleased to have them accorded an opportunity to present to you their views before you finally determine upon any action in regard to the matters referred to. In the event you can accord them a hearing they will appear before you at your convenience. I consider this matter of very great importance to our State.

With high respect, I am, yours, truly,

CHARLES S. DENEEN, Governor.

Hon. WILLIAM H. TAFT, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

United States Engineer Office, Chicago, Ill., January 2, 1907.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

2. I am of opinion that the questions herein raised merit most careful consideration.

3. The United States is being asked to spend $30,097,462 to create a navigable waterway between Lockport and St. Louis, and thus connect the Great Lakes with the Mississippi. (House Doc. No. 263, 59th Cong., 1st sess.)

4. Of this amount $15,355,900 is asked for between Lockport and Utica, which is that part of the line where water-power development is possible and which is the locality covered by the within correspondence, 5. I am of opinion that the improvement of this portion of the line can be made in such manner as to give practically a full power development without the sacrifice of any requirements necessary for navigation.

gation.

6. The total fall from Lockport to Utica is 136 feet. Of this, 39 feet is at Lockport. The power resulting from this latter properly belongs to the Sanitary District of Chicago and is now being developed by it.

7. Below Lockport and between there and Utica the fall is 97 feet; allowing for slopes in the pools, probably 91 feet of this is available allowing for slopes in the pools, probably 91 feet of this is available for power.

8. One cubic foot of water per second falling 91 feet will give practically 10 horsepower; 10,000 cubic feet per second will give 100,000 horsepower; 14,000 cubic feet per second will give 100,000 horsepower; 14,000 cubic feet per second will give 100,000 horsepower.

9. Whatever flow is permitted to the Sanitary District of Chicago will, when all the works are finished, be maintained steadily, day and night, winter and summer.

10. The great and growing population of Chicago and vicinity, its advantages as a manufacturing center, its facilities for transportation, both by rail and water, especially with this proposed waterway connecting the Lakes and the Mississippi, make it unlikely that there would be any difficulty in marketing this full amount of power as rapidly as it could be developed.

11. The value of this water power is very great. Fifteen dollars per horsepower per annum is a conservative figure.

12. At this figure the fall of 10,000 cubic feet per second through the 91 feet between Lockport and Utica would be worth $1,500,000 per annum, which if capitalized at 5 per cent would equal $30,000,000.

13. Similarly the flow of 14,000 cubic feet per second would be worth $2,100,000 per annum, or capitalized $42,000,000.

14. There can be no question but that the value of this power is such that for its control a suitable navigable waterway from Lockport to St. Louis could be built at a profit to the builder by reason of the water power thus incidentally developed.

15. I am of opinion that power privileges and power rights such as these should not be ignored, nor should they be presented gratis to private parties. The public should either own and develop them or else sell them for a suitable price to the highest bidder.

16. There are three instrumentalities apparent through which the public can act in handling the matter:

First. The Sanitary District of Chicago.
Second. The State of Illinois.

Third. The United States.

17. Which of the three should properly take charge of the matter is perhaps a debatable question. The waterway, in any event, should be free of tolls; and it is believed that its building and control by the United States would be more satisfactory to the public and to the country at large.

18. I believe, however, that the control of this valuable power should be vested in that one of the three which developed it in creating the waterway from the Lakes to the Mississippl, and, conversely, that one of the three that should be deemed best to control this power should build the waterway.

19. It does not seem equitable that one of the three should be expected to spend a great sum of money on the waterway and that one or both of the others should then control and profit by the water power thus developed.

20. It would also seem reasonable that that one of the three that finally undertook the work should be given by the other two all the nezessary legal rights in the locality now held by them.

21. Until the polley of the United States in the matter is finally decided it is recommended that the within request of Mr. Randolph be compiled with and that no permit be issued and no rights be granted contemplating water-power developments in Illinois or Des Paines rivers between Lockport and Utica.

C. S. RICHE,

Major, Corps of Engineers.

C. S. RICHÉ Major, Corps of Engineers.

Note.—Governor Deneen in his annual message to the general assembly, January 9, 1907, estimates that 120,000 electrical horse-power would be secured and states: "At the minimum estimate of $25 per horsepower this electrical power will afford an annual income of $3,000,000."

(Capitalized value, $60,000,000.) Also speaks of relief of much of 350,000 acres of land from overflow.

DECEMBER 22, 1906.

My Dear Sir: I have your letter of December 19, with inclosures, and beg to advise you that I shall have pleasure in giving the commission to which you refer full opportunity for a hearing should they apply directly to me. I am to have a hearing with respect to the Drainage Canal on the 14th of January, and it is quite possible that they might wish to be present upon that occasion. The question there presented is as to whether I can grant permission to take 4,000 cubic feet a second from Lake Michigan for the Calumet River, and the projected drainage improvement in Chicago.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. H. Taft.

Hon. Charles S. Deneen, Governor of Illinois, Springfield, Ill.

[H. R. 24271, 59th Cong., 2d sess., House of Representatives, Jan. 14, 1907.]

Mr. Wilson introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

A bill in relation to the Illinois and Michigan Canal and granting to the State of Illinois all rights, easements, and title of the United States, in, to, and into that portion of said canal lying between the upper basin, situated in the city of Joliet, and Lake Michigan.

States, in, to, and into that portion of said canal lying between the upper basin, situated in the city of Joliet, and Lake Michigan.

Whereas heretofore the United States, by act of Congress passed on to wit, March 30, 1822, authorized the State of Illinois to survey a route for a canal connecting the Illinois River and the southern bend of Lake Michigan, and reserving 90 feet of land on each side of said canal from sale and vesting the same in said State for canal purposes upon certain conditions, reserving certain rights to the United States; and

Whereas in order to assist the State of Illinois in the construction of said canal the United States, by act of Congress passed on, to wit, March 2, 1827, granting to said State a quantity of land equal to one-half of five sections in width on either side of said canal from one end thereof to the other, to be disposed of by said State as it saw fit, for the purpose of constructing said canal; and

Whereas said State of Illinois, by act of legislature in 1829, duly accepted the grants of Congress aforesaid and surveyed, laid out, and constructed the canal as by said grants proposed, which said canal connected Lake Michigan with the navigable waters of the Illinois River by a channel leading from a point near Utica, Ill., to a point on the south branch of the Chicago River, about 4 miles from where said river empties into Lake Michigan, said canal having been constructed and maintained of a size sufficient for canal-boat navigation; and

Whereas said State of Illinois, by act of its legislature passed in 1899, provided for the incorporation of the Sanitary District of Chicago, a municipal corporation, and authorized said corporation, for the purpose of providing an outlet for the drainage and sewage of the city of Chicago and contiguous territory, to construct a channel whereby the sewage and drainage of said district was to be carried into the Des Plaines River by water from Lake Michigan, said channel to be of such dimensions and so constructed as to be navigable by the vessels of the Great Lakes and upon its completion to be a navigable stream; and

Whereas the said Sanitary District of Chicago, pursuant to its said authority, has constructed a channel parallel and adjacent to the Illinois and Michigan Canal from the latter's connection with the Chicago River to the said upper basin at Joliet; and

Whereas said channel of said district is of sufficient size and dimensions to accommodate not only canal-boat navigation, but also navigation of the vessels of the Great Lakes, and is completed to within a short distance of said upper basin, and will within a few months be connected with said upper basin and will then afford all the accommodation for commerce heretofore afforded by the said Illinois and Michigan Canal between said upper basin and Chicago and michigan canal between said upper basin and Chicago has been were and

whereas said channel of said Sanitary District of Chicago has been constructed by said district at an expense of nearly $5,000,000, and forms the first section of the deep waterway from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River; and Whereas the State of Illinois has authorized said district, upon connecting its channel with the upper basin at Joliet, to cut across and destroy the Illinois and Michigan Canal between said points; and Whereas in the judgment of Congress the did right of way of said Illinois and Michigan Canal between said upper basin and said Chicago River, being adjacent to said right of way of said-sanitary district of Chicago, will be of more service and benefit to the people of that community and of the State of Illinois by being made a part of the said right of way of the sanitary district of Chicago. Therefore,

Be it enacted etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Illinois all the rights, easements, interest, and title of every kind and nature now owned or possessed by the United States in, to, and into that portion of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, lying and situated between the upper basin, in the city of Joliet, Ill., and Lake Michigan, it being the intention of Congress by this act to give to said State a clear tile to the bed, banks, towpath, and reserved lands on either side of said canal, and to all the appurtenances and appliances appertaining and belonging to said canal, including all locks, basins, water rights, water privileges, and water power heretofore possessed and enjoyed by said canal: Provided, however. That this grant is made on the express condition that said State will, within six months after the passage of this act, grant unto the sanitary district of Chicago all the rights, titles, easements, and privileges hereby granted to it, together with all other property rights, title, interest, and easements which said State has in said portion of said Illinois and Michigan Canal, and in case of the failure of the State of Illinois to comply with the provision of this proviso by granting over to the sanitary district of Chicago, then this act to be null and void.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, inviting attention to my report of this date.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, Chicago, Ill., January 24, 1907.

Brig. Gen. A. Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.
GENERAL: 1. In response to first indorsement, dated January 18, 1907
(C. of E. 62076), on wrapper of H. R. 24271, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, I have the honor to submit the following:

2. This is a bill to quitclaim to the State of Illinois the right of way of part of the old Illinois and Michigan Canal, with the proviso that within six months the State transfer said right of way to the Sanitary District of Chicago. The strip of land which it is thus proposed to quitclaim is some 260 feet wide and 33 miles long and extends from the city of Jollet to a point close to the center of the city of Chicago.

from the city of Jollet to a point close to the central Chicago.

3. This right of way is valuable and could be sold to one or more railway companies for a handsome sum.

4. It follows what appears to have been an old lake outlet, is of good alignment, and is practically level for the entire distance. A single-track railway could probably be laid on each bank of the old canal with little or no grading.

5. This right of way contains some 1,040 acres, which, at $1,000 per acre, would be worth $1,040,000. This valuation is based upon the cost of the right of way of the Sanitary Canal through the same territory, and is not believed to be excessive, especially in view of the ease and economy with which the line could be rendered available for railway purposes.

cost of the right of way of the Sanitary Canal through the same territory, and is not believed to be excessive, especially in view of the ease and economy with which the line could be rendered available for railway purposes.

6. As recited in the preamble of the bill, the proceeds of the sale of public lands granted to the State of Illinois by the United States were used by said State in building this Illinois and Michigan Cana.

7. This canal in its day was a factor in the upbuilding of the Middle West. It has been useful in a national sense. Locally its usefulness to the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago has been very great. It has had much to do with the commercial growth of Chicago. Nor is its usefulness ended. Inadequate as it is for modern transportation requirements, it still exerts a regulating influence on freight rates on adjacent railways, and until a more efficient waterway is provided it is to the public interest that this canal be not abandoned. Such as it is, it is to-day the best waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Mississippi and its tributaries.

8. It has not been a burden to the State of Illinois. Chief Justice Hand, of the State, and Justice Wilkin, in 1904, stated:

"The fact should not be lost sight of that the canal thus far has not been a burden to the State, and the evidence in this record does not show that it ever will be burdensome to the State. The original cost of the canal, which was approximately $5,000,000, was paid for from the sale of lands donated to the State by the General Government for canal purposes, with the express understanding that the canal should be forever maintained by the State. From the time of its construction to the time of the filing of this bill the canal had earned more than $6,500,000, and there now remains in the State treasury, after paying all its expenses and after refunding to the State all moneys appropriated for the use, the sum of $338,695.76." (Burke v. Snively et al., Supreme Court of Illinois, 1904; Ill. Repts., Vol. 208; Phil of Illinois nor to the Sanitary District of Chicago, which is a creation of the State of Illinois.

11. The preamble of the within bill implies that the main purpose of the channel, created at an expense of nearly $50,000,000 by the Sanitary District of Chicago, has been to form the first section of a deep waterway from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River.

12. For this implied reason, and to aid the Sanitary District in bearing this implied burden, the enactment of the bill appears to be sought.

13. If the channel created by the Sanitary District were actually a burden to the people within the limits of that district, it might be proper policy, in view of its possibilities as a link in a waterway of such national importance, for the people of the United States at large to help these people bear the burden in so far as this bill proposes.

be proper policy, in view of its possibilities as a link in a waterway of such national importance, for the people of the United States at large to help these people bear the burden in so far as this bill proposes.

14. But I am of the opinion that this channel has not been a burden to the people in the Sanitary District, and that, in means of sewage disposal, in the acquirement of sites for factories, in the accumulation of broken rock which can be sold for construction purposes, and last but not least, in the development of a great water power at or near Lockport, these people have had a return of more than dollar for dollar from the money expended by the district in its great work, and this irrespective of the possibilities of the channel as a line in a deep waterway from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River.

15. I am of opinion that such a waterway should be built; I believe that it will be built. Its building may be postponed, but can not be prevented. Its depth and the size of its locks are matters that are of an efficient waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the internal navigation system, composed of the Mississippi and its tributaries, are too important to be much longer neglected.

16. As the national interest in such a waterway is large, it should preferably be built by the United States. In any event it should befree from tolls.

17. But if the United States is to build such a waterway, the United States should have ownership and control of everything that properly goes with it, and by this is meant specifically the right of way of the Illinois and Michigan Canai when the latter becomes no longer needed for navigation purposes, and also the water power below Lockport that would be developed by the construction of this waterway.

18. With regard to this water power I beg to invite attention to my third indorsement of the 2d instant on Governor Deneen's letter of the 19th ultimo (58726/21). To the presentation therein made I will add that in the governor's annual message to the general assembly Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as estimates, reports, etc., regarding this waterway have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.)

22. As the matter stands, the United States is being asked to build this waterway at an expense of some $31,000,000, in order that the State of Illinois may not only secure the great benefits that will legitimately come to it from the resulting increase in means of economical transportation, but also that the State of Illinois may secure an additional income of $3,000,000 a year from the water power thus incidentally developed by the United States.

23. In addition, the United States, which has borne the burden of the Illinois and Michigan Canal in the past, is now being asked to quit-claim to the State the valuable right of way of this canal, as it becomes no longer necessary for navigation.

24. The proposition seems jug handled. If the State of Illinois is to build the waterway, the power developed and the right of way of this old canal should go to the State. Otherwise, not.

25. While it may seem to the immediate and narrow interest of the State that the United States should be committed to the building of this waterway, and that meanwhile the State should appropriate to itself all avallable assets that should properly go with the waterway, I can not but believe that in the larger sense it would be to the States ultimate interest to lend itself to an equitable adjustment of these matters. The great State of Illinois can afford to do the square thing in a matter of such local and national importance.

26. The legitimate local benefits to the State of Illinois and to Chicago resulting from the building of this waterway will be enormous not alone in relieving bottom lands from overflow, as pointed out by the governor, but also in reduced transportation charges and in increased transportation facilities. If the States the valuable right of way of the old Illinois and Michigan Canal, and would aid the United States in securing rights to the power that wo passed.

28. If. however, the pressure for its passage be too strong to be resisted, then I am of opinion that the provision of the act of March 2, 1827, applicable to the Illinois and Michigan Canal should be made applicable to the channel created by the Sanitary District of Chicago, to wit:

"That it shall be and forever remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from any toll or other charge whatever, for any property of the United States or persons in their service passing through the same."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. S. RICHÉ, Major, Corps of Engineers.

Now, the State of New York has built, or is building, without calling on the National Government, a barge canal, which will ' great benefit to the whole country, at a cost of $101,-000,000. A canal is projected from Lake Erie to the Ohio River, which private enterprise proposes to build. The terminus of it was erroneously given as at Cleveland, but it is, in fact, 54 miles east of Cleveland. Now, there is the strongest ground of them all in this case for construction by a State or other agency, because there is right in sight, created by it, water power which, according to the estimate of the governor of the great Commonwealth of Illinois, is worth $3,000,000 a year. Shall we go on blindly and appropriate $31,000,000 here? Why, gentlemen, the folly of such action would bring upon us condemnation for our carelessness and our wastefulness, and we could not stay that condemnation or relieve ourselves from the blame which would rest upon us.

See how easy it would be to build this to St. Louis and say then: "Oh, we don't care about the rest of it down to the Gulf. We have got what we want. We have not only the waterway, but we have our water power." So we should find out what it is going to cost and whether it should be undertaken in its entirety, and we should, again, as guardians of the public treasury and the public weal, refuse, and refuse peremptorily and decidedly, to make a gift such as will be made by the passing of this amendment and the adoption of this waterway

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has eloquently stated his side of this case. He is an expert at stating propositions coming from his committee. He says there is great danger that some-body will be benefited by the creation of 120,000 horsepower of water power if this waterway is constructed by the Federal Government. If there should be any water power created by the construction of the waterway, personally I feel that it should belong to the Federal Government if it constructs the waterway. If by any chance the waterway can be constructed more economically by the creation of water power, then there should be no objection to the creation of water power in the construction of the waterway.

The agitation of which the gentleman speaks is widespread and disinterested. This agitation is not only from the people of the State of Illinois, but from every other State bordering upon the Mississippi Valley. We make no apology because the legislature of Illinois passed resolutions requesting an appropriation for this great president. We halfer that the legislature of the great president we have a supervisor of the great president. propriation for this great project. We believe that the legislature of Illinois, in its official capacity, had the right to voice the sentiment of the people who give it power. No question has ever been raised by any one who advocated this project about any charge to be made for tolls. It would undoubtedly be a channel in which free transportation would be allowed. It would be under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government, as I understand it, allows no charge for toll on any waterway which it controls. The people of the Middle West feel, notwithstanding the fear expressed by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that the creation of this waterway is not only wise, but that it is a good business proposition for the nation.

And I do not agree with the gentleman when he says that we would not be conserving the rights of the people of the nation should we vote for the expenditure provided in this amendment. We believe that the Federal Government owes it as one of its paramount duties to the people of the nation to expend the money to create the necessary facilities for the movement of the nation's products at the cheapest possible cost, and we believe, too, that in the creation of this waterway and the expenditure of the money proposed in this amendment that the Government would be doing one of the most beneficial things, not only for the commerce of the nation but for the development of the agricultural, mining, and manufacturing interests of the great Mississippi Valley

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the pro forms amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois . LOBIMER] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objections to men differing with me in opinion as to whether or not the projects proposed to Congress are good or bad, and I do not impugn the motives of the gentlemen who oppose the 14-foot channel from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico, nor do I regard it as fair to the men who are now advocating this project that the chairman of the committee should insinuate to this Congress that when the waterway is constructed from Chicago to St. Zous Wilson St. Louis will say to the people of the lower Mississippi, "We St. Louis will say to the people of the lower Mississippi, "We St. Louis will say to the people of the lower Mississippi, "We St. Louis will say to the people of the lower Mississippi, "We start the people of the lower Mississippi, "The waterway is constructed from Chicago to St. Louis, Chicago and have got what we want; now you look out for yourselves. people in Chicago (the city which I have the honor, in part, to represent) and the people in Illinois are not discussing a waterway from St. Louis to Chicago; the only voice that is heard in reference to this project is a 14-foot channel from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and when they make this statement, Mr. Chairman, they are just as sincere as any gentleman in this House who makes a statement and claims to express his true sentiments or the sentiments of the people he represents.

Now, with reference to whether or not this shall be a toll There is every reason why the people of Illinois should want a free waterway. Just a short distance from the city of Chicago, not over 60 miles, and running down through the valley, almost to the Mississippi, are found the most magnificent coal fields upon the face of the earth. By establishing this waterway iron ore and coal can be assembled in the Illinois Valley more cheaply than they can be assembled in any other part of this country, and not only can they be assembled in the Illinois Valley more cheaply than they can be assembled elsewhere, but they can be assembled in the Mississippi Valley. Ships may go down through the Illinois into the Mississippi, down the Mississipi and turn at Cairo, back all the way up to the city of Pitts-burg, on the Ohio, and thus assemble iron ore and coal in the magnificent coal fields of Pennsylvania more cheaply than they can be assembled in that State to-day. Our people, looking to the progress and prosperity of their State and to the advancement of the people of our State, are not thinking of impeding the commerce of this waterway by placing a tariff upon the boats that may traverse this great channel. There is no thought of a toll upon this waterway, in so far as the people of the State of Illinois are concerned, and it is within the power of the Congress of the United States now and here, to-day, in making the appropriation, to provide that all the water power below the city of Joliet shall go to the Government of the United States when it begins or completes the construction of this waterway.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will only take time to correct one statement made just now. I think the gentleman was perhaps unduly sensitive in regard to any remarks I made about abandoning the plan from St. Louis to the Gulf. I made no aspersion upon him. It is often the agitation that is heard, and it was in connection with the agitation that I spoke.

The gentleman is in error about the plain business and legal proposition of our ability to provide that this water power shall belong to the United States. The water-power privilege is an incident belonging to the abutting owner of the property, and we could frame no provision in this bill, or in any bill, which would reserve the right to the United States. It means, if you pass this amendment, to confer a gift, estimated by the governor of Illinois at $3,000,000 per annum, on some one, and that some one is not the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you admit that the improvement of the Ohio River created water power?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Not of any great importance.

Mr. MADDEN. Who does that belong to?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio (continuing). It is nothing such as you are contemplating. The structures in the Ohio are movable dams and in high water are let down. I ask for a vote.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. objection?

Mr. SNAPP. I desire to correct any impression that the chairman of this committee may have produced upon this House in regard to this water power, and I take it that every member of this committee understands that these statements are made for the purpose of prejudicing this House against this enterprise. I am not content to sit here in silence and permit this thing to Let me call the attention of this committee to the fact that the sanitary district channel, 30 miles long, terminates at Lockport, where the great fall in the Des Plaines River begins.

From there to the mouth of the Kankakee River the fall is 75 feet, and every member of this committee will understand, without the statement of the chairman or of any engineers, that this falling water between those points necessarily creates water power, and that water power, if properly developed, will, as has been said by the chairman, be of enormous value. let me call your attention to these facts: The Sanitary District of Chicago has spent $75,000,000, or will have spent that when this project is completed, toward the development of this waterway and the incidental development of this water power. vate parties also interested in this river are about, as I said in my remarks the other day, to expend several million dollars to develop this water power from the end of the Sanitary District Canal—20 miles—to the Kankakee River. That development will produce a navigable waterway 14 feet deep from Lake Michigan to the Kankakee River.

The estimated cost of the extension of this channel from the Sanitary District Canal to the Kankakee River is only $7,800,000. The Sanitary District of Chicago and private parties will develop within the next two years that entire stretch, costing something like $3,500,000. All that the Government is asked to spend to extend this channel from the end of the Chicago Ship Canal to the Kankakee River, the end of the possible development in this water-power enterprise, is about $3,500,000. Will anybody contend that the Sanitary District of Chicago and the people of Illinois, who have spent and are about to spend $75,000,000, three-quarters of the entire expense of this waterway from Chicago to St. Louis, should not have the benefit of this great expenditure and the value of the water power that they create?

The development of this power is incidental to the development of the waterway. The waterway can not be developed without developing this power, and the people of the State of Illinois, I say, have contributed or will contribute $75,000,000 to this project. Without the water power there can be no waterway, because anyone can understand, without the help of engineering experts, that the waterway can not be built unless the water is allowed to fall downhill, thereby creating the power.

The State of Illinois has been sincere in this matter. The people of Chicago have been sincere. At an expense of $75,000,-000 to them, they offer to this country an almost completed There is no water power in the river below the Kanproject. kakee, where most of the money we want must be spent. Will anybody, in good faith, contend for a moment that the people of the State of Illinois should abandon this water power, even to the General Government, when they only ask this Government to contribute $25,000,000 to complete a $100,000,000 project?

I say that the statement was made in order to appeal to the prejudice of this House. I want to appeal to your reason. Is there a man here in this House who will contend that, after this enormous expenditure by the State of Illinois, they should be requested to turn over to the General Government or to anybody the water power created incidental to this waterway? [Applause,]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Ohio will be recognized.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I should not have said a word, except that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SNAPP] has stated that I have been seeking to prejudice the House. That is an accusation so common, though usually made outside of these walls, that I think I ought to give it a passing reference. I take it to be the duty of a Member of this body, when the interests of the United States are involved, to state here the facts as he knows them, to make such arguments from those facts as are necessary and proper, and I propose to make such statements of facts and arguments-you may call it prejudice or whatever you please.

I should certainly have been lacking in my duty to this House if, after this long discussion by the advocates of the waterway, I had let this vital fact go unknown. I have not said that the gentlemen were unfair. The most I would say in regard to them would be that they are not gifted in the diffusion of that essential information which is necessary to a full understanding of the subject under discussion. [Laughter.] certainly have not told you all the facts in regard to this proposition. Is it not a little unfortunate for the advocates of this waterway that the statement has just been made that it needs only a few million dollars to build this waterway over the section where water power is developed? The first proposition that was made to us was to appropriate just about the amount that the gentleman from Illinois has said is necessary to utilize the section in which this water power is. I do not accuse him or any of these gentlemen, but why was the proposition brought in to expend $5,000,000 when it is just the amount required, not to create the waterway, not to create a waterway even to St. Louis, but to create one which will utilize this very valuable water power of which mention has been made? Chairman, I move that debate on the paragraph be now closed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has moved to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say this, with the permission of the Chairman. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"] Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think, Mr. Chairman, that, as far as I am concerned, I will not press the motion, because I want a full and free discussion. I want to state that it is generally understood that the chairman or the person in charge of the bill shall have the closing of the debate. Gentlemen seem to feel extreme anxiety to have the last word of this discussion, an anxiety which is not in accord with the most orderly methods of discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into this controversy, but I want to ask this question of the chairman: I understood the gentleman to say that the Federal Government could not, in acquiring the right of this waterway through the canal, acquire the water power?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Unless, of course, they condemn all the land at the sides, and I know of no authority to do that.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman does not mean to say that they would have to condemn all the land at the sides to do that, because in the State of Ohio we have water for the canal and the water power when leased all the time. In the condemnation proceedings you condemn all the adjacent proprietary rights that would include the power.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I take it that a general statute might be framed that would give the United States Government control of the water power, but the error of my colleague lies in this: The original act under which the Ohio Canal was con-structed gave to the State the absolute fee-simple title in the lands upon which the canal is located and about it, and gave it such a title that they could sell a portion of the canal itself for a blacksmith's shop if they wanted to. Then, again, I question whether the Federal Government would want to go into such an Now, Mr. Chairenterprise as that merely for a water power. man, I desire that the motion for closing debate be pending. I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in ten minutes. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] desire?

Mr. LORIMER. Two minutes. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois, his colleague [Mr. Madden], desire?

Mr. MADDEN. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I understand that two minutes of that time will be consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and five minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden].

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prevent the chairman of the committee from having the closing words in this argument, but I want to call attention to the fact that more than 100,000 horsepower can be developed along the Des Plaines To my suggestion that we might appropriate and provide that the water power accrue to the Government, the chairman responded that legal propositions would then intervene. I am not a lawyer and I do not know whether that is so or not, but if it is true, and lawyers know whether it is true or not, the property owners along the bank of the river have control of the power and the State has no control at all.

I can not for the life of me understand how either Congress or the State can compel people owning rights along the river to or the State can comper people owing rights along the river to relinquish them either to the State or to the Federal Government, and if that is true, then, Mr. Chairman, there was no excuse for interjecting that proposition into this argument. As to whether or not $5,000,000 was requested in order to develop water power I wish just to make this statement: It will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,200,000 to build the first lock at the Chicago Drainage Canal 80 feet wide and long enough to receive a ship 600 feet over all. During my absence and I represented the sentiments of the Illinois delegation when made this request-I requested the committee, through its chairman, to appropriate not $5,000,000 to carry this waterway down to a point where water power could be developed, but to appropriate $1,200,000 to build the first lock.

It was understood by every member of the Illinois delegation that discussed this matter before we adjourned for the holidays that money enough was to be requested to build the first lock and to make the survey between St. Louis and Cairo. So there was no thought in the mind of any member of the Illinois delegation of getting money enough to create a water power below the city of Joliet. The chairman of the committee re-ceived my telegram, and he knew, if he knew anything, that the request represented the sentiments of myself at least, and I say to the House that it represents the wishes of the Illinois delegation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished geutleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has made a statement that this amendment seeks to secure just enough money from the Federal Treasury to build such water power as can be created by its expenditure without reference to the construction of a naviga-

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman will just excuse a moment's interruption, I desire to say that I stated that as it was first presented it was that. The amendment at present provides for the whole amount.

Mr. MADDEN. Personally I consider that the statement of the gentleman impugns the motives of the introducer of this amendment. The gentleman from Ohio says that we have been covering up the information which ought to have been given to the House, and in reply to that statement I wish to read from a speech made by my colleague [Mr. Snapp] on the 31st of January of this year. It is published on page 2044 of the Record, and it reads as follows:

The estimated cost from Lockport to the mouth of the Des Plaines River is $7,822,000, more than half of which will be saved to the Government by the extension of the channel of the Chicago ship canal to Joliet, and the development of the water-power rights from Lockport to the Kankakee River by the construction of dams, equally necessary in the development of the waterway. It can be safely stated, therefore, that the cost of the entire project will not exceed over $26,000,000 to $28,000,000.

Now, I wish to submit to the consideration of the House whether the Members of this House from the State of Illinois have endeavored by any sort of subterfuge to secure this appro-The only thing we desire is the advancement of the interest of the commerce of the nation and the development of facilities by which the products of the Mississippi Valley can be moved more cheaply than they are moved now, and incidentally and forever to create the means by which the freight rates throughout the country may be reduced to a proper figure. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was not only unfair, but misleading.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn, without objection; and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Madden) there were—ayes 43, noes 145.

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk began reading.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I desire to ask unanimous consent to postpone, without prejudice, until the completion of the reading of section 1 two items here—"Improving Chicago River, Illinois," and "Improving Calumet River, Illinois and Indiana."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the two paragraphs to which he has referred may be passed without prejudice until the reading of section 1 is Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair completed. hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $50,000, of which amount such portion as may be necessary may be expended for snagging and maintenance: Provided, That the annual appropriation for operating snag boats on the upper Mississippi River, made by section 7 of the act of August 11, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," is hereby made available for similar purposes on the Illinois River, from its mouth to Copperas Creek.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOX RIVER, ILL.

Permission is hereby given to the Fox River Navigable Water Way Association to construct a dam across said river at or about 14,600 feet below the highway bridge at McHenry, in McHenry County, Ill.: Provided, however, That the right is hereby reserved to after, change, amend, or repeal this provision at the pleasure of Congress: And provided further, That nothing contained in this paragraph shall be construed as relieving the Fox River Navigable Water Way Association from liability for any damage inflicted upon private property by reason of the construction of the dam as aforesaid.

The permission granted to the Fox River Navigable Water Way Association under river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, to construct a dam across said river in the northwest quarter of section 36, in township 45, in range 8 east of the third principal meridian, same being about 3,000 feet below the highway bridge at McHenry, in McHenry County, Ill., is hereby repealed.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will state I have

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will state I have no objection to the amendment. As I understand, it is a mere change in the location of a dam, provision for which was made in the act of 1902.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to permit the Sterling Hydraulic Company, of Sterling, Ill., to erect, own, and operate a power station in connection with the dam built or to be built by the United States in Rock River at or near Sterling, Ill., in connection with the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal: Provided, That the location and plans of said power station shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the navigation of Rock River and of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal and the operation and maintenance of said dam shall be in no way obstructed thereby: And provided further, That prior to the issue of said permit the Sterling Hydraulic Company shall waive any and all claims that it may have against the United States by reason of the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, except such claims as it may have for the abstraction from Rock River of more than 300 cubic feet of water per second when the flow of Rock River immediately above is less than 1,000 cubic feet of water per second.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the last

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if in making the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River which appears in the next paragraph it was contemplated that any part of it was to be used for the construction of a levee north of the St. Francis levee district, covering the lowland between that point and the highlands at or near Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It does not as framed. I have no objection to the amendment. The statute passed by the last session of this Congress extended the jurisdiction up to Cape Girardeau.

Mr. MACON. That is the place I want a levee constructed to, so as to prevent the water from the river from passing through the lowlands just mentioned and running down behind the St. Francis levee into the basin in Arkansas and flooding much of our land that would not be overflowed at every high water if this levee was constructed.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. By the time that paragraph is completed we will have an opportunity to take that up, or has the gentleman an amendment which he proposes to offer?

Mr. MACON. I will offer an amendment then; yes, sir. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to call the attention of the Chair to an error in regard to the two paragraphs which were postponed until the end of the reading of section 1. I am informed that the error is already corrected, so I will withdraw the request. I thought the two paragraphs were erroneously Now I will ask the Clerk to continue the reading placed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas still has

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River, from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, official, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $3,000,000, which shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission as approved by the Chief of Engineers for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees, and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of the Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act the Secretary of War may enter into additional contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as aforesaid, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $6,000,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That the authorized sum last named shall be used in prosecuting the improvement for not less than three years, beginning July 1, 1908, the work thus done each year to cost approximately $2,000,000: And provided further. That the money hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended, in pursuance of contracts or otherwise, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of suitable and necessary dredge boats and other devices and appliances and in the maintenance and operation of the same, with the view of ultimately obtaining and maintaining a navigable channel from Cairo down not less than 250 feet in width and 9 feet in depth at all periods of the year, except when navigation is closed by ice: And provided further, That the water courses connected with said river, and the harbors upon it, now under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and under improvement, may, in the discretion of said Commission, upon approval by the Chief of Engineers, receive allotments for improvements now under way or hereafter to be undertaken, to be paid for from the amounts herein appropriated or authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any funds herein appropriated for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of the Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for levees upon any part of said river between the Head of the Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think a very much briefer amendment will cover the case. I will ask if the gentleman from Arkansas will be satisfied with this amendment:

Insert, on page 70, after the word "levees," in line 24, the following: Between the Head of the Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo."

Another thing. I would like to hear from the gentlemen who represent the lower Mississippi if they desire to be heard in regard to this.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that in lieu of the other amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on this?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Not on this particular amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment and accept the one offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] will be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on this paragraph for a few minutes.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Mississippi object to the amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; not at all. I simply desire to make a few observations on the paragraph as amended. I think the amendment a very proper one. There is an increase carried in the paragraph for the lower Mississippi for the ensuing year, the amount, as you will observe, being $3,000,000 instead of $2,000,000, which is usually provided. While the wording of the paragraph is identical with that heretofore employed, it is the intention of the Mississippi River Commission to spend this extra million in the further prosecution of bank revetment

The policy of revetting the banks, primarily to prevent levee lines from caving into the river, has not been favored by the commission. This policy, in fact, was definitely rejected a number of years ago, and a resolution to that effect was formally adopted by the commission. Time and experience, however, have convinced the engineers that a hard and fast rule could not be adhered to, and there has been of late some relaxation. is not the intention of the commission now to embark upon the general policy of revetting the banks of the entire Mississippi, nor is it the desire or expectation of this committee that this appropriation be expended to that end. There is, however, a middle ground to which events have forced the advocates of both extremes, and this extra million will be expended in furtherance of this resultant plan.

The Government has spent a good deal of money in the building of levees on the lower Mississippi. We have proceeded upon the thought that the riparian owners of the overflowed lands, which were thus protected from devastating floods, would contribute in fair proportion to the expense of the work. This has been done in the particular district which I represent. We have, under State law, organized taxing districts for the purpose, and in the past twenty-five years we have paid into our levee boards more than $15,000,000. During the same period the Government has expended less than $10,000,000 along the same reach of the Of course when we began the building of levees after the series of destructive floods of 1882, 1883, and 1884 we did not realize the tremendous proportions of the system we were to undertake. If we had known then what the ultimate grade and section would have to be, perhaps there would have been more shrinking from the task which has since proven herculean in-deed. To get an idea of our situation, let me relate an incident: In the lower Yazoo district, which has a frontage along the river of 189 miles, after paying the most burgensome taxes for thirteen years, and each high water demonstrating that the levees must be built still higher, we cast up accounts immediately after the flood of 1897, and ascertained then that we had approximately 20,000,000 yards of dirt in the levee line. It was painfully apparent, however, that we were not out of the woods, and as the levees grew higher the cost of dumping a yard of dirt on top of them likewise grew higher. When that flood subsided we went at it again, and in the next six years we put another 20,000,000 yards of dirt on them. In other words, we did in the next six years as much as we had done in the previous thirteen. Then the flood of 1903 came—in many respects the biggest of them all-and when it had come and gone with its lessons our engineer made another report in which he announced that it could be fairly accurately told then what the ultimate grade and section would have to be, and that estimate was that still another 20,000,000 yards would be required. That was an appalling announcement, Mr. Chairman, and one that would have broken the spirit of a people less determined. More than 60 per cent of all our taxes had gone into those levees for twenty years, and still the end seemed no nearer than before. There was no high-sounding motto of Nulla Vestigia Retrorsum on our arms for the very practical and prosy reason that ours battle of shovels, not shields. But the situation was full of ominous meaning, and we knew our only pathway lay in front of us. The legislature authorized us to issue a million more bonds, which we did at once.

As I have said before, Mr. Chairman, we have proceeded upon the theory of contributions by local interests in the building of our levees, and this particular district has certainly kept the We have contributed more, in fact, than our just share. Few people had ever taxed themselves as we had for the conquests of peace, and we had found that her victories were not only no less renowned than war's, but were also hardly less

At this juncture, Mr. Chairman, it developed that the Mississippi River, pursuant to its own sweet and fickle will, had begun to cave its banks to such an extent that the levee at begin to cave its banks to such an extent that the levee at Longwood was about to go into the river. This was one of the largest sections in the entire line of the system, and if it were lost, a new line would have to be built at a cost, including rights of way, of $750,000. As I remarked a moment ago, in the matter of local participation we had done our part. We had kept the faith; we had fought the good fight; but, Mr. Chairmen, we had also as regards our ability therein we had Chairman, we had also, as regards our ability to raise money, finished the course. There was but one alternative, and that was to induce the Mississippi River Commission to revet the banks and stop the caving. And this was contrary to their declared purpose and in violation of their expressed opinion as to the proper treatment of the river. Our engineers went before them, however, and pitted our condition against their theory, and being wise men, the Commission subjected their theory to the force of this ponderous fact and made the allotment, and the levee was saved.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What did it cost the Government to put in this revetment work you speak of to save the Longwood

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It cost a little more than

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Has there ever been any estimate by the engineers of the cost of revetting the banks on a large scale so as to preserve the regimen of the river and also to protect your levee lines?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There have been numerous estimates. Mr. Nolty, who is an engineer of considerable learning and experience, has estimated that the cost of revetment, including cost of plant, administration, and engineering ment, including cost of plant, administration, and engineering charges—in fact, everything—will be $200,000 a mile. He says, also, that there are 500 miles of caving bank between Cairo and the mouth of Red River. In other words, that it would cost $100,000,000 to revet all the caving banks along that reach of the river, which is about the only part of the river where there is any considerable caving. It is the opinion of our engineers, however, that it would not be necessary to revet more than one-half of the caving banks; in other words, not more than 250 miles. And it is also their opinion, and in this Mr. Nolty concurs, that if the work were done on a large scale that is, if the Government should go at it in a businesslike way-the cost per mile could be cut almost, if not quite, in half, so that the revetment, instead of costing $100,000,000, would probably cost not more than $25,000,000.

Of course, the protection of levees is not the only-in fact, is not the principal object in view in doing this revetment work. It is very necessary, in the first place, to prevent the bends from being cut off. I think all the engineers are agreed on this, because you can readily see what disastrous consequences would follow in the wake of a cut-off where the bend, let us suppose, is 15 miles around and only 1 mile across. fall in the river is about 6 inches to the mile, and when the cut-off is made we would therefore have a fall of $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet in 1 mile. This would upset existing conditions for 40 or 50 miles above and below the cut-off, and, in addition, experience has demonstrated that this shortening of the river would be only It would at once begin to eat into the opposite shore, and in a very few years it would restore the length lost by the cut-off. The amount of silt dumped into the river by reason of these caving banks is astounding. In an article written by Chief Engineer West, of the Mississippi Levee Board, he says that in his district alone, embracing only one side of the river for a distance of 189 miles, "67 square miles of land, most of which was highly improved, have been abandoned by the retirement of the levee line from caving banks since 1882. and but for the limited revetment that has been done this would have been considerably more." Assuming that an equal amount of caving occurs on both sides along this reach of the river, enough land is caved in in this 189 miles annually to fill the river to the level of its banks for a distance of 12 miles. While on this point I will read another passage from Mr. Nolty. He says.

If the revetment work is systematically prosecuted, there will eventually be such a small amount of sediment carried out that the necessity of dredging in the pass and seaward extension of the jetties will be removed.

But let me return, Mr. Chairman, to the Longwood levee. Since this allotment was made by the Commission, they have made others for similar purposes. It is intended to relax still further the old rule, and this additional $1,000,000 which this paragraph carries will be expended in that way.

In the annual report of C. H. West, chief engineer of this levee district, he makes this startling statement:

Since 1882 there have been 172 miles of levee abandoned, or 91 per cent of the total length of the controlling line.

During the three years since the high water of 1903 there have been 31.45 miles of levee abandoned, or nearly 17 per cent of the total length of the controlling line.

As the levee grows in volume the loss per mile from caving banks becomes more and more serious, and if the same rate continues the time will soon come when the annual revenues will not be sufficient to build the new levees required to replace those that cave into the river.

There is no more competent authority than this officer. man understands the problem of this great river more thoroughly than he and no man has brought to its study more patriotic zeal or more intelligent energy, and I quote his opinion therefore with some degree of assurance.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation marks the beginning of the end of what at some times in the past has appeared to be an endless, if not a hopeless, fight.

The upper Yazoo district has demonstrated beyond cavil the possibility of holding the Mississippi River within its channel in flood time. It has withstood all the floods of recent years, and if the Federal Government will see to it that the levee lines as they are to-day will not be permitted to cave into the river the problem there is solved. What is there accomplished is simply a demonstration of what can be done everywhere.

We have proceeded thus far, Mr. Chairman, on the theory that there was a dual responsibility along the lower Mississippi. That it was as much the duty of the Federal Government to improve the navigation of its rivers by building levees which incidentally protect the property of the riparian owners as it was the duty of the riparian owners to build levees to protect their property which incidentally improve the navigation of the rivers. The burden, therefore, has been borne by both.

Right here let me read again from Mr. West's report:

But for the enormous loss of levee due to the extensive caving of the river banks the entire levee line would by now be as high and strong as it is estimated it will ever have to be to control the highest floods that may be expected.

When we remember that this revetment work is permanentengineers estimate that a mattress properly placed will last one hundred years-and that but for caving banks the levees would likewise be permanent, I say, when we recall these facts, I believe we can at last see the light breaking in the east, the light which I confidently believe will usher in the day wherein shall be seen the consummation of our hearts' desire, the subjection of the world's greatest and most unruly water course to the will and the purposes of man.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, though the edict has gone forth from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that every amendment to this bill, however meritorious, shall be voted down, and though the Committee of the Whole seems to religiously observe this injunction, I yet venture to offer what has been read to the careful consideration of the House.

If adopted, this amendment will, in the judgment of many of the friends of the Mississippi River, vastly improve this bill. It will result in reviving navigation on the Mississippi River and grant to the people what they believe themselves to be justly entitled to. Consequently the amendment aims at fair justly entitled to. Consequent dealing and equal justice to all,

Briefly stated, the amendment increases the amount for that stretch of the Mississippi lying between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio rivers from $250,000 to $1,000,000 annually for a period of four years, and it provides a continuation of the permanent improvement of that part of the river in accordance with the plans of the United States engineers of 1881.

During the general debate not a single argument, not a single valid reason, has been advanced why that plan for the permanent improvement of that stretch of the river should be aban-If the river can not be improved, then the $26,000,000 heretofore expended on that stretch have been thrown away and the committees and the Congresses which appropriated this enormous amount of money and the engineers of the War Department who made the plans stand convicted before the country and the world of having been guilty of an egregious blunder, and this is exactly what the bill in its present state means. on the other hand, such improvement is possible, and I venture to say that every member of the committee will concede that it is, then we ask why our necessities have not been met at a time when the bounty of the committee has been extended to everything and everybody else? There is not a constituent of a Member representing a Mississippi Valley district on this floor who is not vitally interested in the improvement of that part of the Mississippi River, because it needs improvement more than any other part.

And so I ask, Why will these Members allow the river to be abandoned and the work there to be reduced to mere dredging at a time when all the constituencies have made common cause to demand the recognition to which they are entitled? It is stated on behalf of the committee that the tonnage does not justify the outlay, but in other sections the same committee has made appropriations on the theory that commerce will follow the improvement. If this is true in other sections, why should it not be true in ours? Do you doubt for one moment that we will have either the freight or the bottoms to carry it in if you make the river safe and navigable?

Another argument used against us is the alleged necessity of lateral canal between St. Louis and Cairo to secure the required depth. This is an idea which has been brought forward by the so-called "reviewing board," that appendix of the committee by which the committee shapes its engineer reports as well as its own action. But that idea, Mr. Chairman, is scorned by nearly all the competent engineers whom I have consulted on the subject.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Right in that connection-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield to the gentleman if my time can be extended.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I am asking now for information, and in no way to embarrass the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentle-man's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to ask this question: The gentleman stated in his remarks the other day that all the Army engineers with whom he had talked said that it was possible, by contraction work, to develop 14 feet in the Mississippi River from St. Louis to Cairo. The committee desires to know if anyone who is an Army engineer has said that, and would like to have anyone making that assertion before them.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would like to know what Army engineer stated that.

That statement, I will say, in answer to Mr. BARTHOLDT. the gentleman's question, was made by me in reply to a question by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], who asked me to describe the plan according to which the river between St. Louis and Cairo was to be improved. I answered that according to the judgment of the Army engineers with whom I had conferred this improvement could be made by contraction or the narrowing of the river, by revetment work, riprapping, and so forth; but I did not state in this connection that that would secure 14 feet. I did not state that.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Then I understand the gentleman to say that that entire statement that such results could be accomplished by contraction work is to be qualified so as not to mean 14 feet could be obtained in that way?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As a layman I can not tell. I have not the authority of an engineer to say that 14 feet could be secured in that way

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What I desire to know is if there was any engineer who said that 14 feet could be obtained in that way

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In connection with the 14-foot proposition?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Or in any connection.

It is in connection with the general im-Mr. BARTHOLDT. provement of the Mississippi River that is to secure the depth which we want for our purposes-8, 9, 10, or 12 feet. that for that Col. Amos Stickney will be an authority which the gentleman will recognize. He has stated it, and Major Burr has stated it, and other Army officers whom the business men of St. Louis have consulted on this subject have stated the same thing; but you simply abandon the whole plan of improvement.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman state of his own authority or from any conversation that either of these Army officers has ever stated to him that a depth of 12 feet could be obtained by contraction work'

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, I will at least go as far as 10 feet. do not remember that they stated 12 feet, but they stated 10 feet could be secured, which would be sufficient for all practical purposes

Mr. Chairman, I was stating that the river engineers, competent river engineers, scorned the idea of a lateral canal, and hold, as we do to-day, that the best canal to be constructed there should be in the channel of the river itself.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. This assumes a good deal of impornce.
We have provided here for a survey for a 14-foot water. way from St. Louis to the Gulf. The gentleman from Missouri says that competent engineers scorn the idea that a lateral says that competent engineers scorn the idea that a lateral canal will be required for any part of this distance. Is the gentleman from Missouri willing that a clause be placed in this section for a survey: "Provided, That no part of this shall be expended, nor shall any survey be made, in case it shall appear that a lateral canal is required?"

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I will say we have not asked for a survey for a lateral canal. That idea has been injected into the proposition by the so-called "reviewing board" and by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; so that, in order to be consistent, you, the committee, and the distinguished chairman of the committee must provide for the survey for a lateral canal.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that somebody else should be consistent besides the committee and the chairman. The gentleman from Missouri states that everybody derides this idea of a lateral canal. Is he willing that a clause be inserted in this provision for a surrey that the survey shall not be made in case a lateral canal is a necessity? That is a direct question, and one that assumes a great deal of importance.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I must leave that entirely to the committee, because we have not considered it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want, with the permission of my colleague [Mr. Bartholdt], to inform the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of this committee, that there are some people interested in the improvement of the Mississippi River beside those who live in St. Louis; and notwithstanding the gentleman from St. Louis might be willing to waive the provision in that bill, I should prefer for one, representing another constituency equally interested in that stretch of the river, to insist that the provision remain as it is, pending

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think we ought to have a distinct understanding about it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] says that everyone derides the idea of a lateral canal, and perhaps it is not improper to say that attacks have been made upon the committee because they suggested such a canal. Now, let us have what is called a "show down" on this. Are you willing to have it provided in the section for a survey that one shall not be made if a lateral canal is found to be necessary

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the committee have drafted this bill. They have seen fit to inject into it the proposition of the possible necessity of a lateral canal along that stretch of the river. When that proposition was first suggested in the committee room it was entirely new to us. first we heard of a lateral canal being necessary along the 200 miles of the river between St. Louis and Cairo. Consequently I can not assume the responsibility here, on the spur of the moment, of advising the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as to whether that survey should extend to the proposition of a lateral canal or not.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But does not the gentleman think he is hardly justifiable in saying here that every competent engineer derides the lateral canal, and then declining to carry that opinion into effect by providing for a survey that shall ex-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I have made this statement partly from information which I have received from engineers personally, not recently, but years ago, but mainly upon the authority of a letter which I have received, an official letter, from the manager of the Business Men's League of St. Louis.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, it comes from the Business Men's

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Do not speak of the Business Men's League in derisive tones, because it is the greatest business organization in the country.

Oh, yes. Mr. BURTON of Ohio.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And that gentleman states that the members of the Business Men's League who are interested in river improvement have made it their business to inquire of Army engineers whether they thought a lateral canal along that stretch was necessary or not, and the engineers invariably an- for improvements of the Mississippi River are like the river swered, I am informed, that such a canal was not necessary and that they never heard of it. I was then requested to offi-cially ask the chairman of the committee, on the floor of this House, what Army engineer has advised him of the necessity of such a canal.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Then I will ask another question. Is the gentleman willing to telegraph to this Business Men's League and find out from them whether they are willing to have such a clause as that go in-that the lateral canal shall prevent the making of a survey?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have no objection to that. As I said before, we have no interest in a lateral canal. We believe that the Mississippi River can be deepened.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is, you have no interest in a lateral canal even if it is required for a waterway from St. Louis to the Gulf?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir; I will not go to that extent. We want the 14-foot channel, but we are advised upon competent authority that the Mississippi River can be deepened sufficiently without the necessity of a lateral canal.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Again, I want to ask the gentleman who is the competent authority that says that below St. Louis it can be improved to 14 feet without canalization—that is, without locks and dams or without a lateral canal? Who has said anything of that kind? I am asking for individuals. I am asking for names

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will answer it. I take it that when an organization like the business men's league makes a statement to a Member of Congress in an official letter, which they know might be used before this House and before the country, they know what they are talking about and are careful in making any statement.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Then I trust the gentleman will telegraph to them and ask if they are willing-that is, if they are the actuating force behind the gentleman. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his colleague's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, a question. Is the Business Men's League of St. Louis responsible for the resolutions passed by the legislature of Missouri and the legislature of Illinois?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say to my colleague that I don't know a thing about those resolutions, nor have I wired the legislature to reconsider or rescind them. I have no connection with it whatever.

Mr. LLOYD. I understood a few moments ago, as I came into the Hall, the gentleman to say that he had the letters that may have been written by individuals in Missouri to Members of Congress and their answers.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have not.

Mr. LLOYD. What was it that the gentleman said? Mr. BARTHOLDT. I made the statement that I have a list of Members who, in response to letters from their constituents, expressed themselves in favor of the deep waterway, which is an entirely different proposition from the one we are now discussing.

Mr. LLOYD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I understood him to say that he had the letters. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Are the letters which Congressmen have written to their constituents in which they say they are in favor of this particular project, in favor of the 14-foot project from the Lakes to the Gulf?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the minute remaining let me say that I not only favor every improvement and every appropriation contained in this bill, but I also resent the insinuation as if I or any of my friends had made an attack on the personal character of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Hence I regard all the remarks made in defense of the gentleman, as far as we are concerned, as gratuitous and unnecessary, if not an attempt to injure our just cause by impugning our motives instead of answering our arguments. All we ask, Mr. Chairman, is a square deal, and as an argument in favor of our proposition I say in the language of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, "Argument itself, on a large scale, and the biggest of them all is that written by nature on the map." [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman from Missouri take the position of some of the leading papers, that unless this project is adopted they would kill the bill?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not indorse that statement and will say right here that no matter what disposition the House may make of the amendment I offer I shall vote for the bill. But since my friend from Wisconsin has asked me a question, I would like to revert for a minute to a statement he made on the floor yesterday, namely, that there was not a single steamboat on the Mississippi River owned by St. Louis capital. I have a telegraphic reply to a question which I asked in regard to this subject, and it states:

The following lines owned almost exclusively by St. Louis interests operate on the Mississippi; St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Company, eight boats; Eagle Packet Company, five; Chester Line Steamers, two; St. Louis and Cape Girardeau Transportation Company, one; Columbia Excursion Company, one; New Union Sand Company, two; Wiggins Ferry Company, ten; Interstate Car and Transfer Company, four; Madison Ferry Company, three; Venice and Carondelet Transportation Company, two; Ivory Transfer Company, two; and many similar boats and a number of barges.

W. F. Sauxders.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Let me ask the gentleman if those are ferryboats?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; only the last three, but there are nineteen other boats besides those engaged in the ferry busi-

Mr. Chairman, I will print in the Record an extract from the Waterways Journal of February 2, 1907:

REAL CONDITIONS OF THE ST. LOUIS CHANNEL-IDEAS OF A PRA-STEAMBOAT MAN ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI

STEAMBOAT MAN ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

In view of the present agitation for a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, it seems strange that our St. Louis delegates to the waterways convention at Washington, D. C., some weeks ago were not better posted in regard to conditions of the navigable channel at present and during the past five or six years, so that they could have answered Speaker Cannon and Chairman Burton more correctly when asked why there were not more boats plying on the Mississippi. Mr. Burton stated to Congressman Bartholder recently that for years the Mississippi, between the mouths of the Missouri and Ohio rivers, had shown a depth of from 7 to 8 feet.

Our Congressmen and even our St. Louis 14-feet-through-the-valley boosters, who should be better informed, seem to be laboring under the impression that Mr. Burton was right. No doubt in Washington they take it for granted that the reports sent in from the United States Engineer Department from St. Louis are correct, as they have no other way of knowing, but I beg to differ from them and hope to show in this article that even United States engineers are sometimes mistaken. I have steamboated on the Mississippi River continuously, except when blocked by ice, from 1870 to September, 1905, and was employed by the Dolphin Transportation Company for the past thirty-two years; have held pilot and master's license twenty-eight years. I merely state this to show that I have head an opportunity to know whereof I speak. Since 1880 I have been in charge of towboats, but always stood my watch at the wheel. During all these years I employed the best of pilots, such as Deam, Burbach, Miller, McCullough, Townsend, Shinkle, and Donahue, all veterans who served in the famous Anchor Line and the St. Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation Company. No doubt Capts. H. Haarstick and J. M. Mason can testify as to their good piloting.

Now, I contend, and without fear of contradiction by any pilot in the St. Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation Company. No doubt Capts. H. Haarstick and J. M. Mason can testify as to their good piloting.

Now, I contend, and without fear of contradiction by any pilot in service—except those in the Government service—that in the past five or six years the United States Engineer Department has not maintained between St. Louis and Cairo an 8-foot channel by 2 or 3 feet, and I venture to say that if they had kept open an 8-foot navigable channel for towboats the once famous Valley Line and Anchor Line would be in existence to-day.

It is a well-known fact among river men that pilots in the Government service nearly always report 2 or 3 feet more water than other pilots can find running the same marks, and to show that they are sometimes mistaken I will state an instance, and can prove it if called upon. On September 16, 1904, we came up to a crossing called "Hamburg Towhead," or "Bainbridge," and there found a dredge boat two-thirds of the way across the river from where she had dredged and buoyed a channel. In trying to get between the buoys, which we found were not far enough apart to permit the passage of our tow of three loaded barges, we lost some little time, and the captain of the dredge boat came down to us and stated that he had a 9-foot channel there. We went ahead slowly and found only 5½ on one side and 6 feet on the other, right between his buoys, which said captain witnessed for himself. When I asked him where his 9 feet of water was he answered: "Well, by gosh, I had it here yesterday evening."

The same season, a little later on, a dredge boat lay tied to the bank at Hacker Towhead for a week or two with steam up and a crew of water was he answered: "Well, by gosh, I had it here yesterday evening."

The same season, a little later on, a dredge boat lay tied to the bank at Hacker Towhead for a week or two with steam up and a crew abourd, and never even tried to improve the channel just below there at Silding Towhead and Stanard bar, while steamboats were pounding away at those places on 5 and 6 feet of water, and before the close of navigation, on November 24, it got down to 4½ feet.

That winter Major Casey stated in Congress that he had maintained an S-foot channel between St. Louis and Cairo. It seems to me our St. Louis delegates should have known these facts when they went to Washington to plead for larger appropriations.

Following I will give only a few of the soundings as we found them:

In August, 1900, 4½ feet at Bainbridge. United States survey boats were there, and they could not find any more. Six feet at Sulphur Springs; 6½ feet at Stanton, Daniels, and Buffalo Island; in September, 6 feet at Stanton, 6 and 7 feet at Rattlesnake, Bainbridge. Dickys, and Cape Girardeau; in October, 6½ feet and 7 feet at Birds Point; in November, 7½ feet at Ste. Genevieve; in March, 1901, 5½ and 6 feet at Brewers Point, Philadelphia, and foot of Ste. Genevieve; in May,

7 and 8 feet at Ste. Genevieve; in July 7½ feet at Okaw and Herculaneum, 6½ feet at Relitionance and Herculaneum, 6½ feet at Plennings, 6 and 6 feet at 105 of other places, and remained practically so until the close of the season.

18 feet at 105 of other places, and remained practically so until the close of the season.

18 feet at Chew, 62 feet at Head of Okaw; in November; 7½ feet at Danlest, 64 feet at Head of Okaw; in November; 7½ feet at Danlest, 64 feet at Head of Okaw; in November; 75½ feet at Danlest, 65 feet of the season of the se months they made us a rate of $25 per car, which, of course, was out of all reason, and we couldn't stand for it.

No doubt this railroad company thought, as theirs was the only road from there to the river, they would charge what they pleased. We afterwards made an agreement with a private party to construct a railroad from the river to our land and do our hauling. When the trunk line people discovered this road heading toward our land they came to see us, and haven't quit coming yet. They now offer a rate of $35 per car through for a distance of nearly 300 miles and assume switching charges besides. This seems to be a pretty good argument that river regulation is rate regulation. As soon as we had an opening to the river, down came rail rates with a vengeance.—John E. Luebben.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am not desirous

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am not desirous of making a speech at this late hour in the day, especially on a thing that has been spoken about so much. One thing I am dead sure of, however, and that is that if the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron], were to happen to die during this session, which God forbid, all we would have to do to get up a book of eulogies would be to reproduce this debate. [Laughter and applause.]

Having said that, I want to say that I am most heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri Mr. BARTHOLDT]. If we are going to undertake to improve the Mississippi River at all, his proposition contains the essence of good sense. If we are not going to have deep water from St. Louis to the Gulf, all of these other propositions go by the board. I don't care a straw whether the channel is the bed of the Mississippi or a lateral canal, except, of course, that common sense, economy, and prudence dictate that if it can be made in the bed of the private property to be published. in the bed of the river, the bed of the river ought to be utilized, but if it can not be made in the bed of the river, then I am in favor of the lateral canal. What every man in the Mississippi Valley wants—I don't care whether he is a farmer or a mechanic or a merchant or a lawyer or a doctor or what he isif he has half sense, is deep water, in the first place, from St. Louis to the Gulf, and then these other propositions follow in order and as consequences of that.

Under the leave to print I insert an article which is more or less pertinent to this discussion, which article I recently wrote for The Associated Sunday Magazines, of New York, and which was published last Sunday in their magazine supplement furnished to several great metropolitan dailies. Here is the article, headlines and all:

WHEN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY RULES THE NATION—WITHIN FIVE YEARS ITS VOTERS WILL BE ABLE TO ELECT THE PRESIDENT AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

If the population of the Mississippi Valley increases as rapidly, when compared with the population of the rest of the country, from 1900 to 1910 as it did from 1890 to 1900, the valley States could, if voting solidly, elect a President and House of Representatives in 1912. They could do it easily in 1922 and for all time thereafter. The Senate will be the only possible obstacle to their complete supremacy, and eventually the Senate must on every important question yield to the public sentiment voiced by the House of Representatives fresh from the people, just as the British House of Lords yields to the British House of Commons.

With an area of 1,250,000 square miles, or 800,000,000 acres, much of it richer than the valley of the Ganges or the Delta of the Nile, drained by 16,900 miles of navigable rivers capable of bearing upon their broad bosoms the commerce of the world, possessing an ideal climate—cold enough for virtue, warm enough for comfort—situated in the heart of the continent, the Mississippi basin is the most delectable place for human habitation beneath the stars, and constitutes an empire more valuable than that over which the Roman eagles flew or that over which Napoleon ruled when in the plentitude of his imperial power.

THE VALLEY'S MEN AND WOMEN.

THE VALLEY'S MEN AND WOMEN.

perial power.

THE VALLEY'S MEN AND WOMEN.

Acre for acre, there is more tillable land, more fertile, and more bountifully stocked with minerals, building stones, and timber in the great valley than in any other considerable portion of the Republic. Rich land and a bracing climate nurture the flower of the human race—big, strapping, sinewy men, handsome, healthy, high-spirited women, fit to be the fathers and mothers of the future rulers, not of our own country only, but of the whole world. The valley was first populated by the very cream of the original thirteen States and by the elite of every European country. Speaking of the pioneers, President Roosevelt, in his life of Col. Thomas H. Benton, says:

"Physically they were, and are, especially in Kentucky, the finest members of our race; an examination of the statistics relating to the volunteers in the civil war shows that the natives of no other State and the men from no foreign country whatsoever came up to them in bodily development."

The descendants of these pioneers are in every way worthy of their ancestors, and there are no evidences of degeneracy, mental or physical, among them.

Of course, I would not be understood as contending for one moment—neither, I assume, would President Roosevelt—that a man must be big physically in order to be a good, valuable, influential, or even great citizen; for everybody knows that some of the foremost men of all this world were small in body, among them Napoleon, the Duke of Luxembourg. Alexander Hamilton, Aaron Burr, James Madison, and Alexander H. Stephens. In many instances activity and muscular compactness compensate for build and height. It is generally known that there is a minimum stature fixed for privates in the regular Army, and that it is 5 feet 10 inches, the theory being that they can stand the hardships of military life better than taller ones. Evidently the authors of that maximum did not take their lesson out of the book of that King of Prussia who ransacked the earth to find recruits for his brigade of giants, and who would pay more for a 7-footer than he paid an ambassador to a foreign court.

A foreign critic of everything American once declared that we were prone to mistake mere bigness for greatness; and I fear that in many cases we must plead guilty to the soft impeachment; but usually bigness counts for, other things being equal, increased strength. Large bodies generally support large heads, and large heads generally contain large brains. I was told by a man who was told by a New England hat manufacturer that hats for the trade east of the Alleghenies ran from No. 6 to No. 7; in the Mississippi Valley, from No. 7 to No. 75, and in Texas, from No. 7 to No. 8. Perhaps the brains of the wearers of the hats from No. 6 to No. 7 may make up in ineness of texture for what they lack in size and weight, on the principle that precious articles are made up in small packages.

James Wilson, of Iowa, Secretary of Agriculture, who in his person and career demonstrates what a Scotchman may come to, provided he is caught young enough and brought to this country, and my friend Walter Williams, the savant who edits the Columbia, Mo., Herald, agree that 1 acre of ground in this country is sufficient to support one human being.

ITS VALUE IN NEW ENGLAND.

It is only fair to assume that these philosophers were influenced by local environment and were basing their inspiring calculations on the wondrous fertility of Missouri and Iowa soils, which is a marvel to dwellers in less favored regions even in our highly favored country. It is said that when that brilliant and masterful man, Thomas Brackett Reed, first traveled through my Congressional district and observed the fatness of the land, he threw up his hands in an ecstasy of astonishment and exclaimed, "My God! that soil is so rich that if they had it back in New England they would sell it by the peck for seed!" And this man from Maine was correct.

While the average acre fertility of the Mississippi Valley is less than that of Missouri and Iowa, it is clear as crystal that it is greater than in the country at large. The Wilson-Williams ratio of persons to the acre would place the valley population potentiality at $00,000,000 souls, nearly one-half of the present population of the globe—most assuredly a triumphant answer to the Malthusian pessimists, and an indisputable argument in favor of the antirace suicide theory so much exploited by President Roosevelt and so enthusiastically practiced by divers Americans (one of whom in my district was the prood father of twenty-one children, which, if he had not been a Democrat, would have entitled him to the London consul-generalship under the present Administration). Statisticians tell us that the birth rate is diminishing everywhere; but while that is true of this country in general as well as of others, it is also true that it diminishes more slowly in the Mississippi Valley than east of the Alleghenies. The people of the great valley obey with alacrity the primal command of God to Adam and Eve: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it." Mirabile dictu! Of all the multitudinous speeches I have heard, I have never known but one man to enlarge upon the debt of gratitude a government owes to fathers and mohers as such. Most assuredly th "Doubtless God could have made a better body of land than the Mississippi Valley; but doubtless He never did."

THE WORLD'S ASPARAGUS RED.

In an exuberant moment, Thomas F. Marshall, of witty and therefore of blessed memory, characterized Woodford County, Ky., as "the asparagus bed of the garden spot of the world." To a gourmet that is the ne plus ultra of compliment. Woodford is indeed a goodly land and, like Zion of old, beautiful for situation; but in the Mississippi Valley are many such asparagus beds in many such garden spots. For instance, in the ten counties of my Congressional district I can find enough land rich as the richest acre in Woodford and as fair to look upon to make ten counties the size of Woodford, and then have enough good land left to make twenty more counties of the same dimensions.

Build another Chinese wall about the Mississippi Valley, cut us off from all communion with our kind, and inside that wall we can produce all the necessaries and most of the luxuries of human life.

Political parties may come and go; all sorts of empirics may try alk kinds of experiments on the body politic; pseudo statesmen may produce panies terrible in their results; sordid greed may, by legislation, levy tribute upon the country till the iniquity cries to Heaven for redress; but one thing cocksure, so long as summer and winter, seedtime and harvest, do not fail, the denizens of the Mississippi Valley can not be starved. If the departed spirits of ancient worthies take any interest in the affairs of this lower world. Epicurus and Luculius must regret that their lives were not cast in the pleasant places of the great valley—the granary of a mighty nation, the storehouse of the world.

All this talk of good cheer may not appeal to the esthetic; but nevertheless the average man and woman will agree with Charles Lamb as to the beatific frame of mild in which one finds himself, having dined well. Napoleon said that an army travels upon its stomach, and the colossal Corsican might have extended his remark to n THE WORLD'S ASPARAGUS BED.

2 each; to Illinois, Texas, and New York 3 each. Prior to the apportionment under the census of 1900 the States lying wholly or in part in the Mississippi Valley had 286 Representatives in Congress, representing two hundred and eighty-six three-hundred-and-fifty-sevenths of the population of the United States. Under the census of 1900 they gained 22 Representatives out of 386, showing a gain of twenty-two three-hundred-and-eighty-sixths of the entire population of the country. Prior to the census of 1900 the States lying entirely outside the valley had 71 Representatives out of 357 in Congress, and therefore had seventy-one three-hundred-and-fifty-sevenths of the population of the entire country. Under the census of 1900 they gained only seven three-hundred-and-eighty-sixths in Congressional representation, and therefore in population.

entire country. Under the ceases of 200 and representation, and therefore in population.

That statement shows that the States outside the valley made a greater percentage of gains in Representatives and population in the census period from 1890 to 1900 than did those lying in the valley; but that calculation is misleading, for in the foregoing statement New York with 34 Representatives, Pennsylvania with 30, Virginia with 10, North Carolina with 9, South Carolina with 7, Georgia with 11, Alabama with 9, and Texas with 13, a total of 123 (under the census of 1890) are counted in the valley, though only very small portions of them are in it Counting these as nonvalley States, the statement is: Under the census of 1890 the valley States, containing one hundred and sixty-three three-hundred-and-fifty-sevenths of our population, gained 16 Representatives out of a total increase of 29; while the nonvalley States, with one hundred and ninety-four three-hundred-and-fifty-sevenths of our entire population, gained only 13 Representatives out of a total of 29. That is, while the population of the valley States in 1890 was only 45 per cent of our entire population in 1890 to 45 per cent in 1900.

PITTSBURG'S APPORTIONMENT.

Even this latter statement does not present the case exactly, for,

Even this latter statement does not present the case exactly, for, while only infinitesimal portions of New York, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Texas lie in the valley, a large slice of Pennsylvania—the region around Pittsburg, which is growing at a phenomenal rate and whose actual and potential wealth staggers the imagination—is in the valley and bound to it closely by the ties of commerce, constantly growing stronger; and for every essential purpose Texas is an integral part of the valley. Oklahoma will soon have 5 Representatives in Congress, and, in justice, should have 8, Add to the last statement of the valley's strength in Representatives and population, all of Texas and Oklahoma, together with one-fourth of Pennsylvania, and it makes the valley's increase in population relatively much greater, once more illustrating the truth of Bishop Berkeley's famous line, "Westward the course of empire takes its way."

Bishop Berkeley's famous line, "Westward the course of empire takes its way."

That Joseph G. Cannon—"Uncle Joe"—will be elected Speaker of the House in the Sixbleth Congress, if he lives, is among the certainties of the future. That Congress expires March 4, 1909. Between that date and March 4, 1861, are twenty-four Congresses. To fill the Speakership in them—the second most powerful office in our governmental system—valley men (counting Uncle Joe as already elected) have been elected for thirteen terms: Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, three; Michael C. Kerr. of Indiana, one; J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, one; John Griffin Carlisle, of Kentucky, three; David Bremner Henderson, of Iowa, two; Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois, three; while nonvalley men have been elected for eleven terms: Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania, one; James Gillespie Blaine, of Maine, three; Samuel Jackson Randall. of Pennsylvania. two; Thomas Brackett Reed, of Maine, three, and Charles Frederick Crisp, of Georgia, two.

WITH OKLAHOMA'S HELP.

WITH OKLAHOMA'S HELP.

WITH OKLAHOMA'S HELP.

With Oklahoma in the Union, we shall have 92 Senators, 391 Representatives, and 483 votes in the electoral college. Of the forty-six States, twenty-one are wholly or almost wholly in the Mississippi Valley—Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, and Mississippi. These have 42 Senators, or 5 less than a majority; 188 Representatives, or 8 less than a majority; 230 Presidential electors, or 12 less than a majority. It will be observed that this leaves both Pennsylvania and Texas entirely out of the valley. There can be no doubt that the next census will give the twenty-one valley States control of both the House of Representatives and the electoral college; but the majority of the Senate will still come from the twenty-five States wholly or mostly outside the valley. In all human probability that will be the status of the Senate for all time—42 from the valley States and 50 from the nonvalley States, unless we finally conclude to make States out of Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, and our colonial possessions, or unless we annex the British North American possessions and cut them up into States, or unless Texas should avail herself of the extraordinary privilege of dividing herself into the States, a right which she has by the treaty and resolution of annexation. My prediction is that she will never so divide herself. State pride is too strong, and the Texan who would advocate such a proposition would run the risk of being mobbed. Who can blame that magnificent and mammoth Commonwealth for her pride in herself and her faith in her destiny? BEGAN TO FEEL THEIR OATS.

BEGAN TO FEEL THEIR OATS.

In 1824, at the close of "the era of good feeling," the valley States began politically to feel their oats, to borrow a strong horsy phrase, and made their initial effort to achieve national supremacy by running two candidates for the Presidency, Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, and Henry Clay, of Kentucky, who were destined to keep the country in a turmoil for a quarter of a century with their rival ambitions and personal animosities. Old Capulet and Old Montague did not hate each other more cordially than did "The Great Commoner" and "The Iron Soldier of the Hermitage," and this personal hatred of these masterful valley men constituted the line of demarcation between political parties in the United States for a score of years, just as certainly as Frederick the Great in the Seven Years' war brought the French and Russian armies about his ears by his sarcastic mots about the Czarina and Madam Pompadour. It will be remembered that the Presidential fight in 1824 was a quadrangular performance, John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, and William Henry Crawford, of Georgia, being the other two competitors. Really it was a sectional contest rather than political, for all four claimed to be of the same political faith. It was the Southwest in general and the Mississippi Valley in particular against the rest of the country; for let it not be forgotten in this connection that a portion of Georgia lies within the Mississippi Valley.

COLONEL BENTON'S CONDUCT.

COLONEL BENTON'S CONDUCT.

How thoroughly it was a sectional fight is shown by the conduct of that immortal Missourian, Col. Thomas Hart Benton. In the preliminary contest he was for Clay, largely by reason of the fact that they were kinsmen by marriage, but chiefly because Clay was a valley man. Clay not being able to bring his candidacy into Congress, because he stood fourth in the electoral college, Benton transferred his support to Crawford in preference to Jackson, because he and Jackson had once fought each other almost to death in a pistol duel at Nashville, and as a consequence were not on speaking terms, though they lived to rival the loves of Jonathan and David and of Damon and Pythias. Crawford being removed from the consideration of Congress by a stroke of paralysis at the psychological moment, Benton, sectional feeling prevailing over private hate, promptly transferred his support to the hero of New Orleans, and from that day till the hour of his death was more Jacksonian than Jackson himself.

If Henry Clay had stood firmly by his section the valley men would have won, and won easily, in the contest in the House of Representatives: but in the nick of time he went over to Adams, thereby electing the New Englander, induced to such action, no doubt, by personal jealousy of Jackson. This jealousy grew out of the fact that they lived in neighboring States and the further fact that he did not believe that both he and the Tennessean could reach the Presidency. Perhaps if Clay had supported and elected Jackson he would have reached the Presidency himself. It is clear that his opposition to Jackson prevented his realizing that lifelong ambition.

JACKSON'S ULTIMATE TRIUMPH.

JACKSON'S ULTIMATE TRIUMPH.

Though Adams became President, the moral victory was with the valley men, and in 1828 they sent Jackson over the mountains to Washington, not only as a full-fledged President, but as the avant courier of the valley statesmen destined to control the Government of the Republic. Jackson's election was epoch maker in our affairs and marked the beginning of the end of seaboard domination. It is of vastly more importance in its sectional than in its political aspect and influence.

marked the beginning of the end of seaboard domination. It is of vastly more importance in its sectional than in its political aspect and influence.

During the forty years prior to that event all our Presidents had come from the sunrise side of the Appalachians, thirty-two years' service of the four decades falling to Virginians and eight to Massachusetts men. Since that, counting President Roosevelt's present term as finished by himself, eighty years have elapsed—twenty Presidential terms. Valley men have been selected to fill fourteen of these: Jackson, two; the eider Harrison, one; Polk, one; Taylor, one; Lincoln, two; Grant, two; Hayes, one; Garfield, one; the younger Harrison, one; McKinley, two—leaving only six to nonvalley men; Van Buren, one; Pierce, one; Buchanan, one; Cleveland, two; Roosevelt, one. True, the death of William Henry Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley, all valley men, reduced the actual service of the valley men and increased that of the nonvalley men by about seventeen and a half years; for it is an interesting fact that every President who has died in office was a valley man and every time the Vice-President who succeeded by reason of the death of his chief was a nonvalley man.

It is also apropos to state that while in the first thirty-six years two New Englanders—the Adamses, father and son—were elected for one term each, in the last eighty-four years only one New Englander—Franklin Pierce—was elected, and he for only one term, while only one other—James Gillespie Blaine—was nominated. No New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writing New Englander has been elected since 1852, and at the present writi fluence of the valley in electing Presidents increases quadrennially.

STILL MORE PROSPERTY COMING.

The systematic movement now on foot adequately to improve the Mississippi Valley's wast system of waterways will add immensely to the valley's wealth, prosperity, prestige, and political influence. The people of the great valley are just waking up to the fact that God, in his infinite wisdom and beneficence, never vouchsafed to any other people such a magnificent system of waterways as He has given to them, and that no people ever so signally failed to improve them for all they were worth. In his great speech before the St. Louis river and harbor convention Herry T. Ratney, of Illinois, predicted that men would before long behold the amazing spectacle of an American battle ship going from the Gulf to Chicago by way of the Mississippi River, the Illinois River, and the Chicago Drainage Canal. He also confidently predicted 9 feet of water from Pittsburg to Cairo, 9 feet on the upper Mississippi, and 14 feet from St. Louis to the Gulf. Add to these the improvement of the Missourl and other great rivers, together with the building of the Lake Erie and Pittsburg Canal, and there will come such an impetus to commerce in the Mississippi Valley and such a cheapening of freight rates as will multiply both the population and wealth of that vast region many fold before this new century is old.

From the earliest settlements west of the Alleghenies the Mississippi River has been a potent factor in our affairs. The invincible determination of the western frontiersman to have free-water access to the Gulf was what induced Thomas Jefferson to make the Louisiana purchase, the most stupendous transaction in real estate suggested on earth since the devil took the Savior to the top of a high mountain and offered Him the dominion of the world to fall down and worship him. Even at this late day it makes a patriot's blood run faster to read Jefferson's sentence, "The Mississippi must flow unvexed and unfettered to the sea." It was th speech on this particular proposition. I rise for the purpose of saying that I am in full sympathy with the motion that is made by my colleague, Doctor Bartholdt, and I would be very glad indeed if every Member on this floor would give his support to the measure. The engineers in charge of that part of the river have said in their report that $650,000 is necessary for the maintenance of that part of the stream during the next year. If this appropriation of $1,000,000 per year is made, it is only $350,000 that would go to a permanent improvement. This, with the $190,000 for a survey, will give encouragement to our Lake-to-the-Gulf proposition, which is dear to the heart of many Missourians, and a project well worthy the attention of the American people. It gives encouragement to the upper Mississippi River resident, because it will show that there is no purpose to abandon any part of that great river.

Mr. COUDREY. Mr. Chairman, I want to preface my remarks by stating that we do not question the integrity of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but it does look like they are biased, not prejudiced. The twenty millions of people in the Middle West have been slighted. They are entitled to every consideration, and certainly the Mississippi River between St. Louis and Cairo, like all other meritorious projects, should have its proportion of the total appropriation of over $83,000,000 carried by the bill presented to this House, and I again appeal to the gentleman from Ohio and the other members of his committee and the whole House to vote for the amendment—give us the money we should have for this most impor-tant stretch of the great Mississippi. I am quite sure that the members of this committee will agree with me that they are not infallible; I know that they have overlooked a most important project, and it is not too late to remedy this matter, and I again appeal to them on behalf of the people of the great Mississippi Valley. Why should we not start the great midcontinental waterway uniting the Lakes and the Gulf? Why permit this portion of the great Mississippi River to be neglected? as nearly one-fourth of the entire population of the United States live in the territory drained by this great river, their claims should be answered. We come to you because the coun-try is suffering from inadequate transportation facilities. Daily we read articles in the newspapers of the millions of dollars that are lost annually to our people by the failure of the National Government to provide the assistance which is within their grasp. I differ with some of my colleagues from Missouri and Illinois on the subject or question as to whether the members of the State legislatures should petition us to do something in behalf of the people we have the honor to represent. I think they do a wise thing in again calling the particular attention of the Members of Congress to this matter. I hope their appeals will not be in vain. We could very easily appropriate a few millions of dollars, which would start our project on its way, and I want to ask the chairman of this committee if he won't reconsider this matter. Our people represent millions of tons of tonnage, and I do say without hesitation that our section has been discriminated against, and I know that they have not received what they are entitled to, and according to the present rules of the Rivers and Harbors Committee the Mississippi River during our lifetime will continue to be neglected. am certainly in favor and will vote for the amendment.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors one question. like to know whether or not the amount of money carried in this appropriation providing for the improvement of this stretch of the river between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri can be used for improvement purposes other than dredging's

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that the engineer having the work in charge was here and his statement was taken. He also made a further statement in writing, in which he said that $150,000 per annum would take care of the dredging, $85,000 per annum would be needed to take care of existing works, revetment, etc., in the river, and that there would be a balance of $15,000 per annum for use in case of emergency on new works. This is in addition to the balance on hand after paying for dredges under construction.

Mr. RODENBERG. Is is not a fact, however, that the local engineers at St. Louis specifically recommended $650,000 for the work this year?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not recall the exact amount. Mr. RODENBERG. That is the statement in their report.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I only know indirectly, because the estimates of the local engineers are not given this year in the reports of the chief, unless they be given by accident.

Mr. RODENBERG. In the Book of Estimates for this year it was $650,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I know it was more than $250,000 a

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, it is refreshing for me to know that there are methods of improvement provided and contemplated by those in charge of that stretch of the river for improving it by methods other than that of dredging.

I am here reminded of the fact that a year ago now this question came up under a little controversy which took place on the floor of this House. At that time I asked the distinguished chairman of this committee whether or not under existing law money could be expended for improvement purposes other than dredging, and the reply was that under existing law not one dollar of the appropriation carried in the river and harbor act of 1905 could be expended for purposes other than dredging. that time I remember of having expressed my opinion that the method of improving this stretch of the river by dredging was and had not been a success. I gave it as my opinion a few days ago on the floor of this House that the method of improving this stretch of the river by dredging had not been a success, and, Mr. Chairman, I give it now as my opinion dredging is not a success. For two reasons I most heartily indorse the amendment offered by my colleague from the city of St. Louis [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. I am for the amendment, first, because it contemplates improvements other than by dredging, and I am for the amendment, in the second place, because a larger sum of money is provided for in the amendment than is carried in the The meager sum of $250,000 for the improvement of this stretch of the river between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri is not what we ought to have and is not what we are entitled to. It has been somewhat discouraging to me as a citizen of the great Mississippi Valley to sit here and listen to speech after speech and see that the Ohio River, which is but one of the tributaries of the great Mississippi, has been converted into a series of dams and locks from source to mouth.

Of the total volume of water that flows toward the sea through the Mississippi, the great father of waters, the amount which flows into it from the Ohio is a very small per cent, and yet the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico is provided for to the extent only of about $5,000,000, a distance of 1,200 miles. I am informed that the greatest length of the Ohio River is only about 900 miles. Yet that stream, which has had in the past expended upon it millions of dollars, gets $4,000,000 under the provision of this bill. Mr. Chairman, I know, as a matter of fact; I know, as a matter of observation, that the improvement by dredging of this part of the Mississippi River is not, and never will be, a success. As I explained a few days ago, the alluvial banks of this stream are such that it can not contain the great volume of water it must necessarily contain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time does the gentleman

Mr. RHODES. Two minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may have two minutes more,

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RHODES. I was about to say, gentlemen, I know, as a matter of observation, that good, substantial improvements heretofore begun have actually gone to waste and into decay as a result of the abandonment of well-fixed methods of bank improvement, by which the river was formerly improved. I know that by fencing, by revetment, and by other means of bank improvement greater results and better results will come to that stretch of the river than by the method of dredging; I know, too, we need more money; therefore I hope the amendment offered by my colleague from St. Louis will prevail. It is right and it is just. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, representing a district bordering on the Mississippi River, living in the State of Illinois, knowing something about that stretch of the river between Cairo and St. Louis, having traveled up and down the same many times, knowing that the amount of money which is provided in this river and harbor bill for the next year to enable the Engineer Corps to do the work that ought to be done there is absolutely insufficient, I rise to say that I heartily indorse the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT] and indorse the statements made upon the amendment by the other gentlemen who have spoken. My district reaches from the mouth of the Ohio River away beyond the mid line between Cairo and St. Louis. I know that work is needed at many places in my district. Work has been done time and time again. Much of it has been wasted by reason of there not having been a sufficient amount appropriated to do the work as it ought to have been done to make it a permanent improvement. I know that in addition to the work that has been done I have been called on by my constituency time and again to urge the Department to do more work, stating the absolute necessity for same. Responding to those calls, I have gone to the Engineer Department when Congress was not in session and presented the cases specially. Every time I have presented such cases as made out to me by my people, and as I knew the facts to be myself, I have asked that an engineer be sent specially to make examinations at the points indicated by my people and by myself and report to the Engineer Corps at Washington whether the statements made by me to the department were correct or not and whether or not the work we asked for was necessary. In each of those cases an engineer has been sent, and in almost every case the report of the engineer has been an absolute confirmation, not only of the statements made by my people but the statements made from my own personal knowledge to the department. And so long, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, as there was any money remaining of the funds appropriated for that stretch of the river the Engineer Corps has been doing the work. But I have reports in my possession today, made recently, after I had made the same request that I have stated before

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, before very long I shall make a motion to close debate. However, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Smith] have five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I thank the committee and the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for their courtesy. I was saying that I have in my possession reports made by the engineer in charge after the Department had or-dered him to make the examinations at those various places in my district and report whether the work was necessary or not, and those reports show that the work is necessary, and "very necessary" is the language in some of them. And then when I called upon the War Department and asked them that in compliance with the report of the engineer in charge they would order this work done, the reply was simply that they had no money with which to do the work. And the reports of the en-gineer making the examination in each one of them stated that while the work at those points was necessary, and in one or two instances they stated it was "very necessary," yet he says: There are no funds remaining out of which I can do the work."

Now, gentlemen of the committee, those statements are absolutely true. They are borne out by the report of the engineer and the statements of the Engineer Department. the case, it is necessary that we have more money than is provided for in this bill if we intend to provide means to do any thing to protect and preserve that channel from Cairo up to St. Louis. I heartily indorse the amendment offered by the gentleman from St. Louis and earnestly ask the membership of this committee to vote with us and give us this amount, which is justly deserved and absolutely needed. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I move that the committee do now

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Dalzell, Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. Currier, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order.

sideration.

The amendments were on page 1, line 5, after the word hereafter" to insert the word "actually," and after the word " hereafter " "Provided," in line 7, to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to relieve home-stead entrymen of the duty of residence during the months not herein named: Provided further, That in commutation homestead proofs no credit for the period of actual absence under this act shall be allowed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no homestead entry shall be canceled and no final proof shall be rejected because of any failure of the entryman named therein to hereafter actually reside upon the lands covered by his entry during the months of December, January, February, and March, or any portion of such months: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed, etc.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICT OF PUGET SOUND.

Mr. BURROWS. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7502) providing for the appointment of an appraiser of merchandise for the customs collection district of Puget Sound, State of Washington, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the bill read:

I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8186) to construct and place a light-ship at or near Ohio Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24928) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, by the Benton Water Company, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Washington at what point in the river it is proposed to construct the dam?

Mr. PILES. It is a House bill, and it is accompanied by the report of the House committee. The report shows at what point in the river the dam is to be constructed.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill came from the committee this morning. The construction of dams across navigable rivers is sometimes a matter of considerable local importance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the bill had better go over until I can examine the report and see where the dam is to be constructed.

Mr. PILES. I have no objection to its going over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over. Mr. HEYBURN subsequently said: I withdraw the objection which I interposed to the present consideration of House bill

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 24928) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, by the Benton Water Company, was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be

CHARLES E. DANNER & CO.

Mr. DANIEL. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8685) for the relief of Charles E. Danner & Co., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. The bill carries an appropriation of $240. It remits a penalty under the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I ask leave for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Charles E. Danner, John N. Wallace, and W. Porter Danner, copartners trading under the name of Charles E. Danner & Co., $240, the amount paid by them for a wholesale dealer's license for the sale of oleomargarine, and the penalty thereon.

Mr. MALLORY. On behalf of the minority of the Committee of Patents, I submit in writing the views of that minority in opposition to certain features of the bill (S. 8190) to consolidate and revise the acts respecting copyrights, and I ask that the views of the minority be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

S. W. PEEL.

Mr. CLAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19930) referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill. Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the bill had better not be considered at this time

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let me inquire if that rule is to be applied to all bills or if it is to be applied simply to this one?

Mr. SPOONER. I rose not for the purpose of objecting to the bill, but for the purpose of inquiring of the Senator what rate of interest the bill carries.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The rate of interest mentioned in

If it is not mentioned, it will not carry any interest. the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is not mentioned?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then it will carry none.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill requires the payment of interest. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let the Secretary read that particular provision of the bill, so that we may know about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary, without objection, will read the provision, at the request of the Senator from Ar-

The Secretary read as follows:

And in case the said court finds any sum or amount due the claimant for his services and disbursements as aforesaid, it shall thereupon direct the same to be paid with interest from the funds of said nation now in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If there is no interest found due, of course it will render that part nugatory.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator would not fix the rate in the bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; I do not care anything about it.

Mr. SPOONER. Then that clause ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is no objection to the The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes to the Calendar. There is no objection to that.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island if that rule is to be applied to all bills or to this particular bill? Does the objection arise from some provision of this bill or is it to be the rule not to consider any bills under unanimous consent from now on?

Mr. ALDRICH. I never heard of the bill until it was read at the desk. It seems to be a bill to provide for sending a case to the Court of Claims in which the United States is not a party and apparently has no interest except perhaps in some kind of relation which it may have toward the Indian tribe. It provides also for the payment of interest on a claim. I do not know anything about the amount. It has never been customary for the United States, when the Government has any interest in the matter or any control over it, to pay interest on claims.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That matter can be satisfactorily

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know anything about the amount involved. It seems to me that it is too important a bill to be disposed of in this way. Therefore I interposed an objection, and substitute therefor smaller allotments of irrigable land, and which I presume I had a right to do, and it had no reference to any other bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I suppose the Senator over-looked the fact that the matter has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and favorably reported by that committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not. I understood that it was reported from that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind Senators that the debate is proceeding entirely by unanimous consent. The bill goes to the Calendar.

In some way the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds instead, and improperly referred. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. BILLS INTRODUCED.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1907.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Chair if it is not true that the resolu-tion which I introduced yesterday, and which went over on ob-jection, should come up this morning as part of the morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] on a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, submitted by Mr. CLAY on the 6th instant, as follows:

on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following:

A statement of the amount of money expended by the United States for equipment, supplies, and military operations in the Philippine Islands each year from July 1, 1902, to the present time. Said statement to include the amount of money paid by the United States for and on account of railway transportation for troops to and from the Philippine Islands since July 1, 1902, and the several railway companies to which it was paid and the sums paid each of them. Said statement to include a full and complete account of all our expenditures in the Philippine Islands since July 1, 1902, up to the present time.

The Secretary is also directed to inform the Senate the number of United States soldiers now stationed in the Philippine Islands, and how long, in his judgment, it will be necessary for the United States to maintain an army in the Philippine Islands, and what number of soldiers will be required to maintain law and order in said islands, and what will probably be our annual expenditures in maintaining such army in said islands.

He is also directed to inform the Senate what progress, if any, has been made by the people of the Philippine Islands in qualifying them-selves for self-government.

Mr. LODGE. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President. Mr. BURROWS. The resolution was offered yesterday and went over The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution went over yester-

Mr. LODGE. I did not know that when I made the request. Then I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator withdraw his motion for a min-

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the year 1902 a similar resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted by the Senate, and the information then asked for was sent to the Senate. Since 1902 no annual statement appears, so far as the Senate knows, as to our expenditures in the Philippine Islands. I believe that Congress ought to know exactly what is going on in the Philippine Islands. informed that we are spending from forty to fifty million dollars a year, and we ought to know how much our Army and our Navy are costing us every year in the Philippine Islands. Congress ought to be informed as to all of our expenditures in those islands. It is extremely difficult, Mr. President, to ascertain how much our Army expenses have been increased by reason of the retention of those islands, and how much our naval expenditures have been increased on that account.

As I have said, there was no objection to the adoption of a similar resolution in 1902, and I feel sure that if this resolution shall go to the committee, in all probability we will not be able to get any action upon it during the present session of

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

Mr. CLAY. I sincerely hope that my friend the Senator from Massachusetts will allow this resolution to be adopted either to-day or to-morrow, or at some other early day in the

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, all the expenditures about which the Senator speaks are published now. This resolution calls for merely additional work on the part of the Department, as understand the resolution from hearing it read. everything is in print that can have any bearing upon the matter at all, and I think the resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on the Philippines before we agree to it. The commiftee should have an opportunity to look into the question and see whether there is any need of such an inquiry and whether the information can not be obtained in the document room, the reports having already been printed.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, this information ought to be forwarded to the Senate in tabulated form, in order that the Senate may have it printed as a document and in order that the country may know exactly what we are doing in the Philippine Islands, and what progress we are making in those islands in regard to the civilization of those people and preparing them for self-government.

Mr. LODGÉ. That information is reported in full every year by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that, Mr. President, but if you go over the report of the Secretary of War, involving many hundreds of pages, you will find it almost impossible to obtain the exact information in a form in which it can be sent to the If this information can be furnished to the Senate, itemized in short form and presented to the country, then the country will know exactly what we are doing in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, the Philippine Commission reports fully and elaborately on everything in the islands, and that report is a public document before Congress for distribu-—a report made annually. Nothing more can be added to All the information is in the report of the Philippine Commission and the report of the Secretary of War, and the expenses are all to be found stated in their proper places in those reports. Our expenditures and the expenditures made by the Philippine government are all returned in the reports, and every particle of this information is before us.

As to the general condition of the people there, a report is sent in every year by the Philippine Commission.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. SPOONER. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Georgia to allow this resolution to go over until to-morrow.

I am willing to do that; but I first want to say Mr. CLAY. a word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe]. Mr. SPOONER. That might go over with it. If the Senator will permit me, I think there are one of two items of information called for by the resolution of the Senator which ought to be eliminated from it on two or three grounds. The general scope of the resolution, so far as I am concerned, I do not care anything about; but there are matters which ought not to be discussed here, and if the Senator will allow the resolution to go over until to-morrow I should think perhaps he might conclude to modify it in that regard.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to the resolution going over, but I should like it to go over without losing its place.

I want to say, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. that I am exceedingly anxious to ascertain how much of our naval expenditures can be chargeable to the Philippine Islands. We are spending $100,000,000 a year for the purpose of maintaining a navy; and I want to ascertain, if I can, how much of those expenses can be charged to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-Mr. CLAY. Just one moment. I believe last year we spent nearly $100,000,000 for the purposes of war, and the Army appropriation bill of this year will carry about $82,000,000. want to ascertain, if I can, how much of this expenditure can be charged to the Philippine Islands. It is a very difficult task to find out exactly how much we are spending in the Philippines and how much more the Navy costs by reason of the retention of those islands. By critical examination of the report of the Philippine Commission it is impossible to secure the information which I desire. I am perfectly willing, however, that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow.

Now I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Rhode Island

[Mr. ALDRICH]

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia says he wants to know how much more is the present cost of the Navy than it would be if we did not have the Philippine Islands. is to determine that? Whose opinion does the Senator from Georgia propose to ask on that subject—the opinion of the Sectary of War or that of the Philippine Commission, or whose?

Mr. CLAY. The Philippine Commission is really under the Secretary of War. I propose to ask the Secretary of War to give us an estimate of how much of the expenses of the War Department can be chargeable to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. ALDRICH. How about the expenditures of the Navy Mr. CLAY. That I propose to find out by another resolution asking the Secretary of the Navy to inform the Senate how much of the naval expenditures can be chargeable to the Philippine Islands. It is exceedingly important that the American people should know what is going on in our possession 8,000 miles away from us, how much money we are expending there, how much we may have to expend in the future, and the exact situation in those islands.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia, of course, desires some accurate information upon this subject, and he is asking about a subject upon which accurate information can not be furnished by anybody. It is purely a matter of opinion. The Secretary of War can give no better information as to the increased cost of the Navy on account of the possession of the Philippines than can the Senator from Georgia himself, and his opinion would be worth no more to the American people than would the opinion of that distinguished Senator. The Senator could make a statement here on the floor that would have all the force and authority that any other man's opinion would have as to what would be the cost outside the actual expenditures for the Army in the Philippines and the cost of transportation. The discussion here shows very clearly that the resolution ought to be referred to some committee to be considered, in order that we may ask for positive and accurate information on subjects on which such information is obtainable, and not pass a resolution asking for the opinion of people on subjects on which they have no right to express an opinion.

Mr. President, it is inconceivable to me that the Secretary of the Navy could not give a correct idea as to how much money we are spending on account of our Navy in the Philippine Islands, and I am sure that the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken in his statement.

Mr. President, I have never known a resolution of this kind heretofore referred to any committee; and the Senator will find that a resolution exactly like this was heretofore introduced and unanimously adopted by this Senate, and the Senator from Rhode Island did not then object to it.

I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate this morning, for I know that time is precious to the Senate, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] is anxious that the Indian appropriation bill shall be proceeded with. I am willing, therefore, that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie over.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I had given notice that today immediately after the conclusion of the morning business I would address the Senate on Senate resolution 183. however, the wish of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] in reference to the Indian appropriation bill and his desire to make progress with it. I am informed by that Senator that the bill will probably be concluded to-day. I therefore transfer my notice to to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 22580, making appropriations for the Indian Department, etc.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I would not consume the very valuable time of the Senate now by further discussion of the pending amendment except for the fact that it is one of the important questions before the Senate. I do not say it is "the most important," for that would be an exaggeration; but it is a question of high moment, and I feel that as a minority member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I ought to say something regarding it.

The fundamental question here is, Whether the Congress has power to change the title under which allottees in the Indian Territory hold their land by imposing new or additional re-strictions upon the right of alienation. In order to arrive at a correct conclusion as to that Senators ought to understand the exact status. They ought to be familiar with the legislation heretofore enacted affecting the relation of the United States to these tribes and the legislation under which they hold

By an act of Congress, indeed by several acts so far as these Indians are concerned, citizenship was conferred upon the peo-ple belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes—citizenship in all its amplitude and with all the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by any and all citizens of the United States, and they are in the full enjoyment of those dignities, privileges, and pre rogatives now. After this was done—this was in 1902—ar agreement was entered into between the Indians of these tribes and the Government of the United States concerning the disposition of their lands. There had been previous agreements of recent date—in 1898, for instance—which had been ratified by the tribes and by Congress and which, by virtue of the action of Congress, had become laws of the United States. But all former agreements and laws were finally merged into the agreement of 1902.

Under the agreement or act of 1902 it was provided, among other things, that the Indians of these tribes should take their For a long time they had been held as lands in severalty. tribal or communal property. The Indians agreed to take the lands in severalty and have them allotted. A certain part of each allotment was to be set aside as a homestead; the remainder was to be what was designated as surplus land. Restrictions upon the right of alienating these lands, whether home-steads or surplus lands, were imposed by the terms of these agreements, which were afterwards passed into the form of law by the act of Congress. All homesteads were made in-alienable during the life of allottees or for twenty-one years. As to the alienation of surplus lands, different restrictions were imposed on the lands of different tribes

As to the Cherokees it was provided that they might alienate their surplus lands-lands outside of their homesteads-five years from the date of their allotments; the Creeks in five years from the approval of the agreement of 1902—that is, on June 30, 1902. The Seminoles by act of July 1, 1898, were authorized to receive their patents and convey their lands when their tribal government was dissolved, and it was provided that that tribal government should be dissolved March 4, 1906.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws were authorized to sell onefourth of their surplus lands in one year after the issuance of the patents, one-fourth in three years, and the remainder in five years after the same date.

Mr. President, these restrictions up to 1904 applied to all allottees, whites and freedmen, as well as to citizens of Indian blood. But by an act of Congress passed April 21, 1904, restrictions upon the alienation of allotments to white intermarried citizens and freedmen were removed, except as to their homesteads. In 1904 that privilege was granted the whites and the freedmen of the Territory. But no change was made respecting the restrictions resting on the allotments of Indian So far as those restrictions were concerned, they remained as they were fixed by the act of 1902, under which the allotments were made.

It was further provided in the act of 1902 and in previous laws and agreements that the tribal governments and tribal re-lations existing in these several nations should be dissolved and that the Indians should be citizens of the United States. Their tribal governments have been, for all practical purposes, dissolved, substantially dissolved, in pursuance of the agreements If they exist at all it is only in a nominal sense. are exercising no authority, no governmental function. If they exist at all, it is chiefly so by virtue of the resolution adopted by Congress last session continuing the tribal relations for the sole purpose of preventing the Missouri, Kansas and Texas land grant becoming effective. They are practically dissolved.

So the matter stood up to 1906. On April 26, 1906, a provision was inserted in the act relating to the Five Civilized Tribes under which it was provided that restrictions on the alienation of any land belonging to Indians of full blood in the Indian Territory should be extended for a period of twenty-five years.

Mr. President, under this provision, if a valid law, all lands allotted to full-blood Indian citizens, whether homesteads or surplus lands, are made inalienable for twenty-five years. This, of course, is a radical change of the former law under which the allotments were made and received. In the Five Tribes there are somewhere between 18,000 and 24,000 full bloods, the exact number not being definitely known. There are in these tribes between 80,000 and 90,000 people of Indian blood all told, both mixed and full bloods, and of these about one-fourth are full bloods and three-fourths mixed bloods. So it follows that about one-fourth of the Indians and one-fourth of the land belonging to them are affected by this provision of the law of April 26, 1906.

Mr. President, at the time this provision was proposed I said that I did not believe that it was constitutional, and I still adhere to that view. While Congress might remove restrictions on the alienation of lands owned by these Indians, I did not be-lieve and do not now believe that Congress could impose new or additional restrictions of this kind on property held and owned by these Indians in severalty and in fee, they being citizens of the United States, having all the privileges and immunities of other citizens by the very terms of the law. These Indians of the Five Tribes held their respective lands for many years in com-mon as tribal or communal property. As I have already stated-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STONE. Certainly. Mr. CLAPP. I suggest I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he incorporate right here, for the sake of plainness, the additional statement that they held those lands absolutely in fee. Perhaps the Senator was going to do it.

Mr. STONE. I was about to make substantially that statement. They did have a very excellent title as tribes to this communal property, both as a matter of morals and good faith as well as a matter of law.

Take the Choctaws and Chickasaws for example. For long years these tribes held, occupied, and owned large areas of land east of the Mississippi River. They surrendered those lands to the Government of the United States and went over to what is now known as the Indian Territory, and there took possession of certain lands which the Government conveyed to them by a patent deed, or patent deeds, in exchange for the lands they surrendered in Mississippi and Tennessee. Under that deed and under the solemn compact and treaty which they made with our Government they were entitled to occupy and hold that territory as long as they existed as tribes. For seventy years, covering two generations, these Indians have lived on those lands, having and maintaining local tribal governments, with gover-nors or head chiefs, with legislative assemblies and judicial They were engaged in numerous useful and profitable industries; for the most part, of course, in agriculture, and had churches, schools, and whatever betokens civilized communities.

Some ten years ago the Government adopted the policy of inducing the Indians of these Five Tribes to dissolve their tribal governments and tribal relations and to have their property partitioned and allotted to the members of the tribes in severalty. Conferences looking to this end were held between representatives of the Government and representatives of the several tribes, and agreements were reached under which these Indians consented to the proposal of the Government.

Under the very terms of those agreements, written in plain English and afterwards ratified by the Government and the tribes, so that the agreements were crystallized into the statute law of the nation, the lands were allotted in severalty. It was provided in the agreements and the law that the freedmen, former slaves of these Indians, and their descendants, should each be given 40 acres of land, and that the remainder of the land held by the several tribes should be allotted in equal parts to the members of the tribes respectively, men, women, and children; and it was provided that a certain amount of each allotment should be selected and designated as the homestead of the allottee, and that the remainder should be held as surplus lands.

The number of acres constituting a homestead differs in different tribes, that being regulated by the agreement made by each tribe with the Government. There was necessarily a difference in the acreage covered by the homesteads in the different tribes, because of the fact that there was a large difference in the areas owned by the different tribes, and the number of persons in the several tribes also differed largely

It was provided in the agreements and the law that the homestead of all allottees should be inalienable for a long period of time, I believe in every instance during the life of the allottee, with the exception in some cases that it should not extend beyond twenty-one years from the date of the patent; and restrictions upon the sale of the surplus lands were imposed for short periods, differing in the several tribes, as already shown. After the expiration of these periods the surplus lands were to be open for sale.

Under these agreements and laws lands have been allotted and large numbers of patents to allottees have been issued and delivered. All this work of allotting was practically completed long ago. The lands are held and occupied in severalty and in fee simple, subject only to the restrictions imposed by the law under which the allotments were made and the patents

Mr. President, in this state of the case could the Congress step in and impose new or additional limitations upon the title of those people, or what is the same thing in effect, enlarge and extend the restrictions imposed at the beginning, and which were a part of the original agreement and law? I do not believe that that lies within the constitutional power of the Congress, or that the power to do any such thing is vested in this or any other legislative body under our form and theory of government.

I do not deny that the restrictions on alienation imposed at the time the Indians agreed to adopt the allotment policy of the Government, and which existed at the time the allotments were made, will run with the land. I do not deny that such restrictions are valid and enforceable. But to assert that after these agreements were made and enacted into law, and after the allotments were made to the Indians and rights and titles had become vested in the allottees, the Government could then deal with these Indians as if this were trust property, still held by the Government and over which the Government might still exercise a plenary power and control, so as to change the very title under which the allottees received their land, is to assert something I believe to be absolutely unsound. If we can extend restrictions on alienation from the very day the old restrictions ended to a further period of twenty-five years, then we could pass a law prohibiting alienation forever. I do not believe that any such law could be upheld. It would be a remarkable and dangerous rule to establish. Restrictions laid upon alienation at the time the selection of allotments was made may stand, but that is the end of it.

Mr. President, if a man enters a homestead on the public domain or preempts land, as might have been done under former laws, there were and are restrictions imposed by law upon his right to dispose of the homestead or preemption or whatever the claim may have been. There were certain things the homesteader or the preemptor was obliged to do, and there were certain limitations as to time. These had to be complied with before an alienable title was vested. Would it be maintained that after a citizen had taken a homestead or made a preemption Congress could divest him of his title by new legislation or impose additional restrictions upon the title so as to destroy or impair its value? The two cases are not wholly analagous, but the one does serve to illustrate the other.

These Indians are as much citizens of the United States as any homesteader on the public domain. They gave up and surrendered rights and privileges dear to them and valuable to them, and in pursuance of a solemn agreement made with the Government of the United States, which agreement was crystallized into a statute law of the United States, took their lands in severalty upon terms well understood, and subject to fixed limitations and restrictions. I can not agree to the proposition that the Government can now change the title by which these Indians hold their estates. I have read the Heff case, the Rickert case, the Lone Wolf case, and the others that have been cited, and I feel absolutely confident that there is nothing in any of those cases that will warrant or support the contention which is here made that these allotments are still so far under the jurisdiction of the United States that the Congress may deal with them as it pleases. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long] demonstrated that on yesterday in his discussion of these adjudicated cases. For the most part they are wholly inapplicable to the present consideration

Mr. CLAPP. Will it disturb the Senator if I make a sugges-

Mr. STONE. No. Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Lone Wolf case was the earliest case, and as far back as the Lone | Mr. President, it is said this law was intended to protect Wolf case the court expressly safeguarded against the sugges- | the improvident. No doubt it was so intended, and it may have tion of interfering where the title had finally passed to an Indian individual?

Mr. STONE. That is true.

Mr. President, the Lone Wolf case and the others, for the most part I say, are inapplicable to this consideration, but so far as they are applicable without exception they tend to support the view that Congress can not extend the restrictions as was done by the act of 1906. Even the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], who is leading this fight on the other side as a matter of sentiment—a sentiment that does more credit to his heart, if I may say it, than to his judgment-concedes that much. If we can enlarge the original restrictions, now in some instances already expired, and prohibit the alienation of these lands forever, why could we not with equal right repeal the act of 1904, which removed restrictions on the lands of intermarried white citizens of the tribes, and impose restrictions on those lands at our pleasure?

The junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] said we could not do that because the Government by removing the restrictions on the lands of white citizens lost jurisdiction over them, but that it has not lost jurisdiction over the lands of Indian citizens because we acted and assumed to extend restrictions before those already existing had expired. There might be something more in this contention if it were true-

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STONE. I do. Mr. CURTIS. I am afraid the Senator from Missouri did not quote me correctly. I stated that we lost jurisdiction over the intermarried whites and freedmen, because when we removed the restrictions the removal applied immediately. soon as the bill became a law the restrictions were removed. So far as the Indian is concerned, we did not remove the re-strictions, but we held control of the land for five years, we will say, in the Cherokee and Creek nations. Now, my contention is that at any time within the five years we, being the guardian of the Indian, have the right to extend that period, if we think it to be for the best interest of the Indian, no outside rights having been attached.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Kansas evidently did not follow me in what I said, for I said exactly what he has said, at least in substance.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I beg the Senator's pardon. I must have misunderstood him.

Mr. STONE. I was remarking when interrupted that there might be more in the contention made by the Senator from Kansas if it were true that the lands of these Indians were held by the Government in trust and that the relation of guardian and ward still existed. But that is not true. Most certainly the Government has no jurisdiction as a guardian over the person of these Indians any more than it has over the person of white. citizens of the tribe. It can not control the movements of the Indian citizen any more than it can of the white citizen. the allotments were made the Government did not hold the lands. of Indians, whites, or freedmen in trust. On the contrary, a fee-simple title under the very terms of the law was vested in If after this fee-simple title was vested in the allottees, and if within an hour before the expiration of the three or five year restriction on the right of alienation the Congress could so far change the title of these Indian citizens to their lands as to prohibit them from alienating it at all at any time in the future—and it could prohibit forever if it could for twenty-five years—it would seem to me that with equal right the Congress might reassert jurisdiction and control over the lands of the whites and the freedmen; and yet to attempt to do that would be admittedly absurd.

So, Mr. President, it seems perfectly clear to me that the Government holds no such interest in these lands, as trustee or otherwise, as gives to it the right to direct their disposition beyond the conditions and limitations imposed when the allotments were made and accepted.

But, Mr. President, after this question of law comes the question of policy. As the matter now stands, under the law of last year the title to all these Indian lands is clouded and the value of the lands thereby lessened, although sales are being constantly made.

If the provision of law known as the "McCumber amendment" is not a valid provision, if it will not stand the test of the courts. and if lands are being sold in spite of it under clouded titles and at depreciated valuations, every day it remains upon the statutes of the country it is a source of immeasurable detriment to the people it was intended to benefit.

that effect to a limited extent. But while you are protecting the improvident you are doing harm to an equal or greater number who are just as much entitled to your consideration.

There are between 80,000 and 90,000 Indians belonging to these tribes in the Territory, and of these between 18,000 and 20,000 are full bloods. If it were possible to separate the incompetent from the competent, and if it were constitutionally permissible, it might be a wise and humane exercise of power to deny to those who are incompetent the right of alienating any part of their lands.

I am in sympathy with the wish and purpose of the Senator from North Dakota. It is a humane purpose, and it challenges the respect and sympathy of every man. The poor and ignorant, whether in the Indian Territory or elsewhere, appeal to us. This class is not confined to Indians or the Indian Territory. I venture to say, and I do not believe it will be denied, that relatively there are no more incompetent, ignorant people among the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes than can be found in the Territory of New Mexico and in other States and Terri-

To protect these people against themselves, so that they may not become paupers and be sent adrift without a penny and with out any employment, ignorant and helpless, the imposition of these restrictions is urged. It is all based on sentiment and conjecture. Why, Mr. President, these people could not become paupers. If this committee amendment should be adopted, and if under it they should sell all their surplus lands, they would still have their inalienable homesteads; and the homesteads represent at least one-half of their land possessions. With the proceeds of the sale of their surplus lands they could improve their homesteads and greatly improve their condition; but even if they wasted the surplus lands, they would still be far from paupers or from suffering. The homesteads would be secure to them for life.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is in error when he states that in any number of these homesteads the restriction is only limited to the lifetime of the holder. I believe in every instance they do not run beyond twenty-one years, and those twenty-one years have already run to the extent of from one to five or six years.

Mr. STONE. In the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations the provision is that the homestead shall not be sold during the lifetime of the allottee or homesteader, not to exceed twenty-one

Mr. SPOONER. That makes the limit twenty-one years.

Mr. STONE. It does make it twenty-one years.

Mr. SPOONER. If he lives.
Mr. STONE. Twenty-one years if he lives. Mr. SPOONER. If he dies, it is shorter.

Mr. STONE. But with the other tribes my remembrance is that the homestead is for life. I may be mistaken, but I think But a homestead for twenty-one years, with from sixteen to twenty years still remaining, ought certainly to be enough to give assurance that there is no danger of that want and suffering my friend from North Dakota seems to dread so much.

Now, the area of land held by the homesteads is equal to the area covered by the surplus. So, I say, if these Indians should dispose of their surplus lands and improvidently waste the proceeds of the sales, they would still have their munificent homesteads, which they could not alienate or encumber.

Mr. DEPEW. For fifteen years? Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Dakota says from sixteen to twenty years.
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bulkeley in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STONE. Certainly. Mr. CURTIS. The agreement says "not exceeding twentyone years from the date of the certificate of allotment," and those certificates

Mr. STONE. What tribe is that? Mr. CURTIS. The Cherokees; and that was substantially the provision in each of the agreements, except with the Sem-

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator read that provision, with the permission of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STONE. Certainly. Mr. CURTIS. Section 13 of the act of July 1, 1902, is as follows:

Each member of said tribe shall, at the time of the selection of his allotment, designate as a homestead out of said allotment land equal in value to 40 acres of the average allottable lands of the Cherokee Nation, as nearly as may be, which shall be inalienable during the life-time of the allottee, not exceeding twenty-one years from the date of the certificate of allotment. Separate certificate shall issue for said homestead. During the time said homestead is held by the allottee the same shall be nontaxable and shall not be liable for any debt con-tracted by the owner thereof while so held by him.

It is not limited to twenty-one years, as I thought it was. Mr. STONE. Suppose all homesteads were limited to twentyone years. In the name of common sense would you want to a greater privilege to any man enjoying the rights and dignities of American citizenship than to give him his home-stead for twenty-one years free from all taxation? If these people can ever learn to care for themselves, they can certainly do it in twenty-one years. In the course of nature not many of the older class will be living twenty-one years from now. is reasonable to say that the greater number of the older full bloods who have taken these homesteads will be gathered to their fathers before the twenty-one years have ended; and if the younger ones who have nontaxable homesteads, the boys and girls who are now children, have twenty-one years of schools in a populous State with a wise Government, and with the activities of a splendid civilization all around them, can not be sufficiently advanced in the industrial arts to live, then their case is simply hopeless. Mr. President, Oklahoma is about to be admitted as a State. Half the land of this great empire known as Indian Territory, which constitutes half the State, is held as homesteads, made inalienable for many years, and exempted from taxation; and the proposition here is, by those who oppose this amendment, to make a large part if not the whole of the other half of that empire inalienable for twenty-five years—a quarter of a century—so that no homes can be acquired by honest settlers, and thus block the progress and development of one of the greatest States ever born into the Union.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri kindly suspend? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 26, Senate resolution No. 214, by Mr. Carter. "That a duly qualified entryman is entitled to a patent for land," etc.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

from Missouri will proceed. Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri, I desire to ask him, purely for information, whether he understands that the effect of this amendment will in any manner interfere with the allotment, or does it simply restrict the power of alienation?

Mr. STONE. It does not interfere with the allotment.

Mr. BACON. The Indians would still have their allotments? Mr. STONE. Oh, yes. The Senator is speaking of the committee amendment?

I am speaking of the amendment the Senator Mr. BACON. is now discussing. Is there any other amendment which in any manner proposes to interfere with allotments?

Mr. STONE. No amendment. This amendment would simply remove

Mr. BACON. The power of final alienation.

Mr. STONE. After July 1 next all restrictions on the alienation of the surplus land of allottees would be removed, the restriction still continuing on the homesteads.

Mr. BACON. If the restriction continues, will that operate in any manner to interfere with the allotment, or does it affect anything except the power of final alienation?

Mr. STONE. No; it does not affect the allotments. allotments have been made already, and the title vested in the allottees

It does not restrain or interfere with the Mr. BACON. right of the Indian to lease his land in any way or make any disposition of it other than a final disposition?

Mr. STONE. It does not, except that he can not encumber or in any wise dispose of it now. The land of an Indian is simply locked up under the present law.

Mr. BACON. He can lease it. Mr. STONE. He can lease it, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLAPP. The full bloods can not.

Mr. STONE. No; but the mixed bloods can.
Now, Mr. President, I am about through. Some letters were read here yesterday from prominent members of the Creek tribe. Among the writers was General Porter, who is the titular head of that tribe, if they have such an official at this time. I know General Porter. He is a very estimable gentleman, prominent in the public affairs of his people and of the Indian Territory.

He is being prominently mentioned, and with a good deal of favor, as a possible representative in this body of the new State of Oklahoma. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] said yesterday in the debate that this distinguished son of the Creek Nation is the fortunate possessor of something like 100 improved

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kean in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If I did not state at that time I meant to be understood as referring to the time when the Indians held all this land in common. Of course, when it was allotted General Porter could only take his allotment as prescribed by law, surrendering the balance of it.

Mr. STONE. At all events, I am of opinion that these gentlemen believe that their lands would be exempt from taxation under the State government, and they believe it with some good reason, if the law remains as it is under the act of 1906. If these restrictions are removed and the lands opened to sale there can be no question then but that they will be subject to taxation, and they ought to be.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Missouri pardon a question?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.
Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that in 1906 Congress could pass a law which would carry into a State and challenge the sovereignty of a State as to its taxing power and exempt lands from taxation the title to which the United States had absolutely parted with fifty years before, as it did in the case of these lands?
Mr. STONE. I do not.
Mr. CLAPP. No; I presume not.
Mr. SPOONER. Suppose they were exempted before it becomes a State?

Mr. CLAPP. Exempted by whom?

Mr. SPOONER. By Congress.

Mr. CLAPP. That is just the gist of my inquiry. Can Congress, as to lands to which the Government has parted with the title fifty years ago, to which it retains to-day no shadow of title, now, in 1906, before the State is admitted, pass a law regarding those lands which will carry the exemption from taxation of those lands into a State after the State is organized?

Mr. McCUMBER. May I interject a question right there to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; if the Senator from Missouri is will-

Mr. STONE. Certainly. Mr. McCUMBER. If Congress has no title whatever in the land, then could Congress make any restriction whatever if it parted with its title fifty years ago? If the one is illegal is not the very restriction that we have made illegal on the ground that Congress had no ownership in the property?

Mr. CLAPP. Except for one thing, that as to these lands in 1902 the Indians who owned the fee, because it was a fee title they got fifty years ago, consented to Congress passing a law, not for the creation of trust deeds, but an act of Congress under which the restriction would exist. Had it not been for that I undertake to say as a lawyer that the restriction as to those lands would not be worth the paper it was written on.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me— Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not just now care for that discussion. For the present purpose it is immaterial whether the lands are or are not taxable or would or would not be taxable under existing law when the State of Oklahoma is admitted; that does not specially affect the point to which I But the gentlemen who are assuming to am now adverting. speak, no doubt with authority, for the Creek Indians (I say neither "yea" nor "nay" as to that, for I do not know) are undoubtedly of the opinion, which prevails there, that if the restrictions are not removed and if the law remains as it was enacted last year the lands will not be subject to taxation, and that they can live in the State, be citizens of it, enjoy all its benefits, be eligible to its offices, become governor, Congressman, Senator, make laws, and execute laws, and yet pay not a farthing for the support of the Commonwealth-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to say in this connection that that particular feature was especially brought out during the visit of the committee to the Indian Territory at every meeting that they held. With the vast majority of the full bloods, as well as the mixed bloods, who were opposed to the removal of restrictions the one ground of their opposition to that policy was that it would bring their land thus released under taxation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have not any doubt that there is a "nigger in the wood pile," and that considerations of this kind are influencing the activity of these distinguished representatives of the Creeks here in making their eloquent protests. Here is my friend, and he is my friend, General Porter, a splendid man, capable of representing his State anywhere, a man with a fine history and fine character. It would be a great thing for him and his people if they could live in the State of Oklahoma, enjoy all the benefits of its government, be eligible to any of the honors within the gift of its people, participating in the conduct of the public affairs of the Commonwealth, and yet be exempt from every burden of the government. No wonder they protest. Indeed, they do protest too much. There is good reason for their course.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I want to say that I do not believe that the progress of the State of Oklahoma ought to be blocked by putting unnecessary obstacles in its pathway. owe something to the people who are to go there and who have gone there to live by our permission and invitation to build up a great Commonwealth. We owe something to them as well as to a comparatively few ignorant, unfortunate Indians, pitiful remnants of these ancient tribes. God knows, I pity them as much as anyone, and I would do nothing to harm them; but it does seem to me that it is enough, under the conditions and circumstances confronting us, if we assure their homesteads to them for life-homesteads adequate for their support, being never less than 40 acres to every man, woman, and child, and in some instances stretching out into great baronial estates so far as area goes, amounting even to ten or twelve thousand acres to a family. It seems to me that we keep faith and do justice when we do that.

Mr. SPOONER. Ten or twelve thousand acres?

Mr. STONE, Yes; in some instances. The Choctaws and Chickasaws have an average homestead of 320 acres, and it may run up to several times that amount, depending upon the character and value of the lands; and it may fall below 320 acres. It depends upon the value of the land. But whether one or two or more constitute the family there is a homestead for each, and the larger the family the larger is the aggregate amount of the family homestead possession. These homesteads represent, as I have said, one-half the total area of the Territory-inalienable for years and years to come and nontaxable.

Mr. President, it seems to me that when we give to these people this much we do them no harm; we are not unjust; we are not unmindful of duty, and we subject them to no unnecessary danger by giving to them the power and right to sell the other half of their lands to settlers, who go in there to live and strive among them. The people who go there are not grafters or thieves, but for the most part they are excellent and worthy people, who have gone there from all our States. To be sure, there may be speculators, grafters if you wish it so, in the Indian Territory as there are elsewhere, who seek to take advantage and to amass dishonestly; but such men constitute the exception and not the rule in the population.

The white men and women who have gone to the Indian Territory to live are as intelligent, as worthy, as patriotic, and as honest as the average run of citizens in any of the States, and nobody familiar with them and with the condition there controvert that statement. The Senator from Connecticut, whom I see before me [Mr. Brandegee], went down there from New England as a member of this special committee, went over the Territory, which was new and strange to him, and he comes back here to give his testimony as to the high character, as a rule, of the people residing there.

I believe, Mr. President, that if moral, worthy, intelligent, industrious men and women take homes among these Indians and give to them, by their example, lessons of industry, economy, and prudence, nothing will do more to civilize and advance them. We could not do anything better calculated to promote the welfare and elevate and civilize the Indian. The best civilizer is contact with civilization.

Mr. President, it seems to me that from every point of view, whether it relates to the right and power of Congress to impose these additional restrictions or relates to the question of policy to be pursued by the Government-whether from the one point or the other we view it-the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to be embodied in the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, those Senators who are seeking by the amendment in this bill to controvert the constitutionality of a law passed by this Congress a year ago have removed from the crown of their argument its most precious jewel, that of consistency. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] bases his assumption upon the broad ground that has been adopted by every Senator who has taken that side of this subject, that we have made citizens of these people, that they hold the same relation to the Government and to the State that any other people in the State hold to the respective sovereignties, and that, therefore, we can make no law regarding their property rights that we could not make in reference to the property rights of any white citizen of any State of the

The weakness of that proposition in this case is this: Senators seek to strike at the constitutionality of a past law by a bill which they themselves acknowledge by their own arguments to be absolutely unconstitutional from top to bottom, every page of which has written and printed upon it the word "unconstitu-This bill in the very first portion of it provides Why? irrigation for these Indians. It imposes upon the white citizen burdens that it fails to impose upon the Indian citizen. It compels the white citizen to pay immediately, while the Secretary of the Interior may protect the red citizen. Thus we have the distinguishing characteristics between those citizens.

I know the Senator from Missouri will say that Congress has no right, and would not have under the Heff case, to make the color of the skin of any citizen the basis of distinct legislation in his favor. I agree with that if we have lost control of that citizen with the peculiar color to his skin. But let us take this proposition: We educate the brown-colored citizen of North Dakota. Does the Senator believe that the Government of the United States can educate the yellow-haired people of North Dakota and exclude from its schools those of darker hair? If they can do that, then they can impose certain conditions and restrictions upon citizens of one class differing from citizens of another class, and thereby impose conditions which they prohibit the State from imposing upon this special class of citizens.

Again, I find by this very bill that it is proposed to provide for a certain sum of money to be paid to judges of Indian courts. Is it possible that any Senator espousing that side of the case will admit that we can provide a court in a State for people having blue eyes and not for those with black eyes? Does the Senator contend that that is constitutional? Yet we are voting for that character of legislation. If one is unconstitutional, Mr. President, every one of these provisions of like character must be unconstitutional.

Again, we are, on every page of this bill, providing for an appropriation of so much money for the support and civilization of the Shoshones, the Kickapoos, the Sioux, the Oneidas, and the other tribes of Indians all over the country. Congress of the United States vote an appropriation for the civilization of citizens based entirely upon their color if there is no other inequality than that of color or previous condition? The Senator who makes the constitutional argument in this case must answer that also in the negative.

So, Mr. President, we can follow through every one of these Here is an appropriation to educate 700 pupils at the Haskell Institute, in the State of Kansas. What right have we to segregate a certain class of the citizens of Kansas and educate them and refuse to open the doors of the school buildings to other citizens? We can not do it if the contention of the Senator from Kansas is correct.

Mr. President, I have not gone so far in my argument against this particular phase of the bill. I admit that it is a serious question whether the courts will hold the McCumber amendment of last year to be constitutional. There are many doubts surrounding it. I only say in support of it that the Supreme Court has never yet decided, nor has any other court, so far as I can learn, decided directly, that we can not, so long as an In-dian tribe exists as a tribe and continues its tribal relations, although it is given the right of citizenship, still increase or extend the limitation upon the power of alienation. That is as far as I need to go in this case; but every case that has been considered has been based upon the theory that these citizens are still wards of the Government. The court declared in the Rickert case that, notwithstanding the fact that we had given full citizenship to the Indians of Roberts County, S. Dak., they were still the wards of the Government. I asked the Senator from Kansas yesterday if he denied that the court which pronounced that sentence had made an error. He would not say whether it had or not. I understand his position, and he bases it exactly as my position upon this other proposition is based, that it is a matter of doubt. Then if it is a matter of doubt, I am going to resolve that doubt in favor of the Indian.

The Senator from Missouri has stated that we have no right to block the progress of the great State of Oklahoma by keeping so much of its territory free from taxation; that we owe to the citizens of the new State that we give them the opportunity to raise on all the lands alike the necessary funds to conduct their government. I can answer the Senator from Missouri with the simple proposition that we should not under any circumstances accelerate the progress of the State of Oklahoma by the sacrifice of our Indian population. I know, and every Senator, I believe, knows, that the removal of restrictions would absolutely destroy the Indian; and to the extent that we remove them just to that extent have we committed an irreparable injury against them.

It is more than a mere matter of sentiment with me. It is a matter of eternal justice. I for one can not look upon the fastdisappearing tribes of Indians, who once owned this country as much as any people on the face of the earth ever owned any country, being driven out of it, paupers and vagabonds, without an atom of sympathy on the part of the great American people who have robbed them of their ancient heritage.

I want to protect every full-blooded Indian just as long as the Government can possibly protect him, and when the limita-tions have expired, when the white man will be in possession of the last acre of his property in the United States, I want him to have a little fund sufficient to buy a home at some other place in the universe, where he may live as long as God Almighty will allow him to live, as an Indian, and where he will not be compelled to live the life of a white man, which means the death of the red man. There is no other sentiment that I have upon this case than that.

So, Mr. President, I submit this matter, so far as I am concerned, with the single proposition that we are not in a position to challenge any other law upon the ground of con-stitutionality while the very bill that challenges it is loaded from top to bottom with unconstitutional items upon the same basis and for the same reason that we would declare the old law unconstitutional.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the Senator from North Dakota takes his seat

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the argument of those in favor of this amendment, it is based mainly upon the ground that the restriction heretofore imposed by the McCumber amendment was illegal, being inconsistent with the previous legislation granting full rights of citizenship without any restriction.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the extended restriction.

Mr. BACON. I understand. Now, what I want to ask—and it is in this case largely to have the views of other Senators, because I do not profess to be familiar with the Indian question—as I understand the amendment of the committee found on pages 34 and 35, it proposes to retain the restriction so far as it applies to homesteads.

If I am incorrect in this, of course Senators will correct me, but it seems to me that the assumption of the power to impose that restriction must necessarily be based upon the legality of the McCumber amendment-

Mr. McCUMBER. It certainly must.

Mr. BACON. Because it is simply carving out of the Mc-Cumber amendment a lesser restriction; in other words, the gument of Senators is that any restriction is illegal.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, it continues the unconstitutional law so far as it affects homesteads and repeals it so far as it affects surplus lands.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me, if the Senator will pardon me a moment—and if I am wrong, the Senator from Minnesota will correct me—to my mind it seems that the committee in proposing that there shall be the restrictions to the extent of the homesteads, necessarily recognizes the legality of the McCumher amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all.
Mr. BACON. I may be in error. I am merely making the suggestion for the purpose of getting information, rather than submitting it as an argument. Having made the suggestion, I will not continue further, but leave it to other Senators to discuss it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever view the Senator may take of it, my view is this: It does not repeal the McCumber amendment, which continued the restriction twenty-five years, except as to surplus lands. If it related to other lands, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the amendment of last year related also to homesteads?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.
Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if it related to homesteads and it continued the restriction on homesteads for a few years at least, say from fifteen to twenty or twenty-five years, that part is not repealed by the provision in this bill, but still continues

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That part was largely reenacted by other laws and agreements with the Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. Except it continued the period of restriction, which was beyond the original agreements and the original

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not very far in the case of homesteads.

Mr. McCUMBER. It continued it for twenty-five years, and none of the others continued it, as I understand, beyond twentyone years from the date of the allotments, and the allotments have been made from time to time for the last five or six years. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No, Mr. President; it is not correct; and the theory upon which the discussion has been going on is to my notion an incorrect one. The proposition of those opposed to this amendment is not altogether based upon the ground that all our acts have been unconstitutional in treating with the property of these Indians. I expressly stated in the few remarks that I made yesterday that whether or not we had the power cuts little figure in my mind. I based it upon the ground that we had made certain agreements with the Indians, and the mere fact, if it did exist, that we had the power to break that agreement and impose additional restrictions ought not to be exercised by us according to any rule of good morals or good faith. That was the proposition upon which my argument was based, if I made myself clear in any respect. was not taking into consideration the question as to the power of Congress over these lands; but assuming, for the sake of the argument, that we had the power, I maintained that it was an immoral and an unjust thing to do to exercise that power.

Mr. President, before this point of order is decided, I have few more suggestions that I desire to make, in view of the debate as it progressed yesterday. Some letters were put in the Record by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], and also some letters, without reading, at the close of the discussion by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. I only call the attention of the Senate to the latter letters, because they reflect in some degree upon the work of the special committee in the Indian Territory

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator if he refers to the letters I submitted?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I am speaking only with reference to the latter letters. The letters which the Senator introduced did not so reflect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I read them over and I thought they did If I had thought they did, I certainly should not have submitted them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all; but the letters which were later introduced did, in a measure, reflect upon the work of that committee. I desire to call attention to the letters appearing on pages 2360 and 2361 of the Record. The first is a letter written from Tulsa, Ind. T., December 17, 1906, signed C. H. Cook-undoubtedly a very worthy man, though I am not acquainted with him. He says:

TULSA, IND. T., December 17, 1906.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: If the papers have not misquoted you, you support the Hitchcock policy of continuing supervision over the Indians' lands. I was at South McAlester during the sitting of the Senate committee. The country was ransacked for testimony to decry that policy and to put the friends of the Indians on the defense.

There is a plain intimation that the work of the committee as "packed" with reference to the particular feature and with reference to the particular feature embodied in this amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator is drawing an absolutely unwarranted inference from that sentence of the letter. I do not think it was the intention of the writer to imply that the committee was ransacking the country for testimony. I think the writer of that letter means that there were those interested in presenting to the committee witnesses who would testify in favor of the sale of these lands. I think that is all that was intended by the writer. certainly would not have offered that letter here if I had thought that it implied any desire on the part of the committee to secure partisan testimony.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As a member of that committee I may be unduly sensitive. If I am, it is because the work of that committee has been so fully and completely misrepresented in the public press and in public documents, and certainly when the writer says that on the visit of the committee the country was ransacked for testimony to decry a certain policy, it would | indicate at least that the committee itself who summoned the witnesses before it asked them to come in order to sustain a previously conceived notion as to the legislation which ought to be accomplished. But further on in this same letter, Mr. Presirent, I see this:

I have canvassed this Territory from one end to the other the past month getting information from all sorts and conditions of people, and my conclusion is the wiser ones dreading the coming of statehood, with its implied control of them, with a dread as bitter and relentless as when under the leadership of Boudinot and Ross they fought the right of way concessions for the first roads entering the Territory.

If anybody has been ransacking it for testimony from house to house and through the length and breadth of that Territory in support of a certain declared policy, it seems to me the writer of this letter lays himself liable to that imputation. But further in the letter I imagine the gentleman who wrote it is correcting his statement that he was at South McAlester, because he says:

Rev. J. S. Murrow, who protested so earnestly at the McAlester sitting of the Indian Committee, had less of culture, perhaps, than some of the refined scoundrels who sought to decry his statements.

Mr. President, the only men of the committee at South Mc-Alester who sought to decry the statements of this clergyman were members of that select committee. The only decrying statements made at that sitting at South McAlester to the statement of Rev. J. S. Murrow were made by individual members of that committee of five appointed by this body. "Refined scoundrels!" I am willing to tell the Senate what the statement of the Rev. J. S. Murrow that they found fault with was. De-liberately making the statement before that committee he expressed the opinion that it was the deliberate purpose of the twelve hundred thousand white inhabitants of the magnificent State of Oklahoma to rob the Indians of that land, of their heritage, and of their money.

The chairman of the committee said, "Mr. Murrow, do you make that statement deliberately and do you believe it?" He said, "I make it deliberately and I do believe it." Then the chairman of the committee and others decried his statement; not for one moment would they believe such a statement or accept it as to the whole citizenship of that country. That is the statement of the Rev. J. S. Murrow which was decried, and the only one, and the only people finding fault with that statement were the members of the committee.

Mr. President, I will pass on to another of these communications; and I want the Senator from Wisconsin not to think for one moment that I believe he was conscious of these facts when these letters were introduced. It was quite proper for him to place the letters upon the record, and I am willing they shall remain there, but I am unwilling that they shall remain without some explanation of these most extraordinary statements in the letters. The next letter is from Mr. T. H. Witthome. It is a reasonable and proper letter in the discussion. But the next purports to be a letter written by Carlton Weaver, a member of the constitutional convention now sitting at Guthrie, Okla., with reference to the action or the nonaction of that convention upon this very question of restrictions. I desire to read it, if the Senate will bear with me. It is headed "The convention to form a constitution for the State of Oklahoma." written on the official paper of that convention:

DEAR SIR: Since you have in the past demonstrated an interest in fair play for the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, I take the liberty of sending you a copy of a resolution which was introduced in the constitutional convention last week—

This was written January 25. "Last week" would have brought it to January 18, at the latest-brought it to January 18, at the latest—and which was referred to a committee the chairman of which is not in sympathy with its purpose. It is destined to die there or be reported after it is too late to accomplish the desired result. Please consider same and bear in mind that every citizen of the Indian Territory—except land sharks—is anxious to see Congress fix a just and equitable limitation on the sale of Indian surplus. There is a single firm in the Chickasaw Nation who have 30,000 acres of Indian surplus under lease, who are waiting for the removal of restrictions, when they expect to make a wholesale purchase at insignificant prices. Land monopolies and a hellish system of tenantry will result unless Congress does not prohibit the wholesale purchase by these land companies and grafters. See to this, Senator, and the whole of the Indian Territory citizenship will thank you.

Please hand the additional copy inclosed to the chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs.

I am, very truly,

Carlton Weaver.

I assume that Mr. Weaver is a member of the constitutional

I assume that Mr. Weaver is a member of the constitutional convention; and then follows a copy of a memorial, or what purports to be a memorial. Mr. Weaver was probably ignorant of the fact that the constitutional convention of Oklahoma had already by memorial to this Congress passed on this very question, and before he wrote this letter, ten days before he wrote it, there had been presented in this body a memorial, duly considered and passed by the constitutional convention of the State of Oklahoma, sitting at Guthrie, certified to by the officers of the convention, asking for far greater legislation along the line of the removal of restrictions than is embodied in this amendment. Upon the files of the Indian Committee, referred to it after reading and going into the RECORD here, is the following memorial:

Memorial by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoma concerning removal of restrictions upon Indian lands, introduced by Hon. O. P. Brewer, district 77, on the 8th day of January, A. D. 1907, and adopted by unanimous vote of the convention. MEMORIAL.

MEMORIAL

To the President of the United States and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the representative delegates of the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory in constitutional convention assembled, respectfully request that the restrictions imposed upon the sale and lease of lands allotted to and held by citizens of the United States in the proposed State of Oklahoma, whether of Indian blood or not, full-blood homesteads excepted, be removed without delay, as a necessary means to the development of our State and the development and welfare of our citizens of Indian blood. citizens of Indian blood.

WM. H. MURRAY, President.

Attest:

JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

CERTIFICATE.

I hereby certify that the within memorial was introduced and passed y the constitutional convention on the date and in the manner above

JNO. M. YOUNG, Secretary.

It was passed on the 8th day of January. There could have been no purpose in the writer of this letter, he being a member of the constitutional convention, in forwarding the letter except for the effect it might have upon the Senate of the United States and upon others who are not aware that the convention had acted, and with a view of creating the impression that the convention had not considered this matter and that a memorial had been presented there protesting against such action and that the chairman of the committee or the convention was smothering it in committee

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand what the Senator said. Did the Senator say that the constitutional convention had memorialized Congress for the removal of these restrictions?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The constitutional convention has memorialized Congress. The memorial was sent to me. The memorial was passed by the constitutional convention on the 8th day of January, 1907, was sent to me, and was presented by me on the 16th day of January, 1907, ten days before the letter was dated which comes from the gentleman who, I suppose, is a member of that convention.

I will say that the memorial of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma goes further than the provision reported by the committee, in that the memorial asks that restrictions be removed upon all lands except the full-blood homestead lands. The committee amendment proposes to remove the restrictions only from the surplus lands, whether of full bloods or mixed bloods, retaining the homesteads of the mixed bloods as well as the homesteads of the full bloods.

I wanted to make that explanation, Mr. President, in regard to these matters merely because I felt that the writers of these letters had reflected in a measure upon the work of the committee in the Territory.

I will say, further, that if the writer of the letter was a member of that convention he failed to attempt to impress the convention with his views, because the memorial shows that it was adopted by the unanimous vote of the convention, and in that convention, of course, are Indians from the eastern half of the proposed new State; how many of them I do not know.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, is there a point of order pending against the amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curis] interposed a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A point of order was interposed at a former session.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not take any of the time of the Senate in discussing this matter, if the amendment is to be held by the Chair out of order

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate, under subdivision 2 of Rule XX, the question whether the amendment is in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The proposed amendment is still open to discussion, I understand. I am in order, am I not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is in

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to occupy just a moment in making brief response to the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

by Mr. Cook, I will say that the writer of that letter is a residen of Mondovi, Wis. He has written me occasionally with respect to matters in the Indian Territory, where he has spent a considerable period of time within the last year. I think the Senator from Wyoming has put an entirely forced construction upon that portion of his letter in which he speaks of having traversed up and down the Indian Territory. It is clear that the writer simply uses that form of expression to indicate his thorough acquaintance with the Territory. It does not mean that he was in search of witnesses. Indeed I do not think that Mr. Cook offered his testimony as a witness or that his testimony was taken at all.

I supposed, of course, that the reference made in the letter later to the testimony of Rev. J. S. Murrow and to those who sought to decry his testimony was as to witnesses who presented themselves before the committee. As the testimony has not yet been printed, excepting the committee no one has had opportunity to know what is contained in that testimony.

Now, with reference to the letter from Mr. Weaver, transmitting the memorial introduced in the constitutional convention now in session in Oklahoma. That memorial is not at all in conflict with the one heretofore passed by that convention and presented by the Senator from Wyoming.

The memorial transmitted by Mr. Weaver is one that may well have been introduced in the constitutional convention, after the memorial was passed which the Senator from Wyo-ming has read into the RECORD. The memorial inclosed in the letter from Mr. Weaver and printed in the RECORD immediately following it is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States, to the President, Theodore Roosevelt:

Rooscvett:

Whereas the special Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has recommended the removal of the restrictions upon the alienation of surplus allotments and other lands in the Indian Territory; and Whereas the material interest of all the people of the Indian Territory, as well as the State at large, depends upon a broad and equitable distribution of the landed interest; and Whereas a great amount of said lands are at present controlled by land companies and speculators under an obnoxious lease system; and Whereas unless prohibited by the Congress said land companies and speculators will gain control of a vast amount of Indian lands, which will result in large holdings and land monopolies: Therefore, be it Resolved, That we, the representatives of the people of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, in convention assembled, do respectfully pray that the sale of all said alienated lands be restricted so as to prohibit land or lease monopolies and to permit only natural persons to become purchasers or lessees thereof, and then only of such limited amounts as will guarantee a broad and equitable distribution.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to both Houses of Congress and the President of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Wisconsin

permit me for a moment? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator is entirely correct as to the subject-matter of that memorial, and probably of the letter also, except that, making its appearance on the discussion of this particular amendment, I assumed that it was thought to refer to the removal of restrictions as well as to the sale of the lands afterwards.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it may well have reference to just exactly what is proposed in this amendment. I think that members of this body might well entertain the view that if the restrictions are to be entirely removed there might be added a prevision that this land when purchased should be purchased by natural persons, and, furthermore, that it should be purchased by natural persons in limited areas, thus preventing the land from passing into the hands and under the control of those who would hold in large bodies. That is all I have to say.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the point of order is well taken. To carry out existing law the House incorporated a provision in the bill appropriating money to conduct an investigation which had for its object, as I recollect-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask a question before the Senator from Wisconsin enters upon his discussion. Mr. SPOONER. I shall be but a moment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just what was the point of order made against the amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. I made the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation and repeals existing law. I understand that under the rules of the Senate, after the point of order is made, the matter can be debated generally.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What I wanted to get at is what is the particular and distinct point of order made against the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not make the point of order. I sup-With respect to the letter which I offered last night, signed posed the point of order is that it proposes general legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I beg the Senator's pardon.

That is all right.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I interrupted him for the purpose of asking the Senator from Kansas or the Chair what exactly the point of order is.

Mr. SPOONER. It was entirely agreeable.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am still unaware what it is.
Mr. CURTIS. It is that the amendment proposes general legislation and repeals existing law.

Mr. SPOONER. The provision made by the House was "to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1904, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, $25,000."

That was an act which gave authority to the Secretary of the Interior to remove restrictions where upon investigation he found that the Indians were competent to attend to their own affairs and could without improvidence be intrusted to manage their own affairs and to dispose of their lands, except the homesteads. The amendment proposed by the Senate committee is to strike out the House provision and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

On and after July 1, 1907, all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of the lands, except homesteads, of all allottees of Indian blood in the Indian Territory, and all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of all the lands of allottees not of Indian blood are hereby removed.

It changes absolutely a general law. I will not say absolutely, but it changes it sufficiently, I think, to make the amendment obnoxious to the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words, and only a few words, upon the merits of the proposition, for which I can not I am embarrassed and I suppose other Senators are embarrassed by the fact that it is recommended by a committee whose province it is to investigate these questions, and which has, through a special committee or a subcommittee that visited the Indian Territory for the purpose, made an investigation which leads to this recommendation. The good faith of either the subcommittee or the main committee no one can with propriety or any warrant whatever impugn. I take it for granted that the committee is fully convinced that these restrictions ought all to be removed. But, Mr. President, this is getting along toward the end of Indian legislation, and I have noticed that within the last few years whenever there has been a debate upon the Indian appropriation bill it has been to a considerable extent a confession of former blunders.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. I have for the past ten or twelve years heard similar statements to the one the Senator from Wisconsin has just made in regard to Indian legislation, and each succeeding year brings a larger volume of legislation in regard to the The Senator may see the end of it, but I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. I can see the end of the Indian-Mr. ALDRICH. Well, that may be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If we adopt some of these amend-

And of all Federal protection of the Indian: Mr. SPOONER. and if we have made blunders—and there is no question whatever that colossal blunders have been made, terrific almost in their detriment to the well-being of the Indian-I think we should be particularly careful not to make any more.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the constitutionality of the McCumber amendment. That amendment, as I remember, was passed after pretty full debate in the Senate. It is the law, unless it is unconstitutional. I have very grave doubts about its constitutionality; but this is not the tribunal, really, Mr. President, to determine whether the McCumber amendment is or is not constitutional. I prefer to resolve the doubt, so far as this proposition is concerned, in favor of the constitutionality of the statute; and that is what the Supreme Court will do if it can. That is what all courts do if they can, for courts with reluctance overthrow legislation of Congress upon constitutional They do not do it unless the unconstitutionality is quite clear.

So assuming that it is a constitutional act, ought it to be repealed? I have no doubt that the members of the constitutional convention in Oklahoma are in favor of its repeal. I heard the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] read their memorial, they gave what, from the standpoint of the white man, is always an adequate condition for such a repeal. They do not wish to have the prosperity and development of the new State of Oklahoma retarded by withholding from sale-and therefore from settlement—this body of Indian land. That is natural enough. But an appeal from the constitutional convention of Oklahoma ought not to reach this body with peculiar force in a matter of this kind. When the act was passed admitting Oklahoma into the Union this was the law. Cumber amendment was upon the statute book. We all wanted Oklahoma admitted as a State into the Union—1,200,000 people, millions of acres of arable land, splendid climate, everything which goes to build up a State fit to take her place with the original States. I want to see Oklahoma progress. see her move forward to the place which will rightfully belong to her in the sisterhood of the States. But I think it is the duty of the Senate now not to think of Oklahoma upon this question, not to legislate with reference to the white men of Oklahoma, not with a view to furnishing homes out of Indian lands to white home seekers. I think this legislation ought to be enacted or it ought to be rejected with reference to the interest of the Indians. They have lived there longer than any white men have lived there. They lived there long before the name "Oklahoma" almost was known.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator think that the interests of the white citizens of the State of Oklahoma necessarily are opposed to the interests of the Indian citizens of that State?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not propose to discuss that question. They put it in this memorial, as I heard it read, upon the ground, which is undoubtedly true, that without the removal of these restrictions the development of Oklahoma will be more That is obviously true, but that has nothing or less retarded. whatever to do with the question whether these restrictions should or should not be removed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; but the Senator evades my question.

Mr. SPOONER, I did not intend to.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, I do not think he understood the

Mr. SPOONER. What is the question?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked the Senator whether he assumed that this forward movement in Oklahoma, this disposition to rise and go forward and take advantage of all of the opportunities, was necessarily to the detriment of the Indians?

Mr. SPOONER. I think that this proposition from Oklahoma, in the interest of the growth and development of Oklahoma, in the interest of the growth and development of homa, is necessarily, so far as the full bloods are concerned, antagonistic to the interests of the Indians. You can not by law change an Indian into a white man. These full blooks were no better qualified to manage, without improvidence, their own affairs the day after they became, under the operation of law, citizens of the United States than they were the day before. Racial characteristics can not be changed by any act of man. That is a matter of growth, and it takes a long, long time.

The Senator from Kansas yesterday brought to the attention of the Senate two instances which ought to rivet the attention of every man and woman in this country who has any care for the Indians. In the days to come if there is any one thing in our history of which intelligent men and women will not feel proud it is the trusteeship of the United States of the Indian and its observance.

Let me call attention to a case, if I may, for just one moment. I do not know whether the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] heard it. There have been thousands of such instances, and if these restrictions are removed there will be thousands and thousands to come. This was the case of two women; and the Indian woman, so far as I know anything about Indians—and I knew something about them once from being among them-is as bright in the transaction of business and bargain making as her husband.

After very careful consideration, a year ago Congress removed the restrictions upon certain members of the Cherokee tribe of Indians; and I want to call your attention to two cases to show the result. One was the case of Betsey Gallicatcher. She owned 130 acres of land. The restrictions were removed and she sold that land for $2,350. There were twenty-eight producing wells on it. Eight of them were flowing and twenty were being pumped. Her income from the royalty on those oil wells amounted to $39 a day, or $14,245 a year, and yet she sold that land for $2,350.

And yet she sold that land and gave that income, so long as those oil wells shall produce, to white men for $2,350. A white woman who would do that would be put under guardianship. A white man who would so improvidently dispose of his property would be held by a court to be unfit to manage his own Take the case of an Indian woman, pleased with tinsel and baubles, wanting a little money-money in hand, not the money to come in hand.

Mr. President, it looks to me to be a wicked thing to remove the protection which the law has attempted to throw around the improvidence, natural and from habit, not of all Indians, but of the great majority of Indians, especially of the full blood. -The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] called attention to another specific case.

Mr. ALDRICH rose The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to know what are the restrictions under existing law? I am asking for information, in the utmost good faith.

Mr. SPOONER. They are made by the McCumber amendment twenty-five years.

Mr. ALDRICH. What consent would be necessary for this woman to alienate her property?

Mr. SPOONER. That of the Secretary of the Interior, after investigation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The House provision provides for making an inquiry as to whether the Indian woman in this case was able to transact her own business?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I beg leave to interrupt. Under the McCumber amendment the Secretary of the Interior is debarred from removing restrictions.

Mr. SPOONER. But another law was passed which author-

Mr. STONE. What law was it?

Mr. SPOONER. Not as to full bloods, but as to mixed bloods.
Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I understood the Senator to say there is another law authorizing the Secretary to remove restrictions from fullblood Indians.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I did not mean to say that. This proposed bill removes restrictions from full-blood Indians.

As to surplus lands? Mr. LONG.

Mr. BPOONER. Oh, yes; as to surplus lands, lands which are increasing in value every day, and which will increase in value as that State progresses and develops. Why should not the Indian have the increase? Why should the restriction be removed and the Indian be left a prey of the white man, to part with his land at unreasonably low prices, having little money in hand? Why not continue to guard him? Why not continue to remember that, although he has been made a citizen of the United States, he is still an Indian just as much as he ever was?

Mr. BURKETT. May I ask the Senator a question which occurs to me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. As I have followed this debate, it seems to be developed that a great majority of the people down there can take care of themselves and can handle their lands. The question I desire to ask the Senator is, whether he would by pursuing this policy tie up the possibilities and the hopes of the twothirds or the three-fourths who can handle their property, rather than tie up the comparatively few who can not handle their property

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am making no objection to the removal of restrictions, under proper safeguards, as to the mixed bloods. This is a proposition to remove the restrictions as to all the lands except the homesteads of the 24,000 fullblood Indians, and one of the arguments which all through this debate has been made in support of the proposition is an argument which is absolutely fatal to it. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska I have not heard any definite information which enables me to say that the proportion of full-blood Indians especially who are capable of managing their own affairs has been determined.

I asked the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long], who has had much to do with this subject, and I got the impression from what he told me that as to the full-blood Indians they are, so far as business capacity is concerned, about like our own fullblood Indians in Wisconsin.

The argument which has been made here over and over again was made by the Senator from Kansas, and it has been made by other Senators, that this proposition ought to be enacted into law in order to protect the Indians. Protect them from what? Protect them from selling their lands, because of the apparent cloud which the McCumber amendment throws upon the title, at sacrificial prices vastly below their present market value. That argument, Mr. President, is simply an assertion of the necessity of what I am contending for, that these people still ought to have, as far as the Constitution permits it, the guardianship of wise, just laws.

It is said that they have made contracts of lease and contracts of sales. One Senator said that they did that in order to get the money to enable them to improve their homesteads. when questions were asked to get at the facts in regard to it, it turned out that the payments are only nominal payments of $5 or $10, enough to bind the bargain, practically. They could not utilize that money to any great extent in improving their homesteads.

The assertion that they are selling their lands so much below their present value because of the cloud upon the title, and therefore the cloud ought to be removed, establishes beyond any question, even from the standpoint of the Senators who are pressing this proposition, that these Indians are not fit to be intrusted with the management of their own affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

I am still seeking for information upon this Mr. ALDRICH. subject, which is very abstruse to myself. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether he thinks the question of blood, which he seems to dwell upon, is the only question to be raised as to the guardianship of the Indians.

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all, but the half-breeds have transacted business to a much greater extent than the full bloods. It is so in my own State. It is so generally. But the restrictions are not absolutely removed from them. They are only removed from them, and can only be removed, on investigation and in individual cases. But this proposition sweeps them

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me there are very great difficul-ties about the question of indefinite guardianship in any event. It does not appear to be very clear as to who should be put un-der guardianship, and the character of the guardianship, as to whether it should be located in some executive officer of the Government or some court or some other power, which should take up the matter in a different relation. I imagine that the Secretary of the Interior can have little knowledge as to whether a woman ought to sell her property in the Indian Territory or It seems to me that the guardianship is pretty remote; and the reason upon which the guardianship is based is perhaps even more remote and indefinite.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the argument would be that because it is troublesome and difficult to ascertain whether a given In-dian is competent to transact his or her business without improvidence all restrictions upon Indian right of alienation should be removed. That means the destruction of the Indian.

That means the pauperization of the Indian.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, I will yield to anyone. I am about through.

Mr. DEPEW. In reference to the question as to the proportionate number who are in favor of or opposed to the removal of these restrictions, here is a letter signed by P. Porter, principal chief; G. W. Grayson, and S. J. Haynes, delegates of the Creek Nation, saying that the Creek Nation is unanimously opposed to the removal of the restrictions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know whether the letter says that. If it does, it does not state the fact.

Mr. DEPEW. It precisely says that.
Mr. SPOONER. There are not many Indian voices here asking for the removal of these restrictions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There are more Indian voices here asking for the removal of the restrictions than there are any other voice

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator if he means by Indians full-blood Indians?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I mean Indians like Pleasant Porter, who is not a full-blood Indian.

Mr. McCUMBER. As has been admitted, most of them are from a sixteenth to a thirty-second Indian. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is not admitted. The Senator does not state an admitted fact.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I was about to call attention to another case, mentioned by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curris]; and there are a great many others, he said, which he could bring to the attention of the Senate. An Indian woman—I can not pronounce her name—after the restrictions were removed had 50 acres of land. There were eight flowing wells on the 50 acres. Her income was $2,847 a year from the royalty alone, and yet, as I have said, she sold the land for $1,500.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I should like to find out, if I can, where that information came from. Does the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. SPOONER. No. I did tell where it came from. It came from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can tell the Senator where it came from exactly.

Mr. STONE. I should like to know about the reliability.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no question as to its reliability. The Congress of the United States last year by direct act removed the restrictions from 1,600 of these Indians.

Mr. LONG. On the recommendation of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Secretary of the Interior directed the inspector of Indian affairs in the Territory to investigate sixteen cases—as to what they had done with their property. The record of that investigation is in part what the There was Senator from Kansas gave as to these two cases. no investigation made as to any case upon which the restrictions had been removed by the Secretary of the Interior. I am sorry to say that in very many instances it will be found that where restrictions have been removed the property has been There is no question about that

Mr. SPOONER. This is also a proposition to remove restrictions by law. I am curious to know how many of the sixteen wasted their property.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. A
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-All of them, I think, did.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas? Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a list here. I made the statement and it appears in the RECORD. It shows that in fourteen of these cases the Indians had sold their land at from one-third to about one-tenth of what it was worth.

Mr. SPOONER. Men and women. CURTIS. Men and women. Men and women?

Mr. SPOONER. That is, fourteen out of sixteen? Mr. CURTIS. Fourteen out of sixteen. Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to ask

Will the Senator allow me to ask him how it was known that the land was sold at from one-third to onetenth of its value?

Mr. CURTIS. Inspectors were sent down and had the land appraised. A full report was made showing the cases where oil wells were on the land, how many oil wells, how much oil was produced, what the royalty was on each barrel, and how much it amounted to in a day or week and in a year. shown that in one case there were twenty-eight producing wells; that the income was $39 a day, or $14,000 a year, and she sold the land for $2,387.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As to the value, I think it must be understood that annual computations are made, when the fact of the matter is that not one-third or probably one-tenth of that revenue could be derived. The amount which could be derived for one day is multiplied by 300 or 365. But aside from that fact, in the case mentioned, I think it may reasonably be said there was sufficient evidence from the report of the inspector to show that the property was substantially dissipated.

Mr. DEPEW. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if $14,200 a year capitalized would not make that property worth in the neighborhood of $300,000?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not a financier. Mr. DEPEW. It would make it worth $300,000 instead of $2,300, for which it was sold.

Mr. SPOONER. There the restrictions were removed by law; and it is proposed here to remove the restrictions from the power of alienation of a great many thousand Indians by law. In that case fourteen out of sixteen were found to have been turned adrift, including these two women, by a Government resting under a duty to safeguard them against such improvidence as solemn as the father holds toward his son, a minor, and unfit to transact business. What good ground is there for supposing that the proportion, 14 to 2, as to the 24,000 or the 50,000 from whose power of alienation it is proposed here to remove all restrictions, will be much less?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can give the Senator my reply; but, of course, I do not know whether it is along his line.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no line.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's argument seems to assume that these sixteen are the only ones from whom restrictions were removed. The sixteen were special cases in which inquiry was made by the Department of the Interior. No inquiry was made as to the hundreds of cases from which the restrictions were removed by the Secretary of the Interior himself. suppose, was to show the iniquity of Congress in acting in individual cases, thereby changing the general course, which allowed the Secretary of the Interior to act in individual cases.

I will say to the Senator I am as much opposed as the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else to Congress legislating off restrictions in individual cases, because in those cases it will be found that the removal of restrictions is asked for, as was developed in these cases, not by the Indians themselves, but by somebody who is particularly interested in the special piece of ground from which it is sought to remove the restrictions.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is quite right, that it is improper to remove restrictions in individual cases by law. think he would be quite right if he went further and said that it is improper to remove restrictions by law en masse, without investigation, because it ignores the nature of the Indian and the racial weakness of the Indians, and it can bring nothing but harm to the Indian.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate further.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me before he concludes?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. He is familiar with the legislation relating to these tribes, the legislation under which they hold title to land. I should like to ask his opinion as a lawyer, if he has not expressed it already, before I came into the Chamber, as to whether what is known as the McCumber amendment and laws of that kind imposing additional or extended restrictions on the right of alienation are valid laws?

Mr. SPOONER. I propose to refer that to the Supreme Court. I ask the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. STONE. Mr. SPOONER. I said before the Senator came in that I have very grave doubt about it. I have not examined it with great care. It is disputed in this Chamber. Some lawyers here think it is constitutional; others think it is not; others think it is doubtful. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to predicate such legislation as this upon the conclusion that it is unconstitutional and therefore should be repealed.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me further?

Mr. SPOONER. Surely.
Mr. STONE. I have heard several lawyers, and lawyers of recognized ability, express their decided opinion that such legislation is unconstitutional; I have heard lawyers like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], and perhaps others on the other side of this question express their doubts as to the constitutionality of the law; but I have not yet heard a lawyer here say he believed it constitutional.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps no lawyer has said that

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Kansas said it. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Kansas, I believe, announced his opinion that it was constitutional. At any rate it was solemnly enacted by Congress, and very many of the Senators now here, I presume nearly all of them, voted upon it. I think it ought to be left to the Supreme Court to pass upon it. With all my heart I hope if it is left to the Supreme Court to pass upon it that court will be able conscientiously to sustain it, because it is my conviction that this will be the last of many body blows struck by the Congress of the United States at the Indian. If it is unconstitutional, all these Indians will be left free to become the prey of the white man's unquenchable hunger for the Indian's land. I am not reflecting upon the white man generally when I say that. I think that it is a vanishing race. We are pretty near through with them, except to take care of them after their lands shall have been taken from them. I sincerely hope, myself, that we will make a little pause on this practically last step.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair— Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say I understand that, as is usual in cases of such votes, really in this case the vote is on the merits of the proposition, and not upon the parliamentary question. I wish to say that, in order that I may not be committed on any parliamentary view.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to say that I shall vote in this case upon the question of whether this proposition is in order or not without any regard to the merits of the case at all, and I hope every other Senator will do the same.

Mr. BACON. I do not think that has been the usual custom in such cases; and I want to say that I intend to vote according to the merits of the case.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose every Senator will vote as he pleases

Mr. BACON. The merits of the case, I presume, will decide the question of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the amendment on which the question arises?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment on which the question of order has been raised.

The Secretary. On page 34, beginning with line 17 of the bill, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1904, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, $25,000: Provided, That so much as may be necessary may be used in the employment of clerical force in the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

And to insert:

On and after July 1, 1907, all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of the lands, except homesteads, of all allottees of Indian blood in the Indian Territory, and all restrictions upon the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of all the lands of allottees not of Indian blood are hereby removed.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the effect of the amendment is to remove the present restrictions under existing law, and that the effect of voting against that amendment is to retain the present restrictions of existing law against the alienation of land by the Indians.

Mr. CLAY. And to impose additional restrictions.
Mr. BACON. If stricken out the law remains as it now is; that is, if the amendment does not prevail the law will remain

Mr. CULBERSON. The question is not whether this shall be stricken out, but whether the amendment is in order, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order? If the Senate shall decide that the amendment is in order, the question will then be upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. And those voting "nay" on the question of order would be in favor of retaining the present restrictions. Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Chair please state the point of order again, so that the Senate may fully under-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curris] raised the point of order that the proposed amendment was general legislation, and changed existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall vote "nay" upon the proposition, because I believe that this amendment is general legislation and is therefore in violation of the sixteenth rule. How I shall vote if this amendment be declared in order I do not know, and I think that is not pertinent to this question.

I think that is not pertinent to this question.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. Do I understand the Senator aright that he said he would vote "nay" because he believed the amendment was general legislation?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do so believe, and I believe that it is not in order. The proposition as put by the Vice-President is, Is this amendment in order? I shall vote that it is not in order, as I believe it is a clear violation of the sixteenth rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senate holds that the amendment is in order, then the question will follow, Will the Senate agree to the amendment? If the Senate votes that the amendment is not in order it will go out on the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought it was before stated that the question was whether the point of order be well taken. That is presented in one form. In the other form it is presented in the opposite shape

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The usual form is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I should like the opinion of the Chair on the effect of a vote sustaining the point of order against the committee amendment commencing on line 24, page 34, and ending with line 4, on page 35, upon the previous paragraph that was part of the bill as it came from the other House and has been stricken out by the committee. In other words, I understand the committee amendment to have been to strike out from line 17 to line 23, on page 34.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think that has been yet stricken out.

That was passed over because the committee amendment inserting new language was not adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. The committee amendment was not adopted? Then what becomes of the preceding paragraph?

Mr. SPOONER. It is retained.
Mr. CLAPP. We should then reject the committee amendment, commencing on line 17.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands]. He does not appear to be in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack], who is absent, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. Platt] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PATTERSON (when Mr. Teller's name was called).

I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Teller] has been sick now for nearly a week and is liable to be detained by sickness at his hotel for several days yet to come. I make this statement at his request, and desire that it shall stand for subsequent votes on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I have been requested on this vote to pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Dryden], leaving the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New Jersey paired on this vote. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who is not in the Chamber. I do not know how he would vote, if present, and I do not like to leave him unprotected, though I think he would vote with me on this issue. I will therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], if he is not paired with some other Senator, and vote. I vote yea.'

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], but as that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], with whom the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has a general pair, I am at liberty to vote.

vote "yea."
The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I have general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is absent from the Chamber. I will therefore transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 31, as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has decided that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CLAPP. In view of that decision of the Senate, I desire to ask that the Senate reject the committee amendment from line 17 to line 23, inclusive, on page 34.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the effect of the vote just taken is to restore the House provision.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out and insert.

The Senate has decided that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, if the Senate will bear with me, I wish to say that in the Indian Territory there is a tribe of Indians known as the "Quapaws." The Commissioner of Indian Afrairs feels that there ought to be authority granted to the Interior Department to relieve restrictions as to individual members of the Quapaw tribe. Last year we passed a general law giving the Interior Department authority to remove restrictions, but it does not apply to any Indians in the Indian Territory, and so I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 34, after line 23.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 34, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pp. 182, 183), entitled "An act to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting the words "of the Five Civilized Tribes" between the word "Indians" and the word "in" in the last line of the third proviso; so that this provise shall read: "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ascertain what is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Where does the amendment come in?
Mr. CLAPP. To the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] I will state that the amendment comes in after line 23 on page 34, and to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] I would state again that last year we passed a law known as the "Burke law," which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, when he finds any Indian competent to manage his affairs, to release his restrictions. But under the phraseology of the law and the construction of legislation in regard to the Indian Territory it would not be applicable to the Quapaws of the Indian Territory. The amendment desired by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I have submitted, inserts the words "of the Five Civilized Tribes;" so that the Burke bill will read that it will not apply to any Indian of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, then, would apply to the Indians of the Quapaw Agency?

Mr. CLAPP. It would allow the Quapaws to be released by the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, for the reasonwhile I do not want to create any discussion-that the Indians under the Quapaw Agency have no homesteads and that this amendment would allow the Secretary of the Interior to release them so that they can sell their lands, homesteads and all, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator please, before the point of order is made. I should like to insert in the RECORD a communication from the Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that is may be read. Mr. CLAPP. Very well; let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 30, 1907.

Dear Senator Clapp: The inclosed amendment I should be glad to have you put into your pocket, when the appropriation bill comes up in the Senate, for use in case the fight upon the removal of restrictions clause should prove strong enough to knock that clause out. If it went out, the amendments which I had suggested to it would, of course, go by the board, but in that case I should be glad if you would propose the amendment inclosed. The Quapaw Indians ought to have been provided for in what we know as the Burke law, but everybody doubtless had his mind so fixed upon the Five Civilized Tribes that no one thought of the Quapaw Agency, which includes all the other fragments of tribes now in the Indian Territory. If anyone had thought of it in time the Indians tributary to the Quapaw Agency would undoubtedly have been excepted from the sweeping provision excepting all Indian Territory Indians. My amendment will confine the exception to the Five Civilized Tribes. The Indians tributary to the Quapaw Agency are in just the same condition to all intents and purposes as the reservation Indians in South Dakota and other parts of the country, except that there is a very much larger percentage of them who are entirely capable of taking care of themselves; and it seems especially hard that, when all the other similar tribes and parts of tribes in the country have the privilege of getting their lands in fee on proving satisfactorily their capacity to care for their affairs, this one little group should be left out in the cold.

Sincerely, yours,

Hon, Moses E. Clapp,

Hon. Moses E. Clapp, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order has been made against the amendment; and the Chair sustains the point of ment, that it is a private claim.

order. The Secretary will read the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 37, beginning in line 13, to insert the following:

That no election for city, town, or municipal officers authorized by the laws now in force in the Indian Territory shall be held under and in pursuance of said laws in the year 1907; and all persons heretofore elected to any of said offices now serving and performing the duties thereof shall continue to serve in their respective offices and perform all the duties thereof, with all the power and authority conferred upon them by the laws now in force in said Territory, until such offices are terminated by the laws of the State of Oklahoma or until the officers provided for under the constitution of said State are duly elected and qualified: Provided, That in case no constitution is adopted and ratified in accordance with the provisions of an act for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into the Union as a State, approved June 16, 1906, then said officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 38, after line 22, to insert the following:

An act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137), entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Indian Territory, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out on line 13 the words "And the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after said date" and inserting the words "And the Secretary of the Interior shall have jurisdiction after said date to adjudicate any and all cases then pending" in lieu thereof.

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator withhold the point of order until I can have read a very short communication in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from North Dakota, if there be no ob-VICE-PRESIDENT. jection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Washington, D. C., February 7, 1907.

Washington, D. C., February 7, 1907.

Dear Sir: Representing the Cherokee Nation, through its principal chief. I desire to most earnestly protest against the provision in the Indian appropriation bill, now pending before Congress, beginning in line 23 on page 38 and ending with line 8 on page 39, providing for the amending of an act of Congress approved 26th day of April, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137), entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," the reason being, if this amendment prevails, it will open up the question of the application for citizenship and prolong the completion of the rolls of the Cherokee tribe of Indians and necessitate the tribe incurring a great expense and hardship unjustly. There should be no provision of law which would allow additional applications to citizenship to be heard, as all have had ample opportunity to present their applications. As we have no representative on the floor of the Senate, I appeal to you to raise an objection to this provision and see if you can not defeat its passage.

Very respectfully,

James S. Davenport,

JAMES S. DAVENPORT, Special Representative of the Cherokee Nation.

Hon. PORTER J. McCumber, United States Senator, Senate Chamber.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that simply illustrates how easy it is for people to make mistakes when they talk of things about which they do not know anything. There is nothing in this provision that would open up any roll or allow any application to be made. In justice to the committee I want to state that last year we passed a law which terminates on the 4th of March the jurisdiction of the Commissioner and the Department in the Indian Territory. Not knowing whether they could complete their work, the committee took it up with the Commissioner, who said he could complete his work, but, at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior, it was thought best to extend the time within which to decide pending cases. However, upon a further consideration of the matter, it would appear if cases have been decided by the Commissioner by the 4th of March the decisions will stand without any further ac-Consequently, there is no necessity for the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, under the heading "Choctaws," beginning in line 16, page 39, to insert the follow-

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of Samuel Garland, deceased, and to render judgment thereon in such amounts, if any, as may appear to be equitably due. Said judgment, if any, in favor of the heirs of Garland, shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, said judgment to be rendered on the principle of quantum meruit for services rendered and expenses incurred. Notice of said suit shall be served on the governor of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall appear and defend in said suit on behalf of said nation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the amendment is repugnant to the provisions of the rule.

Mr. LODGE. It provides for a claim.
Mr. KEAN. Yes; it provides for a private claim.
Mr. CLAPP. While I do not care to contest the point of order, I desire to remind the Senate that the Senate has decided several times, through its presiding officer, that where a claim is not against the Federal Government, but against an Indian tribe, the point of order was not well taken.

Mr. LODGE. That was decided, if the Senator will allow me, where it was in regard to a treaty set forth in the amendment, as the rule provides.

and unestimated for.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from North Dakota has the ruling

Mr. LODGE. Moreover, I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is a charge against the United States Treasury

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to read at this point, and call the Chair's attention to the holding of the Chair three years in 1904, upon a claim somewhat similar to this. I will cite It is the Sypher claim. I read from page 3548 of part 4, ago, in 1904, upon a claim somewhat similar to this. volume 38, of the Congressional Record, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session. It reads as follows:

Mr. Stewart. I now ask that the reading of the bill be continued.

That was the Indian appropriation bill.

That was the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the item on page 53 of this bill, beginning in line 10 and ending with line 19, for payment to J. Hale Sypher of $50,000. The point of order was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean]. The Chair is of opinion that the private claim, under Rule XVI barred from appropriation bills, must necessarily be a claim against the Government of the United States which would take money from the United States Treasury. This item is not such a claim. It is neither against the Government nor does it take Government money from the Treasury. In the opinion of the Chair, the committee having jurisdiction of the subject had a right to report this item favorably and thus make it in order. So the Chair overrules the point of order raised by the Senator from New Jersey.

Of course, that simply covers the one proposition, that where it is a private claim and the money is not to be taken from the Treasury of the United States, but out of funds belonging to Indian tribes, it is not subject to this rule. I have not looked into the case to see whether the other rule will apply.

Mr. CLAPP. I think it was when the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] was in the chair that it was held that the rule as to estimates did not apply when the charge was against some Indian tribe and not against the Treasury of the United States.

I am not particular about this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question, Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the amendment is decided to be out of order. The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before we go to the next amendment, my attention has been called to the amendment on page 40, commencing with line 3. I do not know whether objection has been made to it.

Mr. CLAPP. It went out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment went out on a point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was requested to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is one of those cases coming within the rule that should not go out on a point of order on the ground that it appropriates money out of the Treasury, be-cause it does not so appropriate; and also that it is in order on the further ground that it is carrying out the provisions of a treaty. However, the same objection, I suppose, would apply to this amendment that applied to the one which has just been ruled out, and so I do not feel like pressing it further.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Minnesota does not object, as I am called from the Chamber, I should like to have the amendment on page 52 considered, all the more because it is precisely such an amendment as the Senate has just decided to be not in order. I refer to the amendment on page 52, beginning in line 10.

Mr. CLAPP. We may just as well take it up now. Mr. HALE. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 52, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

For the balance and final payment due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903, said award being made in pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee, or Creek, tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, the sum of $600,000; such payment to be made in accordance with the terms and provisions of said award as the same appears on page 2252 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 36, part 3, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek nation of Indians of June 14, 1806, the said sum of $600,000, to be paid to such Indians and freedmen only whose names appear on the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen as provided in said articles 3 and 4; and such payments shall be made in proportion of the awards as set out in said list: Provided, That said sum shall be accepted by said Indians in full payment and satisfaction of all claim and demand growing out of said loyal Creek claims, and the payment thereof shall be a full release of the Government from any such claim or claims: Provided, however, That if any of said loyal Creek Indians or freedmen whose names are on said list of awards shall have died, then the amount or amounts due such deceased person or persons, respectively, shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to first withhold from the amount herein appropriated and pay to S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., the attorney of said loyal Creeks and freedmen, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, as provided by written contracts between the said S. W. Peel and the claimants herein, the same to be payment in full for all legal and other services rendered by him, as provided by said contracts, or those employed by him, and for all disbursements and other expenditures had by him in behalf of said claimants, in pursuance of said contract: And provided further, That said Secretary is authorized and directed to pay to David M. Hodge, a Creek Indian, of Tulsa, in the Creek Nation, a sum equal to 5 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, which payment shall be in full for all claims of every kind made by said David M. Hodge, or

Mr. HALE. I make the same point of order that the Senator from Kansas did on the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of der. The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the top of page 43 it is proposed to in-

The Secretarry. At the top of page 43 it is proposed to insert:

That the value of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, whether leased or unleased, shall be ascertained, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the Persident, by a board of three appraisers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President of the United States. Said appraisers shall return to the Secretary of the Interior a report sworn to by them, showing the value of the surface of the lands embraced within said segregations; and such appraisal shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be approved by the President of the United States, may sell the surface of said segregated lands, after six months' notice of said sale, in tracts of not more than 160 acres to each purchaser, but at not less than the appraised value. Such land shall be sold on such terms as may be fixed by regulations as above provided for, but all such lands as are unleased at the date of the approval of this act shall be sold subject to the right of any purchasers of the mineral right to mine thereunder, together with the right of ingress and egress and with immunity from damages occasioned by subsidence, and to the right of said mineral owner to acquire a sufficient amount of the surface, not exceeding 20 per cent of the said surface area, for the necessary surface works and operation of said mine, the value of said surface area for said mining purposes to be fixed by agreement between the parties in interest, or in case of disagreement said price to be fixed by three persons, one of whom shall be chosen by the owner of the surface, one by the owner of the mineral right, and the third by the two so chosen, and if they do not agree as to a third, then such third appraiser to be appointed by the judge of the Value of said surface area f

Mr. TILLMAN. The amendment clearly changes existing law, and as we are making points of order on all of these amendments, I think this had better go out. At least I make the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator from South Carolina with withdraw the point of order for a moment until an explanation can be made in regard to the amendment. Of course I understand that the purpose of points of order under the rule is to prevent legislation which ought not to be made or that all legislation generally shall be conducted in due form and regular order. But it is oftentimes the case that pressing needs require that legislation be had, even if not in strict conformity with the rules of the Senate. I hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order on this amendment.

The Senate, I think, very well understands to what this mendment refers. It refers to the great area of segregated amendment refers. coal lands in the Indian Territory, about which there was very much discussion a year ago, as the Senator will remember. The amendment proposes, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, that the surface of the land which is not subject to allotment, being the only part of the Indian Territory that is reserved from allotment, may be sold in single tracts of 160 acres each, reserving the mineral under the land. The city of South McAlester, of thirteen to fifteen thousand people, and numerous other cities and towns are located on these segrega-tions. Towns have grown up around the coal mines.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right here I call the Senator's attention to the provision which permits the surface to be bought by the mine owner to the extent of 20 per cent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, of course, is to protect the

Mr. TILLMAN. Did the Senator ever see a coal mine where the buildings and the entry to the mine would take a fifth of that-4 per cent even? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will read the text he will discover that it establishes a maximum of 20 per cent. It says not to exceed 20 per cent. I have no desire, of course, to have in here any more than would be needed for the operation of the mine, and if the Senator thinks 10 per cent is better-that is, 16 acres in any 160 upon which the mine is located-I, of course, would have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I remember rightly, the average lease in the Indian Territory comprises something like 3,000 acres of land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How much?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Something like 3,000 acres.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Nine hundred and sixty acres, I

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Nine hundred and sixty acres?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And are not several of those leases consolidated, so that there is considerably more than 960 acres under the control of one operating company?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, yes; an operating company is not limited to one lease-with the approval of the Secretary of

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Twenty per cent would make it possible to acquire quite a body of the surface of this land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It would make it possible to acquire a body of the surface if the Secretary of the Interior fails entirely in his discretion and duty. Of course there is no possi-bility of selling the surface of this land over these leased mines without protecting the lessee. The only question is how he can best be protected.

Mr. TILLMAN. My main reason for interposing the point of order is that the State of Oklahoma will have here some representatives when we meet again, and they will be more widely interested in the proper disposition of the lands and the care and statesmanship which shall be displayed in connection with those lands than anybody else. We may just as well await the arrival of the two Senators from that State, who will come here representing all of its interests and necessarily better informed as to the conditions there than any of us possibly can be. I think this can very well wait.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, if the Senator insists upon his point of order——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to insist upon it if it can be

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to say to the Senator that am particularly anxious about this amendment, because I think it is the only one in the whole bill which the committee that visited the Indian Territory, the Indian Committee as a committee, the Secretary of the Interior, and the President of the United States all approve. The situation is such that this legislation ought to be had in regard to the surface of this land, in my opinion.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question, if he will permit me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. STONE. Is it not a fact that the prices which probably will be received for the surface of these lands will be very much below their real value because of the easement right which would obtain to the miner when the land was finally opened?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Giving my individual opinion, I think not. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina and to the Senator from Missouri that it was the insistent claim of the Indian tribes, the Choctaws and Chickasaws, through their tribal authorities, that this land by every rule of right and equity ought to be sold to the highest bidder for cash.

Mr. TILLMAN. Including the mineral? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Including the mineral. The committee could not bring themselves to that view of the matter. The Indian tribes thought it would bring more money that way. The Indian Committee thought it would not. We believed that whatever can be secured for the surface of this land will be substantially velvet to the Indians, and that a larger amount will be secured by selling the surface and the mineral sepa-We thought that the time was ripe and that the necessity existed for the disposal and utilization of the surface at this time. We thought that so many questions of value and public policy and good to the Indians and good to the new State intervened that it was not the proper thing for Congress at this time to take up any question connected with the disposal of the mineral under the surface.

So we prepared this amendment for the disposition of the surface rights under what we considered thorough supervision and safeguards by the terms of the amendment, and cerely hope that this legislation will be enacted at this time. Those concerned near the land, the necessities of the cities and towns, and the advisability of putting the land in cultivation has appealed to everyone, I think, who has investigated the matter with any degree of care. With that statement, I am willing to submit the matter.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. It has been represented to me in the last few days that the Indians who own these lands are very much opposed to this disposition of the surface. Is that a fact?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a fact that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, acting through their tribal authorities, Governor Johnson and Governor McCurtain, and others, are opposed to this disposition of the land. They maintain their right to dispose of these 500,000 acres, which are segregated, in any way that they choose. Abstractly speaking, I am frank to say I believe they are right. If they own this land they should be allowed to go into the market and sell it to whomsoever they please, whether it be one man or ten men or a corporation or any aggregation of capital that is willing to purchase it. But the committee could not bring itself to the conclusion that that was for the best interest of the Indian or of the country, or that it would bring more money into the Indian treasury. Consequently the committee have recommended the plan which appears in this amendment.

Mr. STONE. One other question. The Senator may have answered it. I was out of the Chamber for a few minutes, and the matter about which I inquire may have been answered already. Is it not a fact that the convention now in session in Oklahoma has provided for a committee to confer with the Indians with a view to the purchase of these lands by the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has. I think I have also that memorial, which was presented here by me on January 16. It is a memorial passed by the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Oklahoms. proposed State of Oklahoma. [A pause.] No; this is not it. I have not the memorial with me. But, as I understand, there was a resolution passed by the constitutional convention providing for a committee to investigate the question of these coal lands, with a view to reporting to their first legislature as to the advisability and possibility of the State of Oklahoma acquiring these lands by purchase from the Indians, to be used as a basis for a school fund or for other matters. I thought I had the memorial with me, but I see this one is relative to another matter

Mr. TILLMAN. In view of the importance of this matter, and in view of the fact that it has been brought to the attention of the Senate recently that the railroads and capitalists have monopolized the coal fields and have already a monopoly of the anthracite field and a large portion of the bituminous field, I feel that I must insist on the point of order and wait until Oklahoma's representatives get a chance to come here and speak. No harm will be done by waiting six months or a year.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator, in leaving the subject, that one motive that the committee had in mind-

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not impugning the motive of anybody. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; that is not it. The Senator Mr. TILLMAN. will hear me for a moment.

Mr. CLAPP (to Mr. CLARK of Wyoming). Use the word

"reason" instead of "motive."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will accept the suggestion. One reason why the committee make this recommendation for the disposition of the surface of the land in tracts of not more than 160 acres was to prevent fastening upon the new State the possibility of monopoly in the lands in that locality. Here are 500,000 acres of this land in the open, not subject to allotment to the individual Indian. The committee believed that unless some step was taken now the entering wedge would be made between now and the next session of Congress whereby a monopoly would be created and enter upon the purchase and possession of those lands.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator can indicate how a monopoly can work when there is no law under which anything can be done, I should like to hear it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. A monopoly sometimes begins to work unknown to anyone.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am willing myself to wait until Oklahoma has two Senators here and Representatives in the other end of the Capitol who come from the field and know all about it and are more interested than anybody else. In view of the fact that last spring it was brought out that coal within 150 miles of these very coal fields was being sold at $8 a ton, by reason of the manipulations and monopolies and one thing or another in vogue out there, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am perfectly content, and I shall only hope that the wish of the Senator from South Carolina to avoid monopoly will not be defeated by the rejection of this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 45, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

That in addition to the towns heretofore segregated, surveyed, and scheduled in accordance with law the Secretary of the Interior may segregate and survey, within that part of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, Indian Territory, heretofore segregated as coal and asphalt land, such other towns as are now in existence or which he may deem it desirable to establish. He shall cause the surface of the lots in such towns to be appraised, scheduled, and sold at the rates, on the terms, and with the same character of estate as is provided in section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 495), under regulations to be prescribed by him: Provided further, That the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137), shall not apply to town lots: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, cause the lots in any town within the boundaries of the Five Civilized Tribes to be reappraised as of the date of the original appraisement made by the Choctaw town-site commission, that payments already made on lots therein shall be credited on the basis of the reappraisement, and that payments not heretofore made on installments due or past due under the original appraisement shall be superseded by the amounts fixed under the new appraisement shall be superseded by the amounts fixed under the new appraisement, and payments shall begin and date from thirty days after the service of notice of the appraisement: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may also survey, appraise, and sell as town lots areas hereforore segregated as additions to towns within the boundaries of any of the Five Civilized Tribes, but which have not heretofore been surveyed, appraised, or sold, the manner of scheduling and the rates at which sold to conform to existing law concerning those subjects in the respective nations; and the sum of $15,000, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated for the expenses incident to the completion

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, while I was necessarily absent from the Chamber an amendment on page 37, relating to elections, was taken up and agreed to. Is that correct?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I do not think I want to make a point of order against the amendment, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are some rather vigorous protests against this clause, coming from the Indian Territory to me at least. I am not sure but that they are well founded.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. LONG. I myself have heard no objections to this provision from the Indian Territory. I should like to have the Senator state what the objections are that are made to it.

Mr. STONE. I will ask the Secretary to read a short statement from the Morning Democrat, of Ardmore, which expresses very well the objections against this provision that have been sent to me in letters and telegrams.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary The VICE-PRESIDENT. will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Ardmore, Ind. T., Morning Democrat, January 29, 1907.] In order to defeat the wishes of the people and fasten themselves upon an unwilling public, an organization of municipal officeholders has been perfected in Oklahoma and Indian Territory and have hired attorneys lobbying a bill through Congress to continue them in office until 1908, and longer if the constitution should be defeated or turned down by the President. Below we reproduce a letter and a copy of the bill sent Chief of Police Buck Garrett. Judge Galt and Chief Garrett are the only Ardmore officials seen by the Democrat on the subject, and they are in favor of an election and say they do not want office except by the votes of the Democratic party and the people who know their records as officials:

"Muscogee. Ind. T., January 22, 1907.

"Muscogee, Ind. T., January 22, 1907.

"Muscogee, Ind. T., January 22, 1907.

"Dear Sir: We are desirous of having the inclosed provision inserted in some bill now before Congress, so that those now holding city offices in Indian Territory may hold over until the election under the constitution of the State of Oklahoma.

"It will be necessary to have help from other towns to meet the expense of paying the fees of the attorneys already employed and now in Washington working on this matter. The larger cities should bear most of this expense. A bill containing the inclosed provision has been introduced and referred to the Committee on the Territories. We must watch it and not let it die in the committee room.

"We feel that your town should help defray the expense in this matter to the amount of $25. It is requested that you make the collection and remit this sum at once to

"J. B. Campbell,

"J. B. CAMPBELL, "City Recorder, Muscogce, Ind. T."

Mr. STONE. I can not see why there could not be an election in the spring and let the people of the towns select their own officers, instead of continuing by a legislative act those who are now in the possession of the offices.

Mr. LONG. Is the Senator aware of the fact that legislation similar to this was enacted last year as to county officers in Oklahoma, in order to avoid the expense of an election there, when the constitutional convention was about to be held? This amendment will be only operative if a constitution is adopted. If the constitution should for any reason fail, then the successors to the officers can be elected.

Mr. STONE. Elected when? At the next regular election as provided by law?

Mr. LONG. They are to hold until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

Mr. STONE. But they can not be duly elected and qualified until the time shall come for a regular election under the law. If for any reason the constitution should fail and the State should not be admitted, the persons now in office would continue to exercise the functions of their offices under the operation of this provision without any reference to the wishes of the people

Mr. LONG. I think it is not open to that construction, but can not the Senator suggest an amendment that will make more definite that provision?

Mr. STONE. The only amendment I could suggest would be to eliminate it, to take it out, and let the officers be elected this spring.

Mr. LONG. The election for the approval or rejection of the constitution will be held sometime this spring, shortly after the city officers are to be elected.

The constitution, if adopted, will go into force by the middle of the summer, and then municipal officers and county officers must be elected. This will require two elections for municipal officers within the next six months if this amendment is not adopted.

Mr. STONE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the mendment was agreed to. We will then see what is the sense amendment was agreed to. of the Senate in regard to it.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to interfere, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to line 16. There is a direct and positive statement or prohibition here:

That no election for city, town, or municipal officers authorized by the laws now in force in the Indian Territory shall be held under and in pursuance of said laws in the year 1907.

That forbids any election to be held. If the constitutional convention should want to change the condition and provide for an election all along the line for county officers, municipal officers, and everything else when the new constitution goes into effect, why should they not do it?

Mr. LONG. It is to avoid the expense of an election in April of this year, when the constitution will possibly be voted upon and approved a month or two later, and then the officers provided for under that constitution will be elected. It is to avoid the expense of two elections for city officers within the next few months that this amendment has been reported.

Mr. STONE. There is no doubt of the purpose the committee had in view

Mr. TILLMAN. Nobody is impugning the motive of the committee or saying anything about that. It is just a question as to whether, after the statement read from the desk of this lobby of municipal officeholders, and all that, we will allow them to hold over until year after next or not.

Mr. STONE. As a member of the committee supporting the bill, I do not feel disposed to make any point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I make the point of order against it that it is legislation and not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in contravention of the rule, and sustains the point of order. The next amendment passed over will be read.

The Secretary. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs passed over is on page 48 of the bill, beginning at line 5, and reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to transfer from the freedman roll to the roll of citizens by blood of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations the name of any person who is of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood on the side of either parent, as appears from the examination records prepared by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the act approved June 28, 1898, or any tribal roll, or any field card prepared by the Commission or the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and other evidence shall be taken only in cases where the identity or Indian blood of such person is denied by the tribal authorities.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order on

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know whether a point of order is to be made upon this amendment, but-

Mr. TILLMAN. I have just made it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants to have the amendment discussed it is a question that may require considerable discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would prefer not to discuss it. am getting very tired of this Indian appropriation bill and would like to get through with it. Where a point of order will clearly lie I do not see why we should discuss it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not certain that the point of order will lie against it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let the Chair rule, and if he says it does not then we will discuss it on its merits.

Mr. McCUMBER. My question was directed to the Senator in charge of the bill, and I was about to suggest to him if there is going to be any discussion on this amendment he allow it to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CLAPP. I presume the Senator from South Carolina is going to press his point of order, and if he is going to do that we may as well dispose of it now as at any other time.

Mr. TILLMAN. I make the point of order, Mr. President, and I should like to have the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BERRY. That it is general legislation.
Mr. TILLMAN. That it is general legislation. It changes existing law

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of der. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 48, beginning at line 17, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported to insert the following:

That Laura Secondine and William Brown and David Muskrat, and others, Cherokee citizens, who have brought three several suits in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which are now pending there, to test the validity of certain acts of Congress affecting the allotment of the lands and the distribution of the tribal funds and other property of the Cherokee Nation, or restricting the right of alienation or other disposition of lands allotted to them and other Cherokee citizens, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to institute their several suits in the Court of Claims to question the validity of said acts, making the United States defendant thereto, which said suits shall be prosecuted by them for and on behalf of all Cherokee citizens entitled to the allotment of lands and the distribution of funds under the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes."

And jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, to hear, determine, and adjudicate each of said actions; and said court shall not be limited to the consideration of questions as now presented in the said suits filed in the District of Columbia, but shall consider all questions which may be presented in said suits affecting the validity of said acts.

All suits brought hereunder shall be brought within ninety days from the date of the approval of this act; and for the speedy disposition of the questions involved, preference shall be given to the same in said courts and by the Attorney-General, who is charged with the defense of said suits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I think it is general legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I see indications that the Senator from New Jersey is going to interpose a point of order. I should like to make a statement before that is done.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly; I withhold the point of order. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, by way of explanation I will say that this amendment could perhaps if adopted go a long way toward settling some of the vexed questions of law about which we have been having some difficulty within the last two or three days, to wit, the constitutionality of the McCumber amendment and certain other provisions of the law which we passed to which the McCumber amendment was attached.

Laura Secondine, William Brown, David Muskrat, and others, brought three suits which are now pending in the District of Columbia, testing the validity of these acts. To these suits demurrers were interposed by the Government of the United States. The condition of those suits now is that by stipulation further action is delayed until Congress shall have an opportunity to act upon this proposition. If this matter be referred to the Court of Claims, with instructions for speedy action and with opportunity for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, it is more than likely that very early action will be had upon those legal propositions.

In that view of the case, I think perhaps that while the amendment might be subject to a point of order as intimated, the benefit to be derived from it would so far outweigh that it ought to remain in the bill, and the suits proceed along the line of this amendment.

Mr. McCumber. Will the Senator state wherein the amendment, which he designates as the McCumber amendment, will be questioned in this proceeding? How can it possibly arise in the three cases referred to?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It arises in the Laura Secondine case, as I remember it, by reason of the fact that she is upon the full-blood roll. There are two questions in her case. tion in the case is directed against the McCumber amendment, by which her right to alienate was thrown over twenty-five years. Just the particular point in each of the three cases I am unable to state. It is all in the memorial which was presented by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long]. All of the cases go to the particular point we have had so much difficulty about, and which I should be glad to have settled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist upon his point of order?

Mr. KEAN. He does not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment about to be read is one that was offered on the floor. It does not appear in the printed bill. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On page 47 the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] proposed an amendment to come in after line 18. It reads as follows:

That all restrictions as to the sale and incumbrance of the south-ist quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, township 11, range east, in the Indian Territory, the same being the homestead hereto-re allotted to Nocus Fixico, Creek allottee No. 603, are hereby re-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I remember, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] made a point of order against this amendment, and in the light of his very interesting and instructive remarks this afternoon I call his attention to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know whether my remarks were interesting; I can not imagine that they were instructive, and I do not know what point of order the Senator refers to.

Mr. LONG. The point of order in which it is proposed to remove the restrictions on the homestead of an Indian in the Indian Territory by special legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. Unless there is some explanation of it, I make the point of order against it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the only explanation is that last year this was on the bill and the name was misspelled. It is simply for the purpose of making that correction that I made the formal offer of the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I have received a letter this afternoon from, I think, the husband of the lady who bought the land of the Indian. It is now a part of a town site. The Indian was paid a couple of thousand dollars or thereabouts for it. It is said by her husband that that was enough and that the Indian got the money. Of course that is not an entirely disinterested source of information. He wants his wife's title perfected, and that is the object of this legislation.

I think Congress ought to be very careful about removing restrictions, especially about removing restrictions on homesteads; but it may be in truth that this matter ought to be corrected. I really do not know enough about it to say whether it should be done or not; and in order that it may be investigated a little further I will make the point of order. Time will not hurt it

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Minnesota stated that this same provision was in the bill of last year. I do not know whether he meant to imply that it was passed in the bill and became a law

Mr. SPOONER. The name was wrong in the last bill. Mr. CLAPP. It was spelled "N-o-c-o-s," when it should be " N-o-c-u-s.

Mr. CULBERSON. This is merely to correct a previous law already existing?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and under that law they sold the land. When they came to look the matter up they found the deed in this name, and some one down there sent it up here for correc-

Mr. SPOONER. Congress attempted to do it and failed.
Mr. CLAPP. I simply introduced the amendment to make the correction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin

insist upon his point of order?

Mr. SPOONER. The Chair puts that question to me in rather a peculiar tone of voice, and I do not know but that I ought to withdraw it. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I have understood that, with the exception of this case, which is a mere correction, there is no individual restriction to be removed by this bill.

There is one restriction which the Department Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. CLART. There is one restriction which the repartment recommended and which we adopted the other day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked the question because I have replied to certain people who have written to me asking me to propose amendments that I thought it was inadvisable to propose them; that I did not think those things ought to be put on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. That has been the attitude of the chairman personally as to such applications, and he has not favored any special restriction by individual name.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over begins on line 5, page 50, and reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, any judgment which may be rendered in favor of the said Eastern Cherokees in said suit.

Said suit shall be filed within thirty days from the date of the passage of this act, and shall be prosecuted on behalf of the Eastern Cherokees in the name of their executive committee, as aforesaid, through attorneys employed by them, the compensation for expenses and services rendered in relation to said claim by the said attorneys to be fixed by the Court of Claims upon the termination of said suit.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I interpose a point of order

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I interpose a point of order as to that amendment, first, that it is a private claim and that it is also obnoxious to the fourth subdivision of Rule XVI, which says that "No amendment * * * shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is on page 51, beginning with line 13, and reads as follows:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and empowered in the suit involving the claim of the intermarried white persons in the Cherokee Nation to share in the common property of the Cherokee people, and to be enrolled for such purpose (being Nos. 419, 420, 421, and 422 on the United States Supreme Court docket for October term, 1905) to hear and report to Congress its findings of fact as to the amount which should be paid the attorney and counsel of record for the Cherokee Indians by blood in said suit, in reimbursement of necessary expenses incurred in such proceedings and as reasonable compensation for services rendered in said proceedings, said compensation not to exceed 10 per cent of the values in land and money saved to said Cherokee Indians, said values to be determined by said court. Such court shall further designate the persons, class, or body of persons by whom such payment should equitably be made, and the fund or funds held by the United States out of which the same shall be paid, and enter a decree for the amount so found.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is on page 52, beginning with line 10.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "That," in line 15, page 71, down to and including the word "thereto," in line 19, and insert:

The Indians, and the settlers on the surplus land, in the order named, shall have a preference right for one year from the date of the President's preclamation opening the reservation to settlement to appropriate the waters of the reservation, which shall be filed on and appropriated under the laws of the State of Montana by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on behalf of the Indians taking irrigable allotments and by the settlers under the same law. At the expiration of the one year aforesaid the irrigation system constructed and to be constructed shall be operated under the laws of the State of Montana, and the title to such systems as may be constructed under this act.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachuetts. My colleague will propose an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER: I offer an amendment to make it conform to the rule of appropriations for reclamation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that a large number of those which appear to be signed it is claimed were not signed.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I say a large number of deeds have been recorded which appear to have been signed by the Indians which it is claimed were not signed at all, and I think there ought to be an investigation of it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. If I am not mistaken, the Senate recently authorized the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate these transactions, giving it power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is better, Mr. President. Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. One moment, or we will be getting confused The Senate passed a resolution authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate this matter generally, but the committee can not bring any suit to set aside these alleged fraudulent conveyances. This provision applies more particularly to alleged fraudulent conveyances; and, whatever the Senate does with the appropriation, I would suggest the propriety of retaining that part of the amendment which authorizes the Attorney-General to investigate as to the validity of those conveyances and bring suits to set them aside if he finds them to be fraudulent.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator from Minnesota why we should have two investigations proceeding at the same time? Why not defer this investigation until the investigation to be made by the Committee on Indian Affairs has been made?

Mr. SPOONER. If there is to be an investigation with reference to bringing suit to set aside fraudulent deeds constituting a doubt as to title, or anything of that kind, the investigation ought to be made by the Department that will be charged with the duty of bringing suit and that will have the preparation of the case for trial. It would be very much better that that particular matter should be investigated by the Department of

Mr. LONG. It would certainly be better if it is to bring suits, but the Committee on Indian Affairs should make and complete its investigation before this is ordered. That committee has been authorized to investigate the affairs of this tribe of Indians with the United States—

Mr. SPOONER. That is a different thing.
Mr. LONG. And I think that investigation should be completed before this is begun.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is all right for the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate generally the relation of these Indians to the United States; but as to the particular matter concerning suits that will have to be brought by the Government to set aside fraudulent deeds, I think the Department of Justice is the proper Department to make that investigation.

Mr. CLAPP. I had not understood that there had been any investigation particularly by the committee in relation to the subject which might touch upon the matter of these deeds; but my understanding was that that investigation was limited to the general relation of the Government to these Indians, and not to these transactions in Mexico, whereas this amendment is designed to clothe the Department of Justice with authority to investigate as to the validity of these deeds, and I really think the Senate will make a mistake if it strikes out the provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am not able to segregate this matter from the other matters which are clearly objectionable in this bill. If anybody else is able to do so, I should be very glad to listen to his suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has sustained the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Do I understand the point of order is sustained?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Chair will reconsider his decision.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it too late for the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his point of order?

Decidedly. Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I offer as an amendment the portion of the bill beginning on line 23, on page 98, and continuing down to and including line 19, on page 99. That will separate the

Mr. LONG. That includes the appropriation on lines 18 and 19, to which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] objected.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the appropriation of $25,000 for the prosecution of the suit; and on page 98, in line 7, there is an appropriation of $215,239.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Senator's pardon. My amendment does not include the appropriation to which I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to object, which was the appropriation of $215,239.

Mr. ALDRICH. My objection was to the appropriation of $25,000 out of the Treasury of the United States that was not estimated for. I think this matter ought to go into a separate We certainly can not, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, undertake by this bill to redress all the grievances that exist in the United States or in Mexico; or, if we do, we certainly shall depart very far from what should be the scope of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SPOONER. But we ought to investigate grievances which are brought about by people representing the United States Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the proper place and in the proper way, certainly; but this is not the place or the way to do it.
Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator ever see an estimate for an item in an appropriation bill for such a thing as this?

Mr. ALDRICH. The law provides and the rules of the Senate provide that no amendment shall be made to a general appropriation bill unless it is estimated for through the regular channels

Mr. SPOONER. That may be true, but it is done all the

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his point of order

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not withdraw my point of order with reference to that appropriation.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I will renew the motion and offer the amendment to consist of the language found on page 98, commencing with line 23 on page 98 and extending to and including the word "Indians," in line 15, page 99. That will exclude the appropriation of $25,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary. It is proposed to leave in the bill the language found in the amendment beginning in line 23, page 98, down to and including the words "said Indians," in line 15, page 99.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately investigate any and all conveyances purporting to have been executed and acknowledged in the Republic of Mexico, or elsewhere, of lands situated in Oklahoma and heretofore allotted to Mexican Kickapoo Indians now nonresident in the United States, and if the said conveyances or any of them appear to have been procured by f.aud or fraudulently executed he shall, by his assistant specially employed, appear and defray the costs of proceedings in the proper courts on behalf of said Indians and their trustees to cancel and to set aside said conveyances and to clear the title of said Indians and their trustees to said land from any and all cloud thereon, the result of such fraudulent conveyances. He is further directed to prosecute in the proper courts any and all parties to said frauds, and he is authorized to employ for said purposes some suitable attorney as his assistant who has the confidence of said Indians.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out, after the word "Attor-

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out, after the word "Attorney-General," the words "of the United States."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, line 23, after the word "Attorit is proposed to strike out the words "of the ney-General,"

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator from Minnesota what is the object of lines 13, 14, and 15, which direct the Attorney-General to employ an assistant with certain peculiar qualifications?

Mr. CLAPP. That is a matter I do not care to discuss. think if the Sepator were as familiar with this as some of us perhaps he would not raise the point. But all after the word conveyances," in line 11, can be stricken out, and I make that motion

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "conveyances," in line 11, page 99; so that the amendment will begin in line 23, on page 98, and end with the word "conveyances," line 11, page 99.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator if he expects an investigation can be made in matters like this by the Attorney-General without an appropriation?

Mr. CLAPP. When we get to the deficiency bill there will be no objection, if the Senate sees fit, to make an appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. While I am very anxious for this provision to go in the bill, I make the prediction right now that the Attorney-General will do no investigating under it.

Mr. CLAPP. That may be, but we will have discharged our duty to these people in getting what we could for them. is my only answer to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order against this amendment that it is general legislation, that it adds a new item of appropriation not estimated for, and that it is not made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator, in the present emasculated condition of the amendment, what appropriation it makes?

Mr. LONG. It is to be made the basis of an appropriation, as the Senator himself has just stated. If the proposed amendment is enacted into law, the appropriation is to be made in the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I submit, Mr. President, that it would hardly be sufficient ground for a point of order that an appropriation may be made in another appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in contravention of the rule, and sustains the point of order. This completes the bill with the exception of the amendment passed over on page 83.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what became of the amendment beginning in line 17, on page 110, from which, at the request of the Senator from North Dakota, I withheld the point of order. He says he does not desire me to withhold it any longer.

VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment went out on a The point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I made the point of order and the Chair sustained it, but the Senator from North Dakota asked that I with-He has just advised me that he has no desire that it should be withheld any longer, and therefore, of course, the ruling of the Chair stands, and the amendment goes out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in the amendment already agreed to, on page 118, line 10, the designation "Secretary of the Interior" appears. It should be "Secretary of the Treas-I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to and then to amend it by substituting the word "Treasury" for the word "Interior."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the vote by which the amendment beginning in line 10, page 118, was agreed to be reconsidered. In the absence of objection, the motion is agreed to. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 118, in the amendment beginning in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "Interior" and insert the word "Treasury;" so as to read "That the Secretary of the Treasury," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment on page 68, relating to restrictions which were removed last year from the mixed bloods of the White Earth Reservation, Minn. On the third line of the amendment as offeredcan only refer to it as the line of the amendment—the word "now" appears. It should be "heretofore." I move to strike out the word "now" and substitute the word "heretofore."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as open to amendment, and the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. In the amendment already agreed to on page 69, line 11 of the bill, after the word "Minnesota," it is proposed to strike out the word "now" and insert the word "heretofore."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I call attention now to the amendment on page 83, which we passed over a few moments ago in the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], who is now here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 83.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order was made on that. Mr. KEAN. I made a point of order on that amendment, but withheld it for the Senator from Nebraska, who wishes to make some explanation in regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask what has become of the Colorado amendment, which I suppose will provoke considerable debate. It will be ruled out, but we shall have to discuss it just

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not so certain about it being ruled out. It is quite an assumption on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts to say so.

Mr. LODGE. Under the rulings made to-day by the Senate itself, it must go out. It is out of order in any event.

Mr. PATTERSON. My colleague [Mr. Teller] is very clearly of the impression that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. If we have got to debate it on the merits, it will take some time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not-

Mr. LODGE. I make that prediction now. I have looked into it thoroughly, and I can assure the Senator that if a point of order is not sustained there will be very thorough debate upon it before it passes. Mr. CLAPP. In view of the cheerful information given by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], and asking that we resume the consideration of this bill at the close of the routine business to-morrow morning, I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion. We ought to have a short executive session to dispose of a large number of nominations.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well; I withdraw my motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 8, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

PAY OF ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. CASSEL, from the Committee on Accounts, reported in lieu of House resolution 666 the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 821.

Resolved, That the assistant clerk of the Committee on Pensions, whose appointment was authorized by resolution of the House adopted January 25, 1906, is hereby continued, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for by law, at the rate of $1,600 per annum.

On motion of Mr. Cassel, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION RILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24991. the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Currier in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24991, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if any gentleman from Missouri or elsewhere would like to be heard further in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. I should like to be heard.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. ELLIS. In view of the fact that I have not occupied any time during the general debate on the bill, I should like to have fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that all debate upon the paragraph and amendment be closed in thirtyfive minutes.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for fifteen minues.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have so far refrained from any participation in the debate on this bill. As a member of the committee reporting the measure I have been under some sense of embarrassment. The storm center of opposition to the bill happens to be in Missouri. As a rule nothing is more discreet than silence, and yet I have feared a little lest if I should fail to speak at all some might misunderstand me, might even consider me recreant to the interests of the great Mississippi Val-So upon reflection this morning I have decided that it is due to myself that my attitude in relation to these projects which have been so assertive in this discussion should be plainly defined.

One does not have to be a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this House very long to learn that that committee can not always do what it would. At best it is subject to limitations—limitations of public sentiment (though I am happy to say in passing that this is not so circumscribed as formerly), limitations of revenues and resources available for this class of internal improvements, and under the further limitation which inheres in the manifest inability of the Government to expend more than a given amount of money wisely and economically or to do more than a given amount of work well and thoroughly in a fixed period of time. Appeals—persistent, meritorious appeals—for aid of worthy projects come up from all sections of the country. They are so multiplied that it is not only impossible to grant them all, but it is absolutely necessary to deny much the greater part of them. It becomes necessary, therefore, to adopt a policy of elimination and selection, dropping out here a project, retaining there a project, postponing this, reducing that, until the aggregate shall be within the limitations fixed upon the committee

Now, I believe nothing is more important to this House or to the country than that this committee should reach conclusions upon these matters. The committee deliberations should be earnest and thorough, and they are earnest and thorough; but decisions should be made and a verdict be found and returned to this body. Otherwise there would be no river and harbor bills reported. Otherwise there could be no legislation in behalf of our great harbors and waterways. We all know how important it is, in the administration of justice in our courts, that juries agree; that they strive earnestly to harmonize their views and reconcile their opinions. The interest of litigants demand this. I think the parallel is readily observable. But it is of even greater importance that in the work of this committee, dealing with these multiplied projects affecting localities all over the country, findings should be made upon the issues submitted that will express the harmonized views and reconciled opinions of the members of the committee. If mistakes are made or injustice is inadvertently done, the wrong can be righted in another bill. I go one step further; I assert that the interests of this House and the interests of the country at large demand that when the several members of this committee have agreed and brought in their verdict every Member should be expected to respond to the poll in this House, not only with reference to projects in other sections and other districts than his own, but with reference to projects in his own section or district—"this is my verdict." [Applause.] Otherwise no river and harbor bill would ever pass this House. I do not, of course, contend that there may not be exceptional instances where a Member may dissent in committee and reserve his right to urge that dissent on the floor of this House; but I do insist that such instances should be most exceptional, because the very nature of this legislation demands that the rule of conduct for members of the committee should be as I have stated it.

I am particularly interested that my attitude should be understood for another reason. It is no accident in the distribution of favors or responsibilities of this House that I find myself upon this committee. I sought this place. In procuri it I brought to bear all the influences that I could marshal. In procuring sought the opportunity to do during my career of service in this House, in the most advantageous place, all in my power to promote the great waterway interests of the Mississippi Valley. To be false to a single stream or a single deserving project in that great system of waterways would be to be false to myself, to my dearest purposes and ambitions. I believe in the Missis-sippi River. I have an unfaltering faith in that great stream. Whatever may be done or fail to be done in this bill, the Mississippi River will soon become a great channel of commerce. I unfeignedly rejoice that so much has been done for that river in this bill. The upper river, from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul, has been so well cared for and so generously treated that those interests are well content. The river below Cairo has been so well cared for and so generously treated that none of the interests there will complain at all. As to the middle reach now under consideration, it is true that a halt has been called. Assign whatever reason—whether to reconnoiter, to spy out a little ahead, to await new orders, or whatever you may-I think the action of the committee should be construed as a halt in the development of that reach of the river. I would that this were not so. I find myself in the position of a member of court constrained to announce the result of its deliberations while yielding a most reluctant concurrence. But, Mr. Chairman, the decision upon this project has not been without due deliberations. It is only fair to the committee that the considerations which have influenced their decision to materially reduce the appropriations for this middle reach during the next two years be fairly and clearly presented. The considerations are threefold. In the first place, the almost unexplainable loss in tonnage upon that stretch of the river in recent years has been a matter of great weight with the committee.

I confess that for myself, as I have gone into these facts during the consideration of this bill, I have been greatly sur-Understanding some conditions which prevailed in the West and which prevail there to-day, I am disposed to be considerate, but I can not shut my eyes to the fact that little freight is moving upon that important stretch of that great river. The business interests of the city of St. Louis, members of that great organization there—the Business Men's League—can not afford to shut their eyes to this fact or fail to appreciate the significance of it. I say I am disposed to be considerate. I know something of the problem that pertains to every interior river in this country when tonnage is to be maintained upon its waters. You can launch a ship upon the Great Lakes and you will incur no very serious opposition from railways; you are not even likely to create real competition with the railways. To the contrary, the chances are that you will be contributing directly to the business of some railway as you increase the tonnage in any direction on one of the Great Lakes. Many of the great projects up there that are receiving liberal aid in this bill are really supplemental to railway operations and not in competition with them at all. But you launch your boat on the Mississippi, on the Ohio, or upon the Missouri and you meet competition and you meet it quick. You meet competition that organizes for opposition and prepares to give battle. Let me illustrate by an instance: A dozen years ago it became perfectly apparent to the commercial and industrial interests along the Missouri River that the great stream should be utilized again as a waterway. There had been in the past a splendid commerce upon it. It appeared to investors that it would be profitable to restore boats to the river and resume navigation of it. A company was organized for the purpose, and three splendid boats were built and launched upon the stretch between Kansas City and St. Louis.

No business enterprise was ever entered upon which gave greater promise of profit to its promoters. That stretch of the Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis then paralleled a magnificent railway tonnage. To-day it parallels a larger tonnage of freight per twenty-four hours than any other equal stretch of river in the United States. What was the re-The boats began to get business and to earn profits for their owners. But no sooner were those boats in operation than the railways paralleling that river organized a determined opposition, highly resolved to put them out of business and drive them from the stream. They acted concertedly, of course. They immediately reduced their regular tariff rates along that stretch to less than one-third the schedule which had formerly prevailed. They did not stop even there. They went out and deliberately underbid the boats and carried the freight at any price the shippers were willing to pay to keep the traffic off the water. The result need hardly be told. The stock in the boat line passed from the promoters, the boats were sold down the river, competition ceased, and the schedules were restored. I say I am considerate in relation to this charge of reduced tonnage. I have no doubt that the experience upon the Missouri River which I have related has been duplicated between St. Louis and Cairo. I have not the slightest doubt that to combinations and to methods of this character can in large part be attributed the dissolution of the St. Louis boat line to which reference has been made in this debate. I have even less doubt that another cause and another condition has contributed not a little to the loss of freight for boats and the disappearance of the boats themselves along the Mississippi between St. Louis and Cairo. That cause and condition has been the rebate system until recently in vogue between large shippers of freight and the railroad companies. The system of rebates has kept boats from the Missouri, and I have not the slightest doubt it has kept boats from the Mississippi. In all kindness I would ask the business concerns of St. Louis which have been receiving rebates to the prejudice of river traffic, would it not be well. would it not be profitable to themselves and fair to the public right there at home, to employ the period which shall intervene between this and 'the preparation of another river and harbor bill in undoing the mischief they have deliberately done in their cupidity by restoring the tonnage they have diverted from their great waterway and given to the railroads? If we are to restore navigation, if we are to have the benefit of that rate regulation which river navigation will afford, our shipping interests must cease relations of intrigue with the railroads to destroy waterway competition. [Applause.] So much for the loss of traffic proposition.

The second consideration to which I would refer is the failure of engineering authorities to agree upon the proper plan of development for this reach of the river. No one will deny that the Rivers and Harbors Committee and this House must look somewhere for authority on these great engineering questions. The simple fact is that the engineers are at loggerheads. It is not enough to assert, as asserts my colleague from St. Louis [Mr. Bartholdt], that the engineers who have heretofore been in charge of that stretch of river have held certain views or that a majority of engineers heretofore in charge have expressed views and adhered to plans which would justify larger appropriations. I confess to much sympathy with the attitude of my colleague, but it is not unnatural that the committee should be influenced by the opinion which is expressed by those in authority to-day. The engineers should get together. This House will not be disposed to complain, nor do I believe the business This House interests of St. Louis should much complain because the committee has decided to leave matters in statu quo-simply holding and preserving what has been accomplished-until the engineers do get together and determine upon a definite, fixed plan of development for that stretch of river. This leads me to the general observation that something should be done to prevent the recurrence of conditions of this kind. Something should be done to afford greater stability of plans and purposes in the development of our rivers and waterways the country over. Changes of engineers are too frequent. There is not continuity enough to make work effective, economic, and satisfactory. I am happy to say that the Rivers and Harbors Committee have taken up this matter, have started an investigation into ways and means of improving conditions. It is nothing short of a shame that after millions have been spent, as in this case we are now considering, in pursuit of plans deliberately prepared and recommended by the engineers and adopted by Congress, the work should be brought to a standstill; that discontinuance should be threatened because of a change of engineers or a conflict of opinion between engineers. [Applause.]

But the third important consideration taken into account by the committee has been the proposed deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. Nothing could be wider of the mark, noth-ing unfairer to the committee nor unfairer to the great interests of the West, which approve and look forward to the construction of this great waterway, than the contention of Members in this debate that the action of this committee should be interpreted as opposition to that great project. I deny that the committee have displayed opposition. On the contrary, I assert that the action taken, the appropriation of $190,000 for a further survey, disproves this contention. Even the halt called in the work upon this stretch of river to which I have been adverting demonstrates a friendly disposition toward that splendid undertaking. I believe I betray no confidences when I pro-claim as my opinion that a majority of the members of the River and Harbor Committee of this House believe that the commercial, industrial interests of the country will soon demand the construction of the deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. I believe I may with like propriety declare that, in my opinion, such minority of the committee as are not prepared to assent to that proposition in its entirety at least believe that the time is very likely to come, and to come soon, when the people of this country will clamor for the construction of that waterway almost irrespective of cost.

For my part I have not abated one jot or tittle of my zeal for that magnificent enterprise. I believe in it. As I said in the great convention held in its interest at St. Louis last November, I esteem it the grandest conception which has challenged American industrialism in half a century. The great State of New York is constructing an eastern extension, an eastern arm, of the Great Lake system to the Atlantic Ocean by deepening the Erie canal to 12 feet, at a cost of $100,000,000. The people of the State of Illinois have begun the construction of a southwestern extension or arm of that same Great Lake system down into the very heart and center of the Mississippi Valley. The people of Illinois will soon have put $75,000,000 into the work and the General Government, at the instance of the people of the West, and upon the merits of the proposition, will supplement this munificent contribution to a great public work, and the waterway from Lake Michigan to the mouth of the Missouri will be built. When that is done, and concurrent with it, will come the deepened channel from the mouth of the Missouri to Cairo, and then will be realized in this country a combined system of inland waterways comparable with which there is nothing in the round world. [Applause.]

If a mistake has been made in the verdict of the committee

If a mistake has been made in the verdict of the committee as to this great project in which the people of St. Louis are so much concerned, the mistake may soon be corrected. The halt that has been called can only be temporary. While I confess that it would have been much more agreeable to myself and to my views if at least the appropriations in the last preceding bill for this stretch of the river might have been continued in this one so that the plan heretofore prevailing might be carried forward until it should be definitely changed, still I have been much constrained and reconciled by the reflection that the action denying such larger appropriations is not final and, as I have said, the effect can only be temporary.

have said, the effect can only be temporary.

I realize that we have crossed the threshold of a new area in waterway development in this country, I sincerely hope that the sentiment which I believe prevails in this country demanding annual appropriations for waterways will find response in a declaration of policy in the Sixtieth Congress. I trust there will be a river and harbor bill next year and I am comforted by an abiding faith that if there is one, not only these vexing questions—these engineering problems—but also these doubts in relation to tonnage and the use of the river will also have been settled and the winter of discontent now afflicting my colleagues of St. Louis can be made glorious summer. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I regard this amendment as the most objectionable one which has been presented in the consideration of this bill. There was some justification for that one providing for the deep waterway. Some six years ago I said in Chicago that it was an argument for a navigable channel to the Mississippi that the drainage board at local cost had provided navigation for some 30 miles, and having said so at Chicago I am perfectly willing to say it here. But this amendment would involve a degree of wastefulness and extravagance unparalleled.

Before going on with the specific amendment under consideration I want to offer a few general considerations to the committee. The great need of the country as regards river and harbor improvements is more intelligent consideration of the subject. When any improvement is advocated there is a uniform succession of events. Whether objectionable or unobjectionable, there is, in the first place, an agitation for it in the community, sometimes started by a single promoter. If it is objectionable or of doubtful expediency, the conservative element at first looks with disfavor upon it; but it soon appears that if the improvement is adopted by Congress, it will involve the spending of money from the National Treasury in that locality, and all will begin to say: "We will be so much ahead anyway by the money which will be expended here, and we can not afford to oppose it. Maybe it will be of benefit anyway."

Then the boards of trade, the commercial bodies, and the press take it up, and the moment anyone opposes or questions the project they begin to abuse him. It is a common thing to begin by saying that all the money of the river and harbor bill is expended upon creeks and insignificant streams. That exploded falsehood is still living, and very common in some of the communities in the United States which have been very much favored in the way of appropriations. However unworthy their proposed improvement may be, they will no doubt adopt a campaign of attack upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and especially upon its chairman. The promoters will accuse the members on the ground that they are partial to their own localities. They overlook the fact, as I stated yesterday, that in this expenditure of less than $25,000,000 a year we are struggling along against $400,000,000 or $600,000,000 of demands urgently pressed upon us. I have said this much because what is most needed is more accurate information and a more temperate advocacy of projects.

There are three cities in the country where a perfect carnival of misrepresentation, of abuse, and of villification has been indulged in, and I regret to say that I have to mention one of them. That is the city of St. Louis. This has originated for the most part from a few officers and members of a body known as the "Business Men's League." One of them is now, or has been, going through the South prosecuting a campaign of misrepresentation. The other gives his activities to St. Louis and that locality, and sends resolutions containing untruthful and abusive matter to the Illinois legislature and to the Missouri legislature, asking these bodies to pass them. They have adopted a plan of campaign in which the chairman is accused of partiality to his own locality. They sent out a map with the misstatement that it is issued by the Geological Survey, and which designates a canal as extending from Cleveland to Pittsburg, intimating or alleging that I am interested in that canal, and thus opposed to the deep waterway from Chicago to St. Louis. Why, Mr. Chairman, that proposed canal starts from a point on Lake Erie 54 miles east from Cleveland. In that city we look upon it somewhat coldly. If I had followed the prevailing sentiment in my own locality, I should have voted.

against it, but I can not afford to stand up against a great improvement of that kind, in which a near-by city, that of Pittsburg, is so greatly interested.

But this is made a hook for the false accusation, for the unscrupulous misrepresentation, that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is interested in another waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. I say not this so much to defend myself, because it has appeared in this House, within a few days past, that the membership will not tolerate a campaign of falsehood and vilification. [Applause.] It is not for myself I am speaking, but for orderly, decent advocacy of public improvements.

Well, now let us come to this specific project. Why, I really think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and those who have advocated $1,000,000 a year for this stretch of the stream lack the sense of humor, and when they attack the chairman and say that he has a personal, open interest in the Detroit River and the Lakes let us make a comparison. Up to date the Government of the United States has expended $12,-417,000 on that portion of the Mississippi between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio. It has expended from the lower part of Lake Huron, on the channels in St. Clair River and Lake and in Detroit River to Lake Erie, $7,100,000. Let us compare their tonnage. The tonnage here in this stretch of the Mississippi is 440,000 tons. I leave out the ferriage at St. Louis, for that no more depends on this improvement than does the ferry between New Orleans and Algiers depend upon the completion of the Panama Canal—not a bit.

There is a tonnage of 440,000 tons in this stretch of the river as against a tonnage of 55,000,000 tons in the Detroit River. One hundred and twenty-five times as much tonnage, and yet there has been expended $5,300,000 more on this stretch of the Mississippi than on this portion of the Detroit Mississippi than on this portion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriations to tonnage is as 200 to 1, and yet peoportion of appropriation of app ple come in here as if wrong had been done them. Why, I should think when they had made their arguments and made their pitiful pleas for justice, as they call it, they would have gone out into Statuary Hall and there performed a cake walk in which their sides would shake and they would bend double with laughter. But they did not see the absurdity of their position at all. It is sometimes said that the owl has the unique distinction of being the most solemn of all birds and of all bipeds, but when I listened to one of the gentlemen from Missouri I thought the owl must lose that poor, paltry distinction, because in describing the wrongs of this stretch of the Mississippi River he was even more solemn than the familiar bird. [Laughter and applause.]

What has been the history of that improvement? In 1896 there were 1,200,000 tons, now 440,000—reduced to one-third; and I want to admit to this House that one of the mistakes that I have made as chairman of this committee was in allowing $650,000 a year for four years to be put into the bill in 1902. I thought we ought to deal generously with that stretch of the river; that we ought to make it possible to have the best possible navigation from St. Louis to New Orleans. There was a great exposition that was soon to occur at the former city, but the tonnage dropped down year by year, and the bald misstatement has been made that it was because of less appropriations that the traffic fell off at that place. Let us see what the facts are about that. In the second year of this expenditure of $650,000 a year, which was to continue for four years, the barge company of St. Louis sold their barges and went out of business. It was when we were expending $650,000 a year that the traffic fell off, and when it came to the bill of 1905, $915,000 had been left on hand at the close of the preceding The engineers simply could not spend the money.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. WATSON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time have I taken?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Five minutes and a little

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not think I shall want all of

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is that within the thirty-five minutes, is the Chair to understand? Debate on this paragraph has been limited to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I could have ten minutes, and that would allow the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask to extend the time so that the gentleman from Ohio may have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Exclusive of the thirty-five minutes?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio proceed for ten minutes, which time is not to be included within the thirty-five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Going down all the while, traffic dropping off. Now, there is another feature of this to which nobody has called attention which I think should receive the attention of the House. The rate on grain from St. Louis to New Orleans, according to the statements made by the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, is only one-third more per tonmile to-day than it is from Duluth to Buffalo by the connecting channels and waters of the Great Lakes. The difference of a third can very largely be explained by the superior facilities, especially loading and unloading machinery, which are in existence on the Great Lakes. Nevertheless, with this low rate they do not use the waterway. They practically ship no grain at all. What does that show? It shows that St. Louis is not a terminal point for the shipment of grain. It shows that the shippers of St. Louis do not intend to use this channel for the ordinary class of shipments.

Now, let us look at the estimates of the cost of this proposed improvement. In 1881 it was estimated that it would cost $16,000,000 to carry out the improvement of this stretch of the river and secure 8 feet of water. In 1903, I believe, after $11,000,000 had been expended, leaving apparently a balance of $5,000,000 to be appropriated, they looked over the ground again and computed that at that time to get the 8 feet would cost $20,000,000 more, a cost of over $30,000,000 instead of $16,000,000, as at first estimated. That is, they estimated it would cost $4,000,000 more to finish than they did before work was commenced in 1881 and after $11,000,000 had been expended.

The phantom of completion was further and further away-$16,000,000 in 1881, $20,000,000 in 1903, after spending $11,-000,000. It was reported also that it would cost $400,000 a year to maintain it, and the Board of Engineers made recommendation that we abandon that expensive plan and resort to That recommendation was followed in the bill of 1905. Why did we do this? It was because of its insignificant commerce, less than that of the Thames River of Connecticut, on which we are appropriating in this bill $30,000; almost less than that of Raccoon Creek, on which we have spent in all $20,000 or $30,000; far less than on Bayou Teche, on which we have expended about $100,000. We could not continue the ab-surd and extravagant wastefulness of money that was there involved. Now, there is another feature about this. a plan for an inland waterway. I have no confidence, and I do not believe any engineer of any standing has any confidence, that an open channel on the Mississippi River from St. Louis to Cairo can be improved so as to provide this 14 feet. other plan besides the present one must be resorted to in order to accomplish that result. Now, just see the inconsistency. Gentlemen come in here and with one breath advocate a million dollars a year, and with another breath they advocate a 14-foot waterway, the construction of which will probably necessitate the entire or partial abandonment of the plan under which we are asked to work and spend that million dollars a year. I want to say just one word more about the depth. After $11,000,000 had been expended, it was estimated that it would cost $20,000,000 more to get 8 feet.

Now, what are the facts? For three years past they have had 8 feet right along. "Oh," but they say, "it is true we have had this 8-foot depth, but what we want is confidence." My fellow-Members, confidence comes too high when it costs $20,000,000 to give it, or even a million dollars a year. I think we had betto give it, or even a minion donars a year. I think we had better spend our money where they already have confidence and where they are doing business. Now, it is said, it is true, we can construct this inland waterway inside the channel of the river. I want to put these people of the Business Men's League They say that it is a coinage of my brain that a to the test. lateral canal is necessary part of the way. Now, if that is so, let them consent that there be a provision in the survey provided for in the next paragraph to the effect that the survey shall not be made if the lateral canal is necessary, and if they will not consent that such a reservation go in I trust they will have the manliness to correct the misstatements they have been making and with which they have been filling the newspapers for the last few weeks. Either do what you say is right and consent to it, or else in manly fashion admit you are wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] may have five minutes if he desires it. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] finds fault with the attitude of the people of St. Louis and the Business Men's League, the largest business organization of that city. If the members of the committee will remember what is proposed in this bill, they will certainly not be surprised at the state of feeling which prevails in the city of St. Louis to-day. At a time when there was no agitation with respect to large appropriations for the Mississippi River, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors made an annual appropriation of $650,000 for that section of the river which we regard as the most important section, because it is the weakest link in the chain of water transportation along the Mississippi River—$650,000 for four years, at a time when there was no agitation at all. Since that time the people have been aroused to the necessity and the importance of navigation along that reach. Organizations have been formed in St. Louis, in Missouri, in Illinois, along the whole stretch of the Mississippi, for the purpose of prevailing upon the Congress to increase that amount of $650,000 if possible. Instead of that, gentlemen, the amount which has usually been awarded to us has been cut down from $650,000 to $250,000. This reduction of our appropriation simply means that the general plan of systematic and permanent improvement has been completely abandoned. In fact, the river has been abandoned and the mere system of dredging has been resorted to. Is it a wonder, then, if the people of St. Louis feel keenly the disregard and the slight that is involved in this reduction of what they believe themselves en-Their feeling to-day borders on indignation on actitled to? count of the action of the committee. But I am not responsible, nor are other friends here of the amendment I have offered responsible, for what construction the newspapers may have put upon the action of the committee. We have never made an assault upon the chairman. I have never questioned his integrity or knowledge of river matters, but I have questioned his judgment in this respect, and I have protested against his official action, and I have asked that the judgment of the House be substituted for the judgment of the chairman and of the committee in this respect.

The main argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] is that we have had 8 feet and have not made use of it. I have printed into to-day's Record a statement from one of the oldest steamboat men on the Mississippi River, which goes to show that the claim of the Army engineers that we had 8 feet the year round is absolutely erroneous; that at many places we never had more than 4½, 5, and 6 feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, may I have a few minutes more

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much more time is there?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman may take two, and I

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is one reason, Mr. Chairman, why navigation has not been revived. It is because we did not have the 8 feet which the Army engineers claimed we had, and another reason is that one of the barge lines mentioned by my friend from Ohio went out of business. Why did they go out of business? Because of an alliance they made with the rail-It is true our railroad rates are low to the Gulf. It is true that most freight is sent by rail on that account; but if the very existence of the river has had the effect of holding the rates down and reducing them to a reasonable and low level, what would be the effect on railroad rates if a systematic and permanent improvement of the river will be entered upon?

The chairman is correct when he says that if his theory is right the money heretofore expended on this stretch has been entirely wasted; but that means an indictment of the committee, and indictment of the Congresses who voted these appropriations, and an indictment of the Army engineers who made the plans for that improvement. And if it is impossible, Mr. Chairman, to improve the Mississippi River on that reach, then the Mississippi River is a different proposition from all the river propositions in the whole country or in the world, or we stand here confessing—making the humiliating confession—that our engineers are incompetent to make improvements that engineers in other countries are making in other rivers.

I revert just for one moment, Mr. Chairman, to the criticism the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] has passed upon the Business Men's League. That organization has made it its main purpose to secure some improvement of the Mississippi River according to the permanent plans of the en-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, very briefly I will answer several statements of the gentleman-the only ones that I regard as necessary to be answered.

First, in regard to the depth of 8 feet. The Government engineer, Colonel Sears, in charge writes me this under date of January 16, 1907. After stating that there was 8 feet of depth except for a very few days of the years 1904 and 1906, he says:

One or two cranky pilots have disputed the above, but our official records, based on frequent and accurate soundings along the axis of the navigable channel, show that 8 feet had been maintained except for very short periods, each of a few days only.

I will accept his statement rather than the statement of anyone else. I add all of his letter, which gives information upon tonnage as well.

Chairman River and Harbor Committee,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In reply to your telegram of yesterday, received in the afternoon, I have this morning sent you the telegram, copy herewith. I send you herewith more of details.

Fall, 1904. (Chief of Engineers, 1905, p. 1602.) "Eight feet depth maintained except for short periods (until a dredge could reach the shoal), when a least depth of 7 feet was found."

Fall, 1905. (Chief Engineers, 1906, p. 1406.) "At no time during the navigable season of low water, which closed in December on account of ice and cold weather, was there less than 8 feet depth in the channel."

Fall, 1906. (Dredge reports, uppublished). "Exception of the control of the channel."

count of ree and cold weather, was there less than 8 feet depth in the channel.

Fall, 1906. (Dredge reports, unpublished.) "Eight feet depth maintained throughout season except in September, 7 feet, and October, 6½ feet, each on one bar only, and but for a short time until a dredge could be placed for the deepening."

The river stages during the low-water seasons 1904 and 1906 were almost typical, conforming to the average for about forty-five years. The stage in 1905 was unusually high.

One or two cranky pilots have disputed the above, but our official records, based on frequent and accurate soundings along the axis of the navigable channel, show that 8 feet has been maintained, excepting for very short periods, each of a few days only.

As to tonnage, we have to rely on reports of the Merchants' Exchange, that for 1906 not having yet been made up.

The following table gives details for ten years, 1896 to 1905, both inclusive.

The tonnage is cargo tonnage, not registered tonnage.

(Iron Mountain Railroad and wagon ferry), and wagon ferries at several other points are not included in above tabular statement.

It will be noted that the river tonnage proper, in and out of St. Louis, has fallen off from 1,244,000 tons in 1896 to 370,000 tons in 1905; that the ferry tonnage—i. e., across the river, east and west—has increased from 2,530,000 tons in 1896 to 6,685,000 tons in 1905, and that the local or way tonnage between St. Louis and Cairo has fluctuated within the limits of 76,000 tons in 1896 to 17,000 tons in 1902 and up to 70,000 tons in 1905.

Very respectfully,

CLINTON B. SEARS,

Lt. Col., Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.

CLINTON B. SEARS, Lt. Col., Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.

And as regards the amount we are providing, $250,000 a year, I want to say to the House it is without a single exception the most generous appropriation that is given to any river or channel in the United States in this bill in proportion to its tonnage, except, of course, where we are beginning the work and no results have yet been obtained. That is the situation. They are complaining of an appropriation which is the largest given to any river, lake, channel, or harbor in the United States in proportion to its tonnage.

The $250,000 will be disbursed, as it is estimated, in the manner I stated a short time ago—$150,000 for dredging, $85,000 for maintenance of the contraction works in existence, and $15,000 will be available for any emergency work they may require. The still further absurdity of this demand for larger appropriations will become apparent when I say to the committee that the amount expended in twenty years on the Mississippi River be-tween the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio is larger than the amount that in an equal period Germany expended on the Rhine, on all that portion of the river within the Empire of Germany, both for maintenance and for new construction, yet the Rhine has a tonnage of 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 to the 440,000 of this stretch.

Mr. RODENBERG. You will admit, however, that in making this report you disregarded the recommendation of the engineers

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It follows the report of the board of engineers of 1903

Mr. RODENBERG. He estimated for $650,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The Chief of Engineers gave that Mr. RODENBERG. Upon the suggestion of the local engineers. Their report made a recommendation of $650,000, and you give $250,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is the manner in which the gentleman reads it; but this estimate was based, no doubt, on one appropriation for two years.

Mr. RODENBERG. In one year he says in his report.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman merely needs information upon that subject.

Mr. RODENBERG. The chairman of the committee had better read the reports of the engineers.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The information is perfectly open to anyone, and while this phraseology may say for a year, it is perfectly well known that it is regarded as for a period of two years

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Division!

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 17, noes 95. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War may appoint a board of five members, to be composed of three members of the Mississippi River Commission, one of whom shall be the president of such Commission, and two engineer officers of the United States Army, to examine the Mississippi River below St. Louis and report, at the earliest date by which a thorough examination can be made, upon the practicability and desirability of constructing and maintaining a navigable channel 14 feet deep and of suitable width from St. Louis to the mouth of the river, either by the improvement of said river or by a canal or canals for part of said route. In its report the board shall cover the probable cost of such improvement, the probable cost of maintenance, and the present and prospective commerce of said waterway, both local and general, upstream as well as downstream, and the said board may consider in connection with the examination herein provided for the survey of a proposed waterway from Chicago to St. Louis, heretofore reported; it shall also report whether other plans of improvement can be devised by which the probable demands of traffic, present and prospective, can be adequately met, and the sum of $190,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the making of such survey, of which amount only $100,000 shall be available, unless in presenting a plan for such waterway it shall be necessary, in the judgment of said board, to make a survey for a lateral canal or canals; and the force, plant, and records of the Mississippi River Commission shall be available for the use of said board in making said examination.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I suggest an amendment which

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I suggest an amendment which should come in at the close of line 9, "Provided, That no survey shall be made if, on preliminary examination, it shall appear that a lateral canal shall be required over any part of such route." I understood the gentleman from Missouri was to receive a telegram from his Business Men's League.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I interrupt the gentleman? The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing now before the House to consider

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please repeat his amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. "Provided, That no survey shall be made if, upon preliminary examination, it shall appear that a lateral canal or canals will be required for any portion of the such route."

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no survey shall be made if, upon preliminary examination, it shall appear that a lateral canal or canals will be required on any portion of such route."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It has been said so repeatedly that any suggestion of a lateral canal was a subterfuge to defeat this project that I think at least we should have an expression from the House; and if there is no necessity for any lateral canal let us have this provision.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD and Mr. LORIMER rose.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to interrupt the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. While it may be possible to construct a waterway capable of carrying 14-foot ships between Cairo and St. Louis in the bed of the Mississippi River, the Engineering Department may discover that, in order to construct and maintain permanently a 14-foot waterway between St. Louis and Cairo, it will be necessary in part to construct a lateral canal. The survey between Chicago and the city of St. Louis has demonstrated the necessity of a canal between Alton and St. Louis Bay. Every person in the Mississippi Valley with whom I have discussed the subject, and I have discussed it with thousands upon thousands of people within the last twelve years, are in favor of constructing a canal as reported and recommended by the Engineer Board. Those who are interested in the Mississippi Valley care very little whether they go to the sea partially by way of a lateral canal or go down all the way in the bed of the Mississippi River; and if we are to have a waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, we have evidence now that we must have lateral canals on part of the route. But what man, Mr. Chairman, believes there is any possibility of ever having a waterway between the city of Chicago and the city of New Orleans capable of bearing boats drawing 14 feet of water if we are to abandon the lateral-canal project or canal feature of this project? And I know that the chairman of the committee understands the condition, and I know that every man who favors the waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf is in favor of getting to the Gulf the best way he can, whether it be by way of the Mississippi River from the town of Grafton all the way, or by the way of lateral canals part of the way and the Mississippi River the balance of the route.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it will be possible for me within five minutes to explain to the House the peculiar position which the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burton of Ohio] assumes in offering this amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for an interruntion?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Pardon me; no, not now. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to ask a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Because I have not made my statement By the defeat of my amendment just five minutes ago we have been turned down—that is, our appropriation has been reduced to $250,000, upon the theory that if that deep waterway is to be built, it might be necessary to build a lateral canal along the middle reach of the Mississippi; hence any amount of money spent on the river between St. Louis and Cairo might be money thrown away. Now, the chairman takes the position that a lateral canal shall not be built, or that surveys shall not be made if a lateral canal is necessary. Hence, in order to be logical, if we should consent to his amendment, he would have to consent to a reconsideration of the last item and an increase of the appropriation for that stretch of the river. [Applause.] Now, is it logical or not?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman will allow me, I did not state that as the main reason. I stated it as a reason, and I may now state to the gentleman that the organization for which the gentleman has vouched has widely scattered the statement that it was a mere evasion or subterfuge, this suggestion that a lateral canal might be needed.

The gentleman himself has vouched for the statement that no lateral canal will be required. I want to know whether that statement is based upon truth and good faith or not. If it is based on truth and good faith, you will consent to this amendment going in. If it is not, why then the statements that have been made should be promptly contradicted.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the dis-tinguished gentleman from Ohio states here on the floor that he will yield his judgment and the judgment of the committee to a request of the Business Men's League of St. Louis. If the Business Men's League of St. Louis says that no lateral canal is necessary and that they do not want a lateral canal-that they want a channel in the Mississippi River-then the chairman and his committee respectfully bow to the judgment of the Business Men's League. That is the position assumed in this amendment, and you can not put any other construction on it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say that I have wired the Business Men's League last night. Up to this moment I have not received a reply, and I consider it of very little importance, because I do not for one moment think that the chairman of the committee, an expert in matters of that kind, would place any reliance upon the judgment of a civic organization in the city Or would he?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman will allow me, I think, in view of my experience with them, I am very much justified in saying that I should not place any reliance.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in this regard I ought to make another statement.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If my time can be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer as to that.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I was going to follow the gentleman from St. Louis on this matter, and I want to know which way he is going to vote. Is he going to vote for the amendment or not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I shall be guided in this instance as the committee and the House have been guided—by the judgment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. For one I think the gentleman from St. Louis is absolutely right in his position.

[The time of Mr. Bartholdt having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to make this amendment plain to the House in as little time as I possibly can. We want a deep waterway to the Gulf. It may be necessary that in some parts of the river a lateral canal must be constructed. The engineers have already reported that for a distance of 14 miles above St. Louis, and not below——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What does the gentleman say is the distance from Alton to St. Louis?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Fourteen miles. By railroad it is 14

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The railroad guide does not agree with the gentleman. It says 24 miles.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Whether 14 or 24 makes no difference; but the engineers have reported that along that part of the proposed deep waterway a lateral canal might become necessary. Now, if that is the case, this amendment would defeat the survey absolutely, because it has already been established that along that short distance a lateral canal is necessary.

Hence, as you will see, if we want a survey, and if that is all we can get, we must content ourselves with it, and we must vote down this amendment. If you vote the amendment up, there will be no survey, because it is already established that a lateral canal for a part of the way is necessary. But my statements with respect to the necessity of a lateral canal related to that part below St. Louis, and my statements were based upon the judgment of the engineers, who stated that no canal was necessary there, that the river could be deepened sufficiently, and that the channel could be placed in the river itself. It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I insist that this amendment should be withdrawn or voted down.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman from Missouri was to have some more time.

Mr. ELLIS. With reference to another matter which has been passed upon, I do not know that I care to make any posthumous observations on that subject.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think I can bring this discussion speedily to a close.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to ask the chairman of the committee to withdraw this amendment. I hope I need not suggest that it will hardly be considered a committee amend-I have consulted with my colleagues of the committee around me here, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Humphreys]. They join with me in expressing the hope that, however great he deems the provocation to press it, the chairman will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the committee in acting upon this amendment will remember the story of King Solomon and his decision. Two claimants for a child were brought before him and he made the suggestion that the child be cut in two and half given to one and half to the other. One of the claimants agreed to that, but the other demurred, and he decided very promptly in favor of the claimant who wanted the child to be left entire and alive.

Now, there are persons in the Mississippi Valley who I think would be willing to have this canal end at St. Louis, and thus cut it in two. They ridicule the idea that a lateral canal would be necessary for any part of the country between St. Louis and Cairo. There are others who favor a waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, and I am inclined to think we should respect their wishes. Consequently I withdraw this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two minutes' time. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the chairman of the committee questioned the accuracy of my statement that the Board of Engineers had recommended an annual appropriation of $650,000 for improvement work between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri. On page 463 of the report of the Chief of Engineers I find this statement:

The new appropriation asked for is the estimated expenditure for one year only and should be increased by authorization under continuing contracts for other years by at least the same sum annually.

On page 464 I find this:

Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, for works of improvement and for maintenance, in addition to the balance unexpended July 1, 1906, $650,000.

The gentleman accused me a moment ago of not being informed on this subject. I submit the report of the Chief of Engineers for his consideration.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In a moment I will answer the gentleman. I did not question his statement; I said he should, however, be informed in reference to all our estimates.

Mr. RODENBERG. But the gentleman said that this appropriation was for two years.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will explain that. The formal recommendation is for one year-that is, the amount reported is for the fiscal year ending June 30 of such and such a year-but it is perfectly well understood that every recommendation must be considered in connection with the fact that our river and harbor bills are biennial, and hence the habit of recommending for one fiscal year an amount which will be sufficient for two years.

Mr. RODENBERG. But the engineer specifically states that the same amount should be increased annually $650,000, and the gentleman from Ohio made the statement a moment ago that his recommendation covered two years. The gentleman will find it on page 463.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman must also recollect that we are providing here for four years, and that I distinctly stated that we took the responsibility of lowering the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. RODENBERG. And the gentleman will also remember that the engineer said that these continuing contracts for other years should be increased by at least the same sum annually, whether it is four years or ten years.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman knows very well that if we were to adopt all the recommendations of the engineers, The gentleman knows very well that for maintenance as well as for new work, we would have hundreds of millions on our hands. We are not following their recommendations in every case. We can not do so. We are doing the best we can, and we thought when we had appropriated and authorized more for this stretch of the river, in proportion to its tonnage, than for any other navigable channel in the United States we had done our full duty.

Mr. RODENBERG. I simply desired to satisfy the gentle-man that he had not read this report with that degree of thoroughness with which he pretends to scan everything relating to river and harbors.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must decline to yield further.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That the authorized sum last named shall be used in prosecuting the improvement for not less than three years beginning July I, 1908, the work thus done each year to cost approximately $500,000: And provided further, That of the sums herein appropriated and authorized for this improvement a portion not to exceed $50,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended annually for the first two years for dredging for the benefit of through navigation, giving preference to localities in which the communities interested shall thereafter maintain such dredging without cost to the United States.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to offer here, which I will send to the desk and ask to ments to offer here, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 23, after the words "five hundred thousand dollars," insert the following: "And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to prosecute this work in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 341. Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, by methods looking toward an increase in depth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, after the word "navigation," strike out the comma and insert "in harbors and at landing places."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I do that for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee this question: I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] what control, if any, the Government exercises over landings?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. As landings, none,

Mr. GARRETT. It is within the power of a line of steamers to rent the landings along the various rivers, the Mississippi and all others, and to exercise practically a monopoly as regards

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I take it so, unless some State railway commission or other body should interfere. That is, so far as the improvement of river and harbor works is concerned, there would be no power to prevent. I will state to the gentleman that we frequently make appropriations conditional with some provision that the wharfage charge shall be subject to review by the Secretary of War. There is at least one such provision in this bill and there were several in the bill of 1905 and several in the bill of 1902. But that is a very drastic method, and we do not like to resort to it unless it seems imperatively

Mr. GARRETT. I recognize the fact, of course, that that is very drastic. I am not prepared to say that that ought to be done here, because I think the States can control that. I have this information, though not in such form as that any strong statements can be presented on the basis of it; but I understand that along some parts of the Mississippi River there is a par-ticular line of steamers that has all the landing places rented and that no other steamers land there; that no freight is carried there except by that particular line that has those landings rented, and it results in a monopoly as great as any of the monopolies that have been complained about with reference to railroad rates. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, it lies within the power of the Congress of the United States to deal with that sort of a situation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is rather a difficult problem to answer offhand, but I should question whether we could, except in an indirect way. I would state to the gentleman that there is a query whether, under the common law as enforced in all the States, there would not be a remedy for such a condition as that—a condition which is certainly a very objectionable one. It creates a monopoly, and one which is especially offensive because it has to do with navigation, which should be free and afford opportunities to all alike.

Mr. GARRETT. I will state to the gentleman that, in view of the complaints that have been made respecting that, I desired to have some notice called to it in the RECORD here now, and for that purpose I moved to strike out the last word. I think the States can and ought to control that. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment merely for the purpose of asking the chairman a question on a matter which escaped my attention when we were discussing the other proposition. On page 73, in lines 8 and 9, after the word "Commission," it reads: "One of whom shall be the president of such Commission." Do I understand this to be the president of the Mississippi River Commission or the president of the new board to be appointed?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. President of the Mississippi River

Commission.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is satisfactory. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized in opposition to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been one of those who have believed in a much greater development of our internal waterway system. I have believed that Mr. James J. Hill was right when he said that it was necessary, because with all our railway development it was an impossibility to construct railroads as fast as the demands of our increased industries would compel us to do if those products are to be moved. I believe that in the development of our waterways is the solution of the congested traffic conditions of to-day. I believe it is the controlling factor in fair rates of transportation, and have deeply regretted that the chairman of this great committee has not seen fit to follow the recommendations and suggestions made especially by those Members who hail from Pennsylvania; but it is not for that purpose or to go into the question of waterways that I have arisen. It is simply to do a simple act of justice to myself. Two years ago, while the river and harbor bill was pending, in the heat of the debate and disappointment because Pennsylvania did not receive from that committee that consideration which we thought we were clearly entitled to receive, I used some words reflecting upon the chairman of this committee, which certainly were unworthy of me and entirely unjustifiable when used against that chairman, for whom I entertain, in common with all gentlemen in this House, a high respect. But while he has disappointed us who represent Pennsylvania who have appeared before that committee, I have seen from all sections of the country a determined effort to secure for their immediate local project some appropriation in his bill, of greater or less magnitude, and, listening to their insistence for consideration, was thankful that I was not a member of that committee, and of all positions that I would least like to have thrust upon me would be the chairmanship of that committee. I know of no other gentleman who has made so deep a study, who has brought to the question of the development of our American waterways a greater or more studious consideration of their needs than the gentleman from Ohio, and while he has disappointed us grievously in Pennsylvania, looking at the nation as a whole, I sincerely hope that he may reconsider his determination to retire from the chairmanship of that committee, and through the many years to come the country will have the advantage of his research and profound knowledge of this subject. [Loud applause. l

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between lines 11 and 12, on page 75, the following:

"The Gasconade and Osage rivers and the Missouri River from its mouth to the mouth of Kaw River shall be known and designated as 'Missouri River, Reach No. 1.' The Missouri River, from the mouth of Kaw River to Sioux City, shall be known and designated as 'Missouri River, Reach No. 2.' and the Missouri River from Sioux City to Fort Benton shall be known and designated as 'Missouri River, Reach No. 3.'

"There is hereby created a commission, to consist of four members, to be called 'Missouri River Commission No. 1.'

"Two of said commissioners shall be from the Corps of Engineers of the Army and two shall be selected from civil life. The Secretary of War shall detail two engineers from the Corps of Engineers to serve as such commissioners, each of whom shall continue to be a member of said commissioners, each of whom shall continue to be a member of said commission until the Secretary of War shall detail another from the Corps of Engineers to be his successor. They shall receive no other compensation than that allowed them by law.

"The President of the United States shall nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two eminent civil engineers from civil life to be members of said commission. No person shall be eligible to such appointment who is at the time above the age of 50 years. Said commissioners appointed from civil life shall be appointed for a term of six years, but shall be subject to removal by the President at any time. They shall receive for their services a salary of $7,500 per annum each and shall devote their whole time to the active duties of the commission.

"No member of said commission shall accept any other service or employment while he is such commissioner, nor shall he be either directly or indirectly an employee, agent, or officer of any railway company or of any other corporation or firm engaged in the transportation of freight.

"It shall be the duty of said commission to superintend and direct such improvement of the rivers comprising said Missouri River, Reach No. 1, and to carry into execution such plans for the improvement of the navigation thereof, as may be devised and in progress, and to continue and complete such surveys thereof as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys, investigations, plans, and estimates as may be deemed necessary to maintain a channel and depth of water for the purposes of commerce and navigation.

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to said commission all such vessels, barges, machinery, instruments, and plants as may now be provided or in use on said rivers; and when thereto requested by said commission to detail from the Corps of Engineers such officers and men as may be deemed necessary, and place in the charge of said commission any such vessels, machinery, and instruments under his control as may be deemed necessary.

"Said commission may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, employ such additional force and assistance and provide by purchase or otherwise such additional vessels, boats, machinery, and instruments as may be deemed necessary, to be paid for out of appropriations made or to be made for said rivers embraced in said Missouri River, Reach No. 1.

"Said commission shall, under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of War, superintend, control, and expend for the purposes of this act all appropriations or unexpended balances heretofore made and which may hereafter be made for said rivers embraced in said Missouri River, Reach No. 1, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and shall prepare and submit through the Chief of the Engineer or other screen and submit and of all such plans and systems of work a

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we had one Missouri River commission some years ago, and I do not think the results of their supervision were altogether satisfactory, and we abolished it by the act of 1902. This seeks to creat three Missouri souri River commissions, as I understand it, each of four mem-

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Only one.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I understand there are three reaches

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There are three reaches, but this only provides a commission for the lower reach.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In any event, it is objectionable. I do not know what they would do with the appropriations which we have made and with the work that is to be done under the present projects adopted.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.
